Mr. Joseph Howard, M.P., presided, and instanced the late Postmaster-General as affording a striking proof of what may be achieved by men who are deprived of the blessing of sight. Rev. H. T. Pearson (Clapton) advocated the claims of the Institution, and rejoiced in the progress which it evinced. Rev. George Seymour, of Mile-end, warmly commended the Institution to public support, especially as it relieves the poor blind, without depriving them of the comforts and joys of their own home and family. Rev. F. A. Lillingston followed with a lively address, and pictured the struggles of those who, in addition to the loss of their sight, have to contend with poverty and suffering.

London Missionary Society.

The friends of this great organisation for carrying the Gospel to the heathen world, says The Nonconformist and Independent, have no reason to be discouraged by the report which it has been able this year to present, whilst all who are interested in missionary work, and do not confine their sympathies to denominational efforts, will find in the character of the speeches made at the annual meeting at Exeter Hall, on Thursday morning, much to stimulate their zeal and strengthen their conviction, not only of the reasonableness, but of the imperative necessity for carrying on "the crusade of the nineteenth century."

Mr. Edward Crossley, M.P., who presided, made some good points—as when he dwelt upon the Divine relations to fallen man being essentially of a missionary nature, and upon the co-operation of America with England in the work of evangelising the world.

The Foreign Secretary, Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, in a lucid and interesting speech, which was very wisely substituted for a formal "report," rapidly and pleasantly transported his hearers from land to land, and enabled them to get a clear, if bird's-eye, view of the work which is being so heroically done by the agents of the Society, among whom are to be found twenty-three ladies. The carrying of the Gospel by the women of England to the women of India and China is one of the most hopeful features of modern missions. While the claims of India and China upon the sympathy of English Christians were admirably presented, and the work done in those densely-populated Empires graphically described by Mr. Newport, of Madras, and Mr. Swanson, formerly of Amoy, the arguments for the maintenance of missions to the heathen were powerfully sustained by Mr. Rowland and Dr. Clifford. The plea for retrenchment in expenditure on missions, on the ground of depression in trade, was well met by Mr. Rowland when he pointed to the multiplication of theatres in London, and the lavish hospitality even of Nonconformists. There was no diminution of home luxuries, no decrease in social parties. Mr. Rowland traced the indifferentism to missions shown by some to the prevalence of materialism, not as a philosophic system, but as a subtle and widespread influence, the tendency of which was to look at things visible and tangible, rather than at things unseen and above. Dr. Clifford eloquently argued that Christianity, whilst capable of absorbing any ray of light that might come from Buddhism, and of infusing fresh life into whatever is good in the teachings of Confucius, is distinguished from the religions of the East by the one great fact that its power lies in the influence of men and women who have themselves been brought under the power of the Gospel, and so become centres of spiritual life. It is not a book religion. Western literature and science have, apart from missionary efforts, cut so deeply into the trunk of heathen faith, that the upas tree of degrading superstition is tottering everywhere to its fall. The Tree whose leaves are for the healing of the nations must be planted in its place, unless we are prepared to incur the reproach of destroying one hope of eternal life without imparting another. Dr. Clifford's masterly speech was as unanswerable in its argument as it was inspired by a lofty conception of the true genius of the religion of Christ. Missions to the heathen, when thus advocated, will not fail to command the sympathy of the Christian public, or their generous support.

Church of England Zenana Missions.

Princes' Hall was fairly filled on Friday week, mostly with ladies, and among them I noticed, besides the speakers, Revs. F. E. Wigram, R. Lang, W. Gray, H. P. Grubb, R. H. Maddox, and General Hutchinson. The Society, says The Record, is rapidly becoming a handmaid of the C. M. S. of very great importance. An income of £21,000, a staff of more than 400, a revolution in the social life of India inaugurated and not without effect already—these are facts impressive in their testimony to the power of the love of Christ to call forth the earnest effort and self-devotion of women.

The chair was taken by the Bishop of Exeter, who rapidly passed in review the history of the Jewish and the Christian dispensations, and spoke of the women whose life-work left its trace for all time. The report, read by Rev. G. S. Karney, stated, among the causes for thankfulness, the recovery of Miss Tucker (A. L. O. E.) from an illness which seemed at Christmastide very likely to prove fatal. Several new calls have during the year appealed to the Committee from India, China, Japan, and Ceylon; but the need for reinforcement seems even more imperative, so that eleven of the thirteen new missionaries sent out during the year have gone to strengthen existing stations. The Dean of Gloucester referred to the great value of its medical work, by means of which 4000 sufferers had been relieved at one station. Dr. Weitbrecht told of the Punjab and the work in Amritsar, Batala, and the villages—a very interesting story. Rev. E. A. Stuart, of Holloway, gave a fervid address that went home to the hearts of the hearers. Rev. C. F. Warren, of Japan, also spoke.

Baptist Missionary Society.

The annual meeting of this Society, last Thursday, was attended by a good, full audience in the large Exeter Hall, as befitted the occasion of the May meeting of one of our oldest missionary societies. How much missionary spirit must have been generated in that historic hall during the last five-and-twenty years! Year after year the gatherings come round: sometimes it is the Church of England; sometimes the followers of John Wesley; sometimes the Society with which the revered name of Dr. Livingstone is for ever associated; and sometimes, as in the present case, it is our Baptist friends who have been carrying forward the glorious work begun by William Carey.

Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton paid the Society a compliment by taking the chair on Thursday. The name of Buxton is associated in the English mind with every kind of philanthropic work and missionary enterprise, and Sir Thomas is by no means the least active of his family in all that pertains to the good of his fellow-creatures. He was well supported by ministers of various denominations, and the orchestra was occupied by a large choir, which contributed some good, hearty music.

Mr. A. H. Baynes, the General Secretary, gave a résumé of the report, which was rather more satisfactory than some of the missionary reports this year. We can only briefly sketch it here, but when the committee are able to tell us of a continuous and steady progress in all the mission stations, especially in China, Japan, and Central Africa; that a new era is opening up to the Christian Church; that their receipts have been more than in the previous year; and that never before have they had greater occasion to thank God and take courage; when they can tell us all that, we may indeed rejoice with them that God has so greatly blessed their Society. Still the treasurer's statement showed a deficiency in the funds, owing to the greatly increased outlay. During the past year twenty-one missionaries had been accepted for service, including two ladies, one of whom had devoted her fortune to the cause. Of the nineteen new brethren, six had been designated for India, nine for the Congo, and four for China.

The Chairman, in opening the proceedings, touched lightly upon what may be called the political difficulties of missionary societies, pointing particularly to Africa. He could not but feel —and this must have come home to other people very forcibly—that the great fact lying before the Society was the invasion of Africa by Europe. Only a few years ago they had what he called the period of exploration, and now we had the period of invasion and annexation of large tracts of country by many nations. These invasions and annexations had excited in the minds of the native chiefs a very natural suspicion of Europeans, and the agents of the missionary societies were finding that it was a very serious difficulty in the way of their work. He referred to the loss which the Church Missionary Society had sustained in the death of Bishop Hannington, and expressed the opinion that his lamentable murder was due entirely to this suspicion. Then in the Cameroons, recently annexed by the German Empire, it appeared that the work of the Baptist Missionary Society was being impeded by the patriotic German, who thinks that if an Englishman is there at all he can only be there for the purpose of encouraging the trade of his country. If this opposition continued he counselled the Society to quietly withdraw their agents and send them on to the work upon the Congo, only challenging the Germans to carry on the work themselves.

Only one resolution was submitted to the meeting, but that was so comprehensive that it served as a basis for all the speeches. It spoke of the thankfulness of the meeting to learn of the increasing success of the Gospel in heathen lands and the enlarged circulation of the Scriptures; expressed sympathy with the committee in the losses by death of colleagues; and while rejoicing at the liberality of the churches, regretted that the income was inadequate to meet the current liabilities. To this resolution Rev. G. H. Rouse, of Calcutta, addressed himself, and his testimony was that in India they were progressing, though slowly. It was difficult to gauge results—they could not be gauged, in fact—but among the visible results be mentioned the translation of the whole Bible into many of the Indian languages, and the translation of tracts and portions of the Scriptures into languages, the names of which reminded one of the musical instruments in the third chapter of the Book of Daniel; the destruction of Government patronage of idolatry, of infanticide, of Juggernaut and other evils which existed in the early days of the labours of William Carey, who, in the light of subsequent events, was "a grand old man" indeed. But it must never be forgotten that a great deal of preparatory work had been done. As for the encouraging signs, the rev. gentleman summed these up as follows:—The growing friendliness of the people, the growing knowledge of the people, the lessening prejudices of the people, the decreasing faith in Hindooism, the growing reverence for the person of Christ, especially in Bengal, the readiness to purchase and read the Scriptures, the growing independence of the Church of Christ, the spread of the work among the women, and the formation of philanthropic associations, apart from Christianity, for the social elevation of the people. One other remark of Mr. Rouse's we must quote. He entered into an arithmetical calculation, and said that if the same rate of progress only was made in the future, the whole of India would be Christianised —not made Christian, but Christianised in the sense that England is—in 108 years.

Rev. Colmer B. Symes followed with a good, practical, encouraging address. He said many good things, but one of the best was said while dwelling upon the first of three points. He was congratulating the Society upon the fact that they were by their work touching the life of barbarism in Africa and elsewhere; touching a Christless civilisation; and touching the imperfect Christianity of Europe. In connection with the first point he said he knew that the men of the world would laugh when they said that the missionary enterprise was the great civilising power. But it was so, nevertheless. Those men who to-day were walking the London drawing-rooms, petted and pampered by society, and went out into the darkness to perpetrate the worst crimes upon the youth and innocence of England—they were not civilised! The audience broke out into the most emphatic applause, showing that the enthusiasm for the New Crusade is still a living reality. "No!" said the speaker. "It is true that traders and merchants do not regard us as a civilising influence, but it is because we have taught the heathen too much, and they cannot be so easily trampled under foot and taken in as once was the case."

Of Rev. Dr. Landels' speech we have not space to say much, but he is an old favourite in Exeter Hall. His address was retrospective, and there was something pathetic in his references to the first speech he made at a Baptist Missionary meeting in the hall thirty-five years ago, his remarks about the fathers in the Baptist Israel who were there then, but had gone home to their reward now, and his belief that this was the last time he would attend their meetings. Having pointed out the rapid progress which had been made during these thirty-five years, he argued that if they would save what was spent in tobacco and alcohol, there would be plenty of funds for the mission work.

On Wednesday morning, May 12, the annual Zenana Missionary Breakfast was held in the large hall of the Cannon-street Hotel. Mr. A. H. Baynes read the report. The Society's stations are Calcutta (including Baraset), Delhi, Agra, Benares, Allahabad, Bankipore, Dinapore, Serampore, Dacca, Soorie, Monghyr, Barisaul, Howrah, Tikari, Khari, Comilla, Simla, and Madras. The staff of workers comprises 42 lady Zenana visitors, 25 assistants, and 104 native Bible women and teachers. There are 41 girls' schools, with about 1330 scholars. 986 Zenanas are regularly visited, and the inmates who receive daily instruction number 1560. Last year 9000 patients sought medical relief in the Society's Agra and Delhi dispensaries. The sphere of work has extended every year, and there is a large amount, besides that detailed above, which is incapable of statistical enumeration.

Mrs. Ellis, of Calcutta, Rev. T. R. Edwards, of Serampore, and Rev. J. G. Greenhough, M.A., pleaded the cause of the Mission in very earnest and stimulating addresses.

Ragged School Union.

We have to congratulate Mr. Kirk, Secretary, and the many friends of the Ragged School Union, upon their most successful annual meeting. Politics are unknown to genuine philanthropy, and so, while the invitations to attend were sent out in the name of the Earl of Aberdeen, who was it but the Earl of Iddesleigh, accompanied by his gracious countess, who did the honours in his stead? Need we say he proved himself to be a most accomplished chairman. The unnumbered necessities of the children have caused their teachers to meet them as largely as possible, and they have done so much that we almost fear that a mere list of the branches of work would prove tiresome.

Where the London School Board has not had the courage to go, the Ragged School is still doing its work among nearly 5000 boys and girls. Nearly twice as many attend its night schools, while industrial classes endeavour to teach 3000 owners of nimble fingers how to earn a living. In connection with this we have a wonderful item of news—that nine shoe-black brigades, composed of 364 boys, earned during last year £11,235. When a boy or girl sets out in life, and takes a situation, still their friends follow them, and those who keep their place for a year are rewarded by a handsome prize. Many hundreds of these were earned last year. The area over which the Union extends is all London, and the number of voluntary teachers who give up their Sundays and week evenings to the work is over 3000. Who can estimate the moral worth of such an army of Christian workers in such a sphere?

Rev. W. Webb-Peploe, in his happily expressed opening sentences showed how extended was the interest taken in Ragged Schools, for while the president from Aberdeen could not take his place—Devon supplied a worthy substitute. He thought the Union showed that the great middle class of England rose to the privilege God had conferred upon them to look after the poor and the neglected. The work was as needful now as ever. The Union took the place of the parent, and taught the child to pray, to love God, and to live a God-fearing and industrious life. He thanked God for the army of workers, and bade them have faith in their work.

There followed him Mr. H. Spicer, M.P., who rested his claim to speak by a service of twenty years' work in Ragged Schools in the East of London, and he hinted as much as that work in a Ragged School was not a bad preparation for a hotly-contested election for Parliamentary honours.

The modest and manly words spoken by Mr. Mark Knowles proved to be the speech of the evening. He told the story of his life—how from very lowly beginnings he had been able to rise to an honourable position. Such a bright example must have greatly cheered the teachers present.

After Rev. H. Macintosh came the Hon. Chairman. His testimony to the value of the work of the Ragged School during these forty-two years, was expressed in most generous terms. But the Earl of Iddesleigh did not consider his duty as chairman fulfilled by addressing the audience There were upon the platform seven hundred children, who, under the magic wand of Mr. J. Proudman, had sung some grand melodies during the evening, so, pushing the chair to one side, he turned to these and addressed to them warm-hearted and Christian counsel, which was most attentively listened to. The very pleasant meeting was brought to a close by Canon Cadman pronouncing the Benediction.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For great blessing given on the special mission in Bristol by Mr. J. M. Scroggie.

PRAYER.—For much blessing on a Gospel mission in Dublin during this month, conducted by Mr. J. M. Scroggie.——For blessing on a Gospel mission in Greenock, to be conducted by Mr. George Clarke.——For blessing on a mission at Margate conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne.——For special services by Mr. Opie Rodway at Gospel Mission-room, King-street, Gloucester, on May 22, 23, and 24.——For a blessing on Wairoa, H.B., New Zealand.

Mission and other Appeals.

Marylebone Medical Mission.—Dr. Chambers, 43, Carlisle-street, Edgware-road, N.W., writes:—We are very much in need of one or two earnest Christian ladies, who would be prepared to give their services for visiting among the sick poor in connection with the Marylebone Medical Mission.

Mrs. Meredith's Institutions.—Mrs. Meredith says, in a special appeal:—The extent, and consequent cost, of all our work have rapidly increased. Funds have not kept pace with them. We have, therefore, a large deficit in our accounts, and want immediately £2000 to meet it. Friends are earnestly asked to help now to raise a sum of money sufficient to close all accounts Payments to be addressed to Mrs. Susanna Meredith, 143, Clapham-road, S.W.

Battersby Memorial Fund.—It has been decided, with the approval of the family of the late Canon Battersby, to appropriate the amount contributed for his memorial to the purchase of the land upon which the tent for the Keswick Convention has in recent years been pitched. This, with legal expenses, has been £417 9s. 7d. The land is now the property of the Convention, and is conveyed to six trustees on its behalf. The balance still required amounts to £115 6s 2d. Any further contributions can be sent to Mr. Robert Wilson, Broughton Grange, Carlisle; or to Mr. Henry F. Bowker, 42, St. John's Wood-park, London.

CONTINENTAL AND FOREIGN NOTES.

PARIS.—Many of the religious Societies of France are holding their anniversary meetings this month in Paris.

AT THE SOCIALIST CONGRESS held in Ghent, in April, among other things the workmen demanded rest on one day in seven.

HERR JOHANN STRAUSS, the famous Viennese composer, has become a convert to Protestantism, having hitherto been a Roman Catholic.

THE METHODIST CHURCH IN FRANCE has suffered a great loss in the death of Pastor J. P. Cook, President of their Conference, which took place on May 2, at the age of fifty-eight.

DR. MUNHALL, with his plain, outspoken. and straightforward utterances, has been doing for San Francisco what Sam Jones has done for Chicago—thoroughly stirring up the popular conscience.

THE QUARTERLY REPORT of the Berlin Society for the spread of Christian literature shows that the free distribution of its papers in the streets, hospitals, factories, prisons, &c., of the City, is making rapid progress, and doing good work.

AFRICA.—Our readers may remember the departure in February of Dr. Theo. E. S. Scholes and his colleague Rev. J. E. Ricketts to the Congo in connection with the African Mission for sending coloured men as missionaries to Africa They arrived at Banana on March 25, and proceeded up the Congo River for the interior the next day.

THE PARIS RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY proposes to publish a weekly sermon for the benefit of the large number of Protestants in France who are unable, either from their occupations or the lack of a pastor at their church, to take part in any public worship. This has for some years been very successfully done in Berlin and other places —Christianisme.

CHICAGO.—Mr. S. M. Sayford and Professor D. B. Towner have commenced special meetings in Chicago at the Second Presbyterian Church. Mr. Sayford is an earnest evangelical preacher, and is admirably sustained by Professor Towner. Mr. Moody continues them at the Casino Rink —Chicago Standard.

FRANCE.—We often hear cheering news. But there is the sombre side as well. A friend in the Drôme writes:—We long that English Christians might see the bareness and chill of French Protestantism here. No one who has not seen it can understand the absence of all spiritual privileges. Protestant villages seem likely to sink into heathenism in the next generation unless something be done, and done speedily.

POPISH ACTIVITY.—Never was the Roman Catholic Church more active in the work of propagation, not only in Italy, but all over the world. The great International College of St. Antonio, in the Via Merulana, is nearly completed. It covers about 3000 square metres of ground, and the length of the church, which will be a very beautiful building, is 56 metres (168 feet). Youths from all parts of the world will be educated here. The Jesuit Missionary Sebastiani has lately returned to Rome from South America, where he has been working for sixteen years among the Indians of the Equator, of whom he says he has converted 10,000 to the Christian faith. He is going to publish a grammar and dictionary of the language of these tribes, descendants of the ancient "Incas."—Record.

SHAFTESBURY HOUSE, MARGATE.—Many of our readers may be glad to know that this commodious and beautiful sea-side Home in connection with the Y.M.C.A., is during some months of the year not restricted to young men. During May and June any of our readers, ladies included, will be welcome. At small cost they may enjoy the advantages of the Home, and at the same time may have the satisfaction of knowing that they are helping to make it self-supporting. We can personally testify to the comfort of the Home, and to the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Mell, the superintendents, with whom arrangements should be made beforehand.

YOUNG WOMEN IN THE CITY.—Henceforth, No. 14, Finsbury-square, will be known as the new premises of the Finsbury Institute for City Girls. The Lord Mayor opened the building on Friday afternoon last, when an influential gathering of friends assembled. A statement was read by Mr. W. Paton, showing that 40,000 young girls are to be found within a radius of one mile from the Bank of England who are daily employed in work-rooms, factories, and shops; it is for these the Institute has been formed. The annual expenses of the Home, said Mr. Paton, will not be less than £300. Mr. Robert Cust, Mr. George Williams, Rev. G. Reaney, Mr. Hind Smith, Mr. Samuel Thompson, Rev. Prebendary Whittington, and the Lord Mayor, all spoke commending the work of the institution.

YOUNG MEN'S MAY BREAKFAST.—This annual early gathering took place on Wednesday morning, last week, at Aldersgate street. After breakfast, Captain Cundy, chairman, addressed the meeting, remarking that he had heard a distinguished member of the Association say, "these meetings made one feel sadly self-righteous all the morning, and dreadfully sleepy all the afternoon." He proceeded to point out with great force the analogies between the carnal and spiritual appetite. Admirable addresses followed from Rev. H. W. Webb Peploe, whose subject was Holiness; Rev. Dr. Hole, who spoke with good effect on the Story of Christ and the Young Man (Mark x 21); Mr. E. J. Kennedy, Mr. W. Hurman, of Bridgewater, Mr. R. Simpson, of Glasgow, Mr. M. H. Hodder, and Mr. Hind Smith. The meeting, which was felt by all to be a real means of grace, broke up about nine o'clock.

EUROPEANS IN INDIA.

Dear Sir,—In reference to the letter in The Christian, May 6, from an aged missionary in India, I could say that his words are too true. Many of the Europeans who go to India, especially civilians, &c., employed by the English Government, are Christians only in name. Their conduct, so contrary to the religion of Christ, is carefully noticed by the Hindoos around. A very sad thing indeed that these so-called Christians should be so many stumbling-blocks to the progress of Christianity, and thus almost undo the labours of the missionary. I would point out the importance of the recent movement for sending earnest Christian mechanics of various trades to India and other places.

Those who watch for the welfare of India know too well that it is passing through a crisis at present. While superstition and idolatry prevail in many places, some of the enlightened class go to the other extreme, in losing faith of the supernatural altogether. The attitude of some of the missionaries is "to scientifically expound the Gospel in opposition to Hindooism." Instead of preaching the simple Gospel and leave the rest in faith to the convincing power of the Holy Ghost, they try to guard its truths with science and reason. The simple Gospel, lovingly offered, combined with practical example, will do more good to India than all the science and education. That your readers may remember India in their prayers and efforts is the earnest cry of A Hindoo.

A PLEA FOR BIBLE STUDY.

Sir,—In almost every issue of your paper the question is raised in some form or other, What is the secret of modern indifference to Christianity? May I point out what I consider to be an important factor in the problem? It is, that the preachers do not meet the hearers on common ground. While the latter think they are hearing Bible truth, they are, in many cases, simply listening to moral philosophy, or, in other cases, to disquisitions couched in the language of theology. Let preacher and hearer concentrate their attention upon the Book. Let the preacher urge the hearer to follow him while he brings out of the treasury of the Divine word things new and old. And then each will sympathise with the other, because there will be a common interest, and the preacher, if he does what he ought to do, will be educating the people in the Scriptures, and helping them to assimilate its teachings.

At present the Bible does not hold a first place with many preachers; it is simply used as a sort of repository of texts on which sermons may be hung. Let preachers expound the Bible, and they will not want topics on which to speak. Let them read the meaning of the originals as far as it can be done into the words of the common versions, and help people to realise the scenes and sayings of the evangelists and the apostles, and they will find their services becoming more and more serious because increasingly primitive and pure in character. I am confident that, under the influence of this teaching, faith, hope, and love, would be more thoroughly illustrated before our eyes. Verily, the want of the times is more Bible study—a closer regard for what the Book says, and not so much regard for some things, which, though attributed to the Book, are not found therein.

CHRIST'S HIGH PRIESTHOOD.

Dear Sir,—The note on Joshua ii. 6 in your "Daily Readings" in The Christian of May 6, does not seem to me satisfactory, and I venture to suggest the following as the true answer to the question why the manslayer was restricted to the city of refuge until the death of the high priest.

The nation of Israel, guilty of the death of Jesus ("His blood be upon us and on our children"), had nevertheless a means of escape provided in the Gospel (Acts ii), and the call was, "Save yourselves from this untoward generation." Jesus prayed, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do," and God graciously accounted their action as done unwittingly (Acts iii. 17). The Hebrew Christians who had believed the Gospel were addressed as having "fled for refuge to lay hold upon the hope set before us." This was their city of refuge; Christ had been exalted as a Prince and a Saviour, and those who received Him found blessings of a new and different order, as well as security from the avenger of blood. But henceforth they were really exiles from their own proper portion, home, and city as Jews. This state of things is, however, inseparably bound up with Christ's present place at God's right hand, during which He is exercising his priestly functions after the Aaronic pattern. To leave the city of refuge during the high priest's lifetime was death. To give up Christianity is fatal, as is clear from Heb. vi. and x. But when the present dispensation of grace is closed, Christ will leave his present place at God's right hand, and come forth to exercise the Melchisedec character of priesthood. This, I take it, answers to the death of the high priest. Of course Jesus does not die, neither does his priesthood cease, but its character changes. He is Priest for ever after the order of Melchisedec, but after the present day of grace is over, the Aaronic functions He is now exercising (as typified by the high priest in Israel) will give place to the Melchisedec functions when He comes forth to reign as Priest on his throne. Then a Jew will not have to flee to, and continue in, a city of refuge, but will be restored to his own proper blessings according to the promises made to the fathers.

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS.

Dear Sir,—During the past fortnight I have visited most of this Society's stations in Connemara, and I think your readers might be interested to know the impressions of one hitherto personally unacquainted with Mission work in the west of Ireland. I visited Galway, Spiddal, Inverin, Roundstone, Moyrus, Duhulla, Errismore, Ballynahinch, Ballycouree, Ballynakill. Sellerna, Cleggan, and Aasleagh. In most of these places I found schools, in which I was permitted to question the children. I could not but commend the ready and intelligent answers which were, in most cases, given. I was present at Sunday Divine worship in three different churches, and, considering the scattered population, the attendance was good; in one church there were people who had walked four, five, and even seven miles. The preaching in every case was decidedly evangelical.

The clergyman of one of these very extensive parishes took me with him to a weekly class that he holds, at a distance of some seven miles from his house. On reaching the outlying schoolhouse, we found a goodly number of people assembled, twenty of whom were Roman Catholics, and of these several were intelligent, thinking men, independent enough to reserve their right of private judgment. These all listened earnestly to the explanation of the Gospel of grace, and it was approaching midnight before we left these seekers after truth, and began to retrace our long road home. Under ordinary circumstances the journey might have been considered dangerous in these times, but the missionary clergyman has the utmost confidence in the people he is living to benefit, and the general kindness with which he is almost invariably met, shows his confidence is not misplaced.

Joining the lay reader in several places I went in and out amongst the homes of the poor, where, by their own turf fires, they willingly heard the Scriptures faithfully interpreted. Where the missions had ceased to operate I heard many expressions of regret.

As I consider and reconsider what I have learned by careful inquiry and personal observation during my tour, I am convinced that the missions have vastly influenced the thousands of poor people who live in the mountain and sea-coast villages of Connemara, and although few may ever find in them the courage to openly change their denomination, knowing the relentless persecution this invariably entails, yet, under a bark of Romanism they are willing to draw their sap of truth from mission agents who meet them in their cabins, on the roadside, in cattle sheds, or wherever they can.

A Rambler.

MISSIONS TO SEAMEN.—There appears to have been great and evident improvement in the spiritual, the moral, and the physical condition of men-of-war's men, merchant seamen, fishermen, and bargemen, during the thirty years that have intervened since the foundation of the Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C. According to the report adopted at the annual meeting, at Willis's Rooms London, over which the Bishop of Durham presided on Thursday, British sailors and fishermen are far more sober, thrifty, and thoughtful than is commonly supposed. Sixty-six chaplains and readers are working afloat at fifty-one seaports, furnished with two steam and eight sailing vessels, and many boats, whilst a deep-sea mission is carried on amongst crews on the high seas by 435 captains and officers, and 202 foremast men, duly enrolled and supervised by the chaplains. The Bishop of Durham presided at the meeting, and amongst those present were a large number of clergymen, admirals, and other naval officers, merchant captains, shipowners, and others.

PUBLIC GAMBLING AT MONTE CARLO.

It is earnestly to be hoped that the painful narrative of attempted suicide which Lady Sebright has so graphically described in our columns, and her earnest warnings regarding the neighbourhood of Monaco, will enlist the increased sympathy and support of our readers on behalf of the International Association for the Suppression of the Gaming Tables at Monte Carlo. This association, which was founded in 1880 by its president, Mr. Henry Thompson, of Mincing-lane, has succeeded in drawing the attention of the French, German, British, Italian, Russian, Austrian, and Belgian Governments to the evils arising out of public gambling at Monaco. By its immediate agency the leading organs of public opinion throughout Europe have fully discussed the question from every point of view, and denounced the "hell" as one of the worst blots upon the boasted civilisation of the age. Numerously signed petitions have been presented to the French and Italian Governments; eminent statesmen of various nationalities have exchanged views upon the subject; official, semi-official, and friendly representations have been made to the Prince of Monaco, and at the present moment the French Government is actively engaged in bringing the Monte Carlo question within the range of practical politics.

Two more suicides have recently been reported. In the Salle de jeu of the casino, at a time when the three roulette tables were crowded, a man fired three shots into his side with a revolver, after gambling away his fortune. The Petit Provençal of Marseilles states that M. Fabre, conseiller d'arrondissement of Bédarieux, shot himself after gambling at Monte Carlo. His body was found on the railway. Almost every week accounts are received of suicides or attempted suicides—sometimes four of the former within as many days. Every day men and women are ruined and undone—not a few of whom probably commit suicide some distance away, and multitudes are annually reduced from affluence to beggary. It is impossible to sum up the awful measure of sin and misery of which Monaco is the daily scene. Out of the proceeds of iniquity, £800,000 are spent by the casino in paying a tax to the Prince and towards local expenses, while £750,000—after paying every item of outlay—are divided among the Blanc family, who are the principal shareholders.

The Casino practises every kind of device to lure victims to the tables. Lying reports of fabulous sums gained are industriously spread by paid agents, and male and female decoys swarm the hotels and promenades of towns throughout the Riviera.

Incredible as it may appear, it is no less true that many respectable English people go to Monte Carlo. "We don't go to play," they say, "but just to look at the place, and hear the music;" and there they rub shoulders with hosts of the worst characters of both sexes, who thither congregate to prey upon their fellow-creatures. The leaven of respectability thus imparted is an important factor in encouraging others to visit the spot. Young people—and some who are not young—often remark: "Oh, the place cannot be so bad, for I saw there the Rev. ——, and Mr. and Mrs. So-and-so and family."

The columns of The Christian have often contained warnings of the evils and dangers of Monte Carlo, and have furnished information of the efforts of the International Association. Funds are still needed to carry on the work to a successful issue, and will be thankfully received, by Mr. Henry Thompson, 38, Mincing-lane, E.C., or by Mr. R. Stewart Clough, Secretary, 8, Adam-street, Adelphi, W.C., who will gladly furnish additional information on application.

MOTHERWELL, N.B.—Mr. W. Dunn, evangelist has finished a blessed mission here. Numbers have professed faith in Christ Jesus, while believers have received much light and blessing through the faithful ministry of the Word. Mr. Dunn is now preaching in Coatbridge with great success. Will our readers pray that he may continue to be made a rich blessing to many in Scotland?

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

The King's messengers make haste; cold and stormy oceans cool not true love for this blessed work among the children. Mr. and Mrs. Merry, knowing our need of help, have just arrived from Canada. Mrs. Merry returns with a party of girls, whilst Mr. Merry remains to assist me with a third party, sailing in July, all being well.

This will allow of a few weeks' rest, after the strain of the long winter, before the voyage. Nothing is lacking in packing the many boxes; all, all is wondrous love, and it is a relief once more to thus express our united and grateful thanks to our heavenly Father, for inclining the heart of many a reader of The Christian to aid us by making garments, sending money, and most of all by prayer during the past winter.

As the five thousand several articles have been packed into nearly a hundred boxes and bags, our song has been one of deepest praise, but, oh! when each dear saint will receive his smile, and hear the words, "Well done, good and faithful servant," those who have toiled over the garments and those who have taught the children will rejoice together, uniting in giving Him all the praise.

Our kind friends will be glad to hear of the safe arrival of the party of boys—storms and fogs all passed, and safely landed on the ninth day. Our nephew, William H. Merry, who has escorted twelve parties across the Atlantic, reports that this voyage was quite a pleasure, owing to the obedience and love amongst the boys themselves. They had comfortable quarters, and Captain Smith and some of the cabin passengers visited them, and made the time pass profitably by lectures and good advice, the boys, in return, singing their hymns and giving recitations.

We believe that the noble Canadians will develop many of these dear lads until they become valiant missionaries for the Lord in every quarter of the globe. Already some have gone forth; we ask prayer that they may be faithful followers of the Lamb.—Yours in service for our blessed Master,

Annie Macpherson.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

On May 9, 300 Temperance sermons were preached in churches in the diocese of London.

In Texas, earnest and not unsuccessful efforts are being made to induce negroes to become abstainers.

In Iceland the good results of the spread of Temperance are so obvious as to be generally acknowledged.

Systematic Visitation of members is commended as a means of retaining them in Temperance societies.

In Glasgow recently was held an open-air demonstration against any increase in the number of public-houses.

At the Gough Memorial Conference at Sandgate a speaker said the Crofters of Scotland were as a rule God-fearing abstainers.

The House of Lords, May 11, by a very small majority, passed the second reading of the County Durham Sunday Closing Bill.

It is proposed to hold a National Temperance Demonstration in the International Exhibition grounds, Edinburgh, in the course of the summer.

In The Leeds Mercury complaint is made of the shameful way in which drunken men are sometimes forced upon sober railway passengers in spite of protests.

Recent great Temperance meetings in Scotland gave no uncertain sound. Scotch M.P.'s at all events should have no doubt as to what their constituents think about the Local Veto.

Scottish Temperance has had a great loss through the recent death of Mr. Duncan M'Laren. Rev. J. Graves, a prominent temperance worker in Ireland, has also passed away.

The annual meeting of the National Union of Elementary Teachers was held a few days since at Bradford, when 220 were entertained to breakfast by the National Temperance League.

At Edinburgh, lately, Mr. M'Lagan and Mr. Theodore Fry reminded the public that on the Temperance question many M.P.'s will go no farther than their constituents compel them.

During the late distress, a Manchester clergyman heard one of a group of men who had just received parish relief say, "Well, we be got summat out of 'em at last!" "Yes," said another, "let's go and have a good drink out of it first thing." Generally speaking it was the drunken class of working-men who paraded the streets.

AN OUTRAGE in WESTERN AUSTRALIA.

Five months ago, says The Intercolonial Christian Messenger for March 26, Rev. J. B. Gribble, known as the friend and benefactor of the Aboriginal, left New South Wales, where he had successfully managed a mission station at Warangesda, to undertake similar work in Western Australia. Mr. Gribble went at the request of the Bishop of Perth, and was located in the Gascoyne district, where there are large numbers of blacks assigned and free. The advent of the missioner, it would seem, was anything but good news to the settlers, who from the first seem to have regarded him as an enemy. With a perseverance which does him credit, Mr. Gribble, amidst these discouragements, stuck to his commission. A station was formed, and several blacks signified their willingness to become connected with it. The presence of a clergyman and his reproof of certain gross outrages was, however, more than the settlers could bear. They had been a law unto themselves with the blacks, and now they resolved to take the law into their own hands to secure the removal of Mr. Gribble. A petition to the Bishop having failed, they resolved to "Boycott" the missioner. The natives who were in the habit of frequenting the mission disappeared. They were threatened or bribed as the case may be. It seemed to matter little which, so long as they were prevented from attending.

Mr. Gribble went to Perth to deliver a lecture on the native question. On his return per ss. Natal, a scene was enacted on board the steamer which for cowardice and barbarity has had few parallels in the history of travel in Australian waters. Towards midnight Mr. Gribble was seized, thrown down and hustled about the deck by some of the settlers who were on board, and who declared they would be glad to get him out of the way by throwing him overboard. When the ship anchored a little later in Champion Bay, the same thing was repeated by a larger crowd. Mr. Gribble's calls for help were either unheard or unheeded. After the greatest difficulty, he got to the saloon, where the purser suggested he should go to his cabin where he would be unmolested. This he did, but had not only to barricade his door but to sit the greater part of the night with his back to it and his feet firmly planted on the opposite side. The mob outside, foiled in their attempt to force the door, shouted and yelled and imprecated all horrid things on the head of this devoted servant of God. Had it not been for the interference of the stewardess, whose ladies were being excited by the noise, it seems likely that this state of affairs would have lasted the night through. Why the captain or even a subordinate officer did not interfere to protect a man so assailed seems unaccountable.

On arriving at Carnarvon, Mr. Gribble communicated with a solicitor, who declined to take up his case; he has, however, sent a statement of the whole proceedings to his Bishop at Perth, who we hope will do what he can to wipe out the disgrace of this outrage by having the perpetrators of such dastardly conduct dealt with as the nature of the case demands. Meantime, we assure Mr. Gribble of the sympathy felt for him in the other colonies where he is known, and the disappointment which, with him, we share that a work which he was so well fitted to perform has thus been thwarted at its inception by a course of conduct which we would have scarce believed possible in any British colony.

CLAPTON PARK TABERNACLE.—A series of services has been held in connection with the re-opening of Clapton-park Tabernacle, Blurton-road. The Tabernacle, which has recently passed into the hands of the Primitive Methodists, has undergone a great transformation. The mission commenced its operations nearly two years back at the Clapton-park Theatre, but being an entirely new one, had neither congregation nor society to begin with. However, a Church was formed, consisting of the missionary, his wife, and three others, and has steadily grown up to the present, and now numbers 100 members. A Sunday-school was commenced with two teachers and eleven scholars; it now numbers seventeen teachers and 132 scholars. The Band of Hope, Gospel Temperance Society, Tract Society, and Benevolent Society, were in turn commenced, and have been very successful, and are now in vigorous operation. Open-air services have been held in nearly every street in the neighbourhood. Some 50,000 tracts and religious periodicals have been distributed. The sick and the dying have been visited at their homes, and the destitute have been helped. Whilst the mission has greatly relieved the distress which prevailed to a very great extent in Clapton-park during the winter, it has greatly crippled the efforts being made to raise the funds for the new building; this has been re-opened with a considerable debt upon it, which the trustees hope to speedily clear off.

GLAD TIDINGS from the PUNJAUB.

The following letter has recently been received from Miss Andrews, Ludhiana, one of the Zenana missionaries of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East:—

"We have felt much encouraged lately by the spirit that is abroad amongst the people, especially in the villages. It is as if one heard the 'sound of abundance of rain.' Three men, a religious teacher and two of his followers, were baptized the other day in this district, under peculiarly interesting circumstances. Ahmad Shah, an evangelist of the American Mission here, was itinerating, and went to a village where a great wedding was being celebrated, in order to preach to the crowds assembled. He found about a thousand persons collected, and preached to them for some time. The three men above referred to were present, and asked many questions, he supposed for opposition's sake, but, however, told them all they asked. The next day he preached again, and when he had finished the leader of the three stood up, took out a New Testament, and preached most earnestly for two hours. The three turned to Ahmad Shah, and said, before the whole crowd, 'Now, will you baptize us?' He told Ahmad Shah that the Testament he possessed had been given him some years before at Gaya, that he had studied it carefully, and taught it regularly to his 150 followers, of whom the two then present wished to be baptized with him.

"Ahmad Shah suggested that he should wait and receive further instruction; but, he replied, 'You have no right to detain me; when the eunuch was on the road, he said to Philip, what hinders that I should be baptized, and Philip baptized him at once.' Whereupon Ahmad Shah examined the three men then and there, and being fully satisfied as to their sincerity and thorough knowledge of the New Testament, baptized them in the presence of the whole assembly of two thousand heathen.' When the simple ceremony was over, they inquired, 'Is that all?' supposing that something should be given them to eat. 'Yes,' he replied, 'that is all,' and then proceeded to explain to all present the nature of faith and baptism.

"The next day the three men said they must be going, and refused to be detained. One of them had a very ragged old blanket, with a hole for his head, his only covering. Ahmah Shah offered to give him his own, but he refused to take it, saying, 'Do not give me anything better, or I shall begin to covet and to beg; this is all I need;' and so they departed to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ without pay, over a large district. Who can tell what the harvest will be! and what golden sheaves shall yet be his, wherever he may be, who gave that Testament seven years ago! Ahmad Shah was the first Cashmerie baptized in the Mission. His present wife, Sophy, was one of the girls in my school. Her mother is our Bible-woman."

THE McALL MISSION IN LYONS.—Twenty meetings a week are now held with an aggregate attendance of over one thousand persons. Nearly a thousand meetings of all kinds were held last year, through which much good was done. Major A. S. D. Colquhoun, 96, Avenue de Saxe, has written a brief account of his work in Lyons. Special meetings, he says, have been recently held at which many conversions took place, some testified to have anxiously waited for years without discovering how to take hold of the Lord Jesus by faith. Several whole families have professed conversion and are now testifying for Christ.

SYDNEY Y.M.C.A.—The annual tea and public meeting of the Sydney (New South Wales) Y.M.C.A. was held in the large hall of the Institution on March 23. Mr. W. J. Foster, President of the Association, said that that was the first occasion on which they had been permitted to meet in their own rooms for the annual meeting, and it was certainly an occasion on which their hearts must be lifted up with thankfulness to God. Rev. Dr. Kelynack said that he was pretty familiar in his wanderings with all the great city centres of these colonies, New Zealand included, and that in size, in adaptability, in organisation, and in labour that association stood undoubtedly in the first place. Rev. W. Mathison strongly advised all young men to read and study the Book of books. He had been studying it for the past fifteen years, and felt more ignorant about it to-day than he did fifteen years ago. Rev. Charles Bright said that that association should have the sympathy and support of all Christian men and women.

The Book World.

The May number of The Monthly Interpreter (1s. T. T. Clark & Co.) is enriched by several papers of great exegetical value. This periodical is rapidly becoming indispensable to ministers and theological students.

Rachel, the Little Captive Maid. By Julie Sutter. 1s. S. W. Partridge & Co. This is a very attractive little volume, tastefully got up, and beutifully illustrated. The story has a sad beginning, but a happy conclusion, and shows what a blessing a little child may be in a household.

Sermons. By Rev. J. J. S. Bird, B A. 5s. F. E. Longley. These sermons are not striking in thought or expression, but they re-state old truths forcibly and earnestly. We like Mr. Bird's allegiance to the faith once delivered to the saints, and the vigorous manner in which he repels the attacks of the so-called higher criticism.

Salvation from Self. By Rev. J. B. Figgis, M.A. 2s. S. W. Partridge & Co. The power of self to weaken the Christian life, and how its power may be broken, are here set forth in striking language. The little volume should be scattered broadcast. Its author's name is a guarantee of its worth. It is full of suggestion and freshness.

Avena: Musings, in Rhyme. By Flavel S. Cook, M.A., D.D. 3s. Nisbet & Co. From "Fairy Tales" to "Dimples" and "Enigmas," Dr. Cook leads us through the mazes of fancy, and into the more robust region of fact, with true poet ease, if not with true poetry. His verses have a happy, healthy ring, and those that are of a more distinctly religious character are decidedly the best.

The Mystic Voices of Heaven; or, The Supernatural revealed in the Natural Science of the Heavens. By an Oxford Graduate. Elliot Stock. The author seeks to illustrate the supernatural truths mirrored in nature. He writes out of the fulness of a mind stored with learning gathered in many departments of knowledge, and with an apt facility for pointing out the mystical correspondences between the seen and the unseen. He quotes authorities of undoubted prominence in support of the views he advocates.

Lights and Shadows of Human Life. By Rev. John Philip, M.A. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. The author has written a beautiful epic, a song of degrees, tuned to the most perfect harmony of trust. Every page sparkles with enjoyment in a healthy, noble life. The weary, the sorrowful, the sin-sick, the dissatisfied, will each find something here to soothe and elevate. The aim of the writer in his treatment of the "magnificent gift," is a true and lofty one, and this especially may be said of his chapter on "The Value of Life."

The Young Communicant: a simple Explanation of the Lord's Supper, and of the Communion Service, with aids to a Right Reception. By Rev. J. E. Sampson, Vicar of Barrow-on-Humber. W. Hunt & Co. Mr. Sampson gives simple, pithy, spiritual explanations of the chief parts of the Church of England Communion Service. His book is one that may be commended to older Sunday-school teachers and intending communicants of the Established Church, while pious Nonconformists may find in it a satisfactory explanation of some things that perplex them.

Outskirts of Revelation. By Henry Harris, B.D. Frowde. A little book on a series of large and looming subjects, such as the "Serpent in Paradise," "The Intermediate State," "The Future of the Jews," "Revelation and Science," and Special Forms of Current Unbelief." Full discussion on themes so thorny and recondite could not be expected in space so limited; but the writer is evidently an independent thinker, and his views and teachings, so far as they go, are clear, candid, suggestive, and free from any tinge of dogmatism. If all the questions raised do not get complete answers, yet enough light is thrown upon subjects confessedly obscure, amply to repay perusal.

Rays of Messiah's Glory; or, Christ in the Old Testament. By David Baron. 6s. Hodder & Stoughton. This able and vigorous work seeks to show how the Old Testament proves Christ to be the Light of the Gentiles and the Glory of Israel. The task requires scholarship and insight. Mr. Baron has both. He has been a life-long student of the Bible, and brings to his work wide knowledge and earnestness of purpose. The fault of the book is that it is too popular for the theologian, and too abstruse for the ordinary reader. Many people will be frightened by the array of Hebrew words with which the pages are studded, but if they have the courage to read, they will find the treatise on a level with their powers of comprehension. We can heartily commend it.

The May number of The Contemporary Pulpit (6d. Swan Sonnenschein & Co.) is specially acceptable to preachers, on account of the valuable hints it gives about the books with which they should stock their libraries.

The Great Auk's Egg. By Darley Dale. 1s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. This story reminds us of a pill coated with sugar. It will do boys and girls good to read it, but it is really a series of discussions in natural history, woven into a slight narrative. It is healthy in tone, instructive in matter, and interesting in style.

Mornings with the Muse. By Ignotus. Elliot Stock. Quiet and thoughtful meditations thrown into the form of verse. They are evidently the product of a cultured imagination and an earnest mind. Some of the descriptive sonnets truthfully reflect the beauty of nature. We like the author best when he is simplest; when he tries to soar aloft, his wings fail him.

Abba, Father: Helps to Prayer and Meditation. By Rev. C. G. Baskerville, M.A. 1s. 6d. Nisbet & Co. The intention of this work is a good one, and to those who need a rule for prayer and meditation, and have not the natural resources within themselves, his aim will have been realised. But we deprecate any system of prayer or meditation that will reduce either to a mere formal soulless routine.

The Churchette. By Rev. J. Reid Howatt. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. "Feed my lambs" is a command binding on every shepherd, but few can do it well. Mr. Howatt has the ability, and makes full proof of it in these charming sermons to the young. He talks simply, yet forcibly. His parables are pictures painted with deft skill, and teach lessons well worth learning. In our column for the young we hope to give a specimen of the sermonettes.

A Popular Catechism on "the 100 texts." The First Fifty, by E. H. 6d. W. B. Horner & Son. Rev. C. Dallas's 100 Texts, blessed by God to thousands of souls, need no advertisement. But all who love Jesus, study their Bibles, and are engaged in teaching the young, have not catechetical power. To such this little book with questions and answers on each text, and here and there a short, striking illustration, will be invaluable. Not only in Roman Catholic Ireland, but in what was Protestant England, unscriptural religion, and every form of irreligion is increasing so fast that only by systematic Bible instruction can the rising generation be saved and fortified.

The Revealer Revealed. Thoughts upon the Revelation of Christ in and to his people. By Rev. Hay M. H. Aitken. John F. Shaw & Co. Under this expressive title the well-known mission preacher has grouped sixteen of his later discourses. Specially valuable for the present day are, "Perfection through Suffering," "The Bathing and the Washing," and "Walking with God." While Mr. Aitken glories in the fulness of the believing sinner's pardon, and the completeness of his consecration to God, he shows from Scripture and experience that personal sanctification is a gradual work, and that those believers, who, by sustained and living faith enjoy most of the love, joy, and peace contained in Jesus have most need of watchfulness against the wiles of the world, the flesh and the devil. He rightly holds and unvaryingly teaches that the holier a saint becomes, the more subtly is he assaulted.

The Wit and Humour of Life. By the late Dr. Stanford. Elliot Stock. We have already referred to and quoted from this charming book for readers of any age, but especially for young Christians, for whose pleasure and guidance its wealth of wisdom was first designed. The gifted author could discourse nobly, not only on "Central Truths," but on lighter subjects also, for deep in his soul lay a fountain of fancy ready to burst forth in sparkling grace on any theme. The reader will find here skilful definitions of wit and humour and of the manifold forms of mirth-exciting speech into which they run. He will find also a rich treasury of bright sayings gathered from the literature of many ages and many lands. Weak prejudices on this subject are removed and mistaken opinions dispelled. The writer shows that wit is not wickedness, but may be recognised as a Divine gift to be wisely used for God's service and glory. To the questions, What have Christians to do with wit and humour? What is their true use? Wherein lies their abuse? copious and admirable answers are given, answers which, in fact, form the body of the book. The conclusion comes in a practical address of great skill and searching power, directed to those who may admire wit and humour, but who do not yet fully love Christ. No brief notice can do justice to these pages; to be rightly appreciated they must be read.

The New Reformation. By Rev. Charles E. Beeby, M.A. 2s. Elliot Stock. It is not always easy to speak home truths lovingly, but Mr. Beeby manages to do it in this pamphlet, which advocates some rather sweeping reforms in the Established Church of England. He knows his subject, and handles it firmly.

Mr. Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, E C., publisher of "The Teachers' Storehouse and Treasury," is offering for a short time the volume at half-price, viz., 1s., or post free for 1s. 4d.

Guzzy the Miner. 1d. Partridge. A beautiful little life-sketch of one who, from the pit, attains unto the glory of being a true and devoted follower of Christ. It is so good that we recommend it to all our friends to enclose in their letters.

The Three Judgments. By Rev. James Gosset Tanner, M.A. 2d. John F. Shaw & Co. A thoroughly evangelical and weighty pamphlet on a most important subject. Mr. Tanner writes as if he had entered the world to come, and had come back to tell what he saw.

The Resurrection of the Dead. By Rev. J. C. Bass. 6d. Hodges, Figgis & Co., Dublin. Mr. Bass read this interesting contribution to the literature of the doctrine of the resurrection before a meeting of clergymen, and was asked by them to publish it. Its opinions merit careful consideration.

We have received from "The Commercial Gazette" Office, 58, New Broad-street, E.C., Compensation for Personal Injuries on Rail, Road, and River, by T. J. Wesley Bennett (price 2s. 8d). It has been written for the purpose of assisting those who have suffered in accidents, and need guidance as to how they may obtain compensation.

Health Handbooks.—A very valuable series of Health Handbooks (2s. each) is about to be published by Messrs. Cassell, including "The Influence of Clothing upon Health," "The Eye, Ear, and Throat," "The Eye and Sight," "The Ear and Hearing," "The Throat, Voice, and Speech," "The Management of the Skin and Hair." These volumes are reprinted from "The Book of Health."

Annie Williamson. By James Balfour, W.S. ½d., or 3s. 6d. per 100. Religious Tract Society of Scotland. This is an interesting story of the conversion and deathbed of a Scotch lassie. It is told with all the simple charm that distinguishes the author's style; and if sent to an unconverted friend, or if left lying about, is almost sure to be read. Narrated by Mr. Balfour in public, it has already won souls for Christ, and its appearance now, as a neatly got-up booklet of sixteen pages, is calculated still further to extend the Redeemer's kingdom.

Her Majesty's Accession to the Throne.—In connection with the celebration of the Jubilee, Messrs. Cassell & Co. announce the publication, in monthly parts, of "The Life and Times of Queen Victoria," with a profusion of high-class illustrations. Part 1 of this important work will be ready on May 25. Each monthly part will contain 64 pages, the size of The Quiver, with a handsome frontispiece. With the first part will be issued a large presentation plate, consisting of a beautiful engraving of the picture by Gourlay Steell, R.S.A., entitled "A Cottage Bedside at Osborne."

MR. W. NOBLE.—A telegram has been received from Mr. William Noble, intimating his arrival at Auckland, New Zealand, where he was to conduct a fortnight's mission.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—May 23, Psa. cv. 16—27; May 24, cv. 28—45; May 25, cvi. 1—18; May 26, cvi. 19—33; May 27, cvi. 34—48; May 28, cvii. 1—16; May 29, cvii. 17—30.

SWEDEN.—This year, writes a correspondent of the Philadelphia National Baptist, seems to be a revival one. From a great many places, brethren write that God has especially blessed their efforts. I cannot tell how many there are who ask for preachers. In missionary success I think Sweden is as eminent as any other country in the world at the present time. The people long for the Gospel. This year I have begun to publish a Christian newspaper, called Swedish Herald. The Temperance work is going on nicely.

RATHMINES, DUBLIN.—The fifth annual meeting of Young Men's Services here was held in Rathmines on Friday evening, the 7th instant. Colonel Morton, who presided, expressed the pleasure it gave him to support all such associations as this, where the work was carried on by men of all denominations, and on strictly unsectarian grounds. Rev. Wesley Guard moved a resolution, calling for the support and prayerful sympathy of all Christians in Rathmines and Dublin. Addresses in support were also given by Rev. F. Beevay, Rev. J. Porter, Mr. Aimers, and Mr. H. W. Figgis.

AN OPEN DOOR.—Sir,—The Savoy side of the Lake of Geneva calls urgently for evangelistic work. Any devoted Christians acquainted with the French language and possessing sufficient means to support themselves would there find a most interesting sphere of work. Savoy, with its population of some 500,000 is, perhaps, the darkest part of France. There is but one Protestant worker, a Swiss evangelist, who for eighteen years has been established at Evian; he has been alone at the work and is quite discouraged. There are a few bright Christians, whose addresses I will gladly furnish upon application, as well as any further information that may be desired. Wm. T. Float.

"The Manse," Foxton, Market Harborough.

RECREATIVE EVENING SCHOOLS ASSOCIATION.—One object of this Association is to introduce into evening schools recreative and practical education, with the assistance of voluntary teachers and helpers. The recreative classes comprise musical drill, singing, and lantern illustrations of the subjects taught. The practical classes are—for boys, wood carving, modelling, &c.; for girls, sewing and cookery; drawing, designing, &c., for both. Voluntary teachers and helpers are most urgently needed. Another object, now under the School Board's consideration, is to open some of the Board School Halls as clubs for working men and working women, managed by committees largely drawn from those using the club. Anyone willing to assist the work of the Association in any way, is earnestly requested to write to the Secretary, 1, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

Notes on Daily Readings

SUNDAY, MAY 23.—JUDGES IX.

THE moral of the story of Abimelech, which fills this long chapter, is given in its last two verses. It is a record of a wicked revolt against Gideon's descendants, seventy in number, by one of themselves: involving the wholesale murder of all except Jotham, the youngest son. Jotham's solemn malediction of Abimelech and of the men of Shechem, his assistants in the revolt and massacre, was fulfilled in the death, through fire, of "about a thousand men and women" of Shechem, and the death of Abimelech through a woman breaking his skull, and his armour-bearer despatching him forthwith. "Thus God rendered the wickedness of Abimelech, which he did unto his father, in slaying his seventy brethren: and all the evil of the men of Shechem did God render upon their heads: and upon them the curse of Jotham the son of Jerubbaal."

8.—The trees went forth on a time to anoint a king over them.—"This is the oldest fable extant. A somewhat similar one is preserved 2 Kings xiv. 9. These are the only two of the kind found in Scripture. Somewhat different are the parables 2 Sam. xii. 1—4, xiv. 5—11; 1 Kings xx. 39, 40; and those of the New Testament."—Sp. Com.

45.—Beat down the city, and sowed it with salt.—"Strewing the ruined city with salt, which only occurs here, was a symbolical act, signifying that the city was to be turned for ever into a barren salt desert."—Keil.

51.—There was a strong tower within the city, and thither fled all the men and women.—The safety afforded by this tower to those that "gat them up to the top of the tower" is an interesting illustration of Prov. xviii. 10, "The name of the Lord is a strong tower: the righteous runneth into it, and is safe."

53.—All to brake his skull.—"All to" is old English for altogether.

MONDAY, MAY 24.—JUDGES X.

4.—And he had thirty sons that rode on thirty ass colts.—"A sign of high rank. The Oriental ass is a superior animal: Israel had not yet imported horses."—Fausset.

12—The Maonites.—"In the Hebrew, Maon. The Septuagint have Midian, which may be the true reading. If Maon be the true reading it probably denotes one of the tribes of 'the children of the East,' who came with the Midianites and Amalekites in the time of Gideon."—Sp. Com.

14.—Go and cry unto the gods which ye have chosen.—"Compare Deut. xxxii. 37, 38, to which there is here a distant allusion, and 2 Kings iii. 13." —Ibid.

16.—And they put away the strange gods.—"Pain wrung from Israel the cry (ver. 10), 'we have sinned against Thee.' As yet it was the cry of the suffering flesh, not of the penitent heart. God therefore for the time rejects it. Deep conviction of sin must be wrought by the delay in answering, before grace is bestowed. True penitents pray on and wait still upon Jehovah, even though He hide his face (Isa. viii. 17). Next they put away the evil of their doings. Then they repeat their confession of sin and surrender themselves to God, acknowledging his sovereign right to do unto them whatsoever seemed good unto Him."—Fausset. The last words of this verse are some of the most gracious in the whole Bible—"his soul was grieved for the misery of Israel."

17.—Then the children of Ammon were gathered together, . . . and the children of Israel assembled themselves together.—"So it shall be in the last day of our dispensation; the Antichristian hosts shall be gathered together for perdition, the saints for their triumphant and eternal glory."—Fausset.

TUESDAY, MAY 25.—JUDGES XI.

2.—Thou shalt not inherit in our father's house; for thou art the son of a strange woman.—"The Israelites by idolatries had made themselves aliens from God's covenant; the son of a concubine and an outcast is therefore, in order to humble them in remembrance of their sin, to be their deliverer. God knows how to make adversities qualify his instruments for fulfilling his purposes. He chooses things which are despised to confound the mighty (1 Cor. ii. 27, 28)."—Fausset.

30.—If thou shalt without fail deliver the children of Ammon into mine hands.—This is not the language of faith, but betrays the same bargaining spirit which characterised Jacob's vow (Gen. xxviii). The sequel shows what sore trouble he brought upon himself thereby.

39.—Did with her according to his vow which he had vowed.—But what he did with her is a matter hotly contested, and, it must be admitted, one very difficult to decide. Keil says: "That Jephthah put his daughter to death, and burned her upon the altar as a sacrifice to Jehovah, was the view of Josephus and the Chaldee, and also the one which generally prevailed in the earlier times among both Rabbins and fathers of the Church. It was not till the Middle Ages that Kimchi and other Rabbins endeavoured to establish the view that Jephthah merely dedicated his daughter to the service of the sanctuary of Jehovah in a lifelong virginity." Keil himself, and Hengstenberg, and Auberlen, and the German commentators generally adopt this latter view, and so does Fausset, but the "Speaker's Commentary" prefers the older one. The passage itself, if closely examined, seems on the whole to favour the milder view of the fate of Jephthah's daughter, for as Jephthah used two expressions to describe what he would do—"shall surely be the Lord's," and "I will offer it up for a burnt offering"—it is not impossible that the former by itself would satisfy the conditions of the vow, if a person met him, while the latter would describe his treatment of an animal. But what most favours this view is her bewailing her virginity rather than her approaching death upon the mountains, and finally the words appended to the description of her father fulfilling his vow, "and she knew no man." The word "lament" in ver. 40 should be (as in R.V.) "to celebrate." A lifelong seclusion of this kind was from the standpoint of a woman of Israel, trained in the expectation of a possible fulfilment through her of the Messianic promise, no small sacrifice.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 26.—JUDGES XII.

1.—And the men of Ephraim, &c.—"Compare the similar complaint of the Ephraimites to Gideon (viii. 1), when a civil war was only avoided by Gideon's wise and patriotic moderation. The overbearing pride of Ephraim comes out in both occurrences, as also in Josh. xvii. 14—18."—Sp. Com.

4.—The men of Gilead smote Ephraim.—"Quarrelsome men at last find their match. The tongue of the Ephraimites kindled the flame (James iii. 6). 'Wherefore didst thou not call us to go with thee?' Retributively their tongue, in its inability to pronounce aright, betrayed them, and was the occasion of their slaughter. They who had threatened to burn Jephthah's house were cut off for ever from their own. Surely 'pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall' (Prov. xvi. 18)."—Fausset.

7.—And Jephthah judged Israel six years."—"Jephthah's judgeship was but for six years: for his wrath was cruel, however justly incurred by Ephraim; without an heir to perpetuate his name, he passed away. Thus the righteousness of God appears continually in his retributive judgments even in this present world."—Ibid. As to the spiritual lessons to be derived from this chapter, the same well remarks, "A man may now assume the guise of a Christian; but if Christ be not in his heart, the Shibboleth of his mouth is sure to detect him, as Peter's Galiliean speech betrayed him. Certainly at the Lord's coming no lying pretence of being what men are not will avail to save them from wrath. Those who are on the Lord's side shall enjoy eternal rest and glory with Him."

THURSDAY, MAY 27.—JUDGES XIII.

7.—The child shall be a Nazarite to God from the womb to the day of his death.—"The common Nazarite vow was for a limited time, like St. Paul's (Acts xviii. 18, xxi. 23—26). Others, like Samuel (1 Sam. i. 11), were Nazarites for life."—Sp. Com. "The three prohibitions ('drink not wine nor strong drink,' 'eat not any unclean thing,' 'no razor shall come on his head'), which the angel of the Lord imposed upon the woman, were the three things which distinguished the condition of a Nazarite (Num. vi. 1—8). The only other thing mentioned in the Mosaic law is the warning against defilement from contact with the dead, which does not seem to have been enforced in the case of Samson."—Keil. Probably because his peculiar call as a deliverer of Israel would necessitate, as the sequel shows, much contact with death. The angel of the Lord, therefore, limits the uncleanness to be avoided to that connected with eating.

18.—Why askest thou thus after my name, seeing it is secret?—For "secret" should be read the marginal reading "wonderful" (so R.V.). "The word is the adjectival form, and, therefore, is not the proper name of the angel of the Lord, but expresses the character of his name; and as the name simply denotes the nature, it expresses the peculiarity of his nature also. It is to be understood in an absolute sense as a predicate belonging to God alone (compare 'Wonderful,' Isa. ix. 6)."—Keil.

23.—If the Lord were pleased to kill us.—A notable answer of a calm and quiet spirit, which ranks Manoah's wife among "the holy women who trusted in God," and who were "not afraid with any amazement" (1 Pet. iii. 5, 6).

FRIDAY, MAY 28.—JUDGES XIV.

"The life and acts of Samson are described in this and the next two chapters with an elaborate fulness which seems quite out of proportion to the help and deliverance which he brought to his people; and whilst the small results that followed do not answer the expectations that might naturally be formed from the miraculous announcement of his birth, the nature of the acts which he performed appears still less to be such as we should expect from a hero impelled by the Spirit of God. His actions not only bear the stamp of adventure, foolhardiness, and wilfulness when looked at outwardly, but they are almost all associated with subservience to his sensual lusts."—Keil. This, which is the great difficulty of Samson's history, is best met by regarding him as raised up by God to present to Israel a picture of themselves. In him they might see Nazarite separation to God as the means of procuring superhuman strength. But they might also see this privilege—which was theirs nationally—abused, and wasted, and finally lost (until its recovery at his last death effort) by reason of his moral weakness and unfaithfulness to his Nazarite calling. Thus in his weakness was reflected the character of the nation generally, and their constant disposition to cultivate unholy alliances with the heathen around them. Samson's moral character was in fact a picture of Israel's spiritual character. Yet his mighty deeds showed them what they might by faith accomplish, whilst his final victory in death pointed onwards to one who, as the representative of Israel, should through death destroy greater enemies than the Philistines.

5.—Behold, a young lion roared against him.—"David had to encounter the lion and bear first, to prepare him for the combat with the giant Goliath. God took occasion from Samson's wandering aside into the vineyards to let him see what he could do in the strength of the Spirit of the Lord. Samson had no instrument in his hands. So the believer conquers Satan most effectually when he looks to the Saviour alone to fight for him."—Fausset.

14.—Out of the eater came forth meat, &c.—The spiritual meaning of Samson's riddle points to Him who "through death destroyed him that had the power of death, that is, the devil" (Heb. ii. 14). "Who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel" (2 Tim. i. 10).

SATURDAY, MAY 29.—JUDGES XV.

6.—Burnt her and her father with fire.—"Some take it that the Philistines did this out of revenge, these being Samson's nearest relations. But it is more probable that they did it as an act of justice in favour of Samson, and in hope of pacifying his anger. It is noteworthy that Samson's wife brought upon herself the very punishment which she sought to escape by betraying her husband (xiv. 15)."—Sp. Com.

14.—The Spirit of the Lord came mightily upon him.—This description of the mode in which Samson obtained his superhuman strength clearly intimates that it was not an inherent or abiding gift, but an occasional endowment given as circumstances might call for it, and as faith might claim it (Heb. xi. 32). It was nothing in him which he put forth, but "the Spirit of the Lord which came mightily upon him." The popular conception of Samson, as shown in pictures representing him as a very large strong man, is altogether wrong. We have no reason to suppose that he differed in size or inherent strength from other men, and this is confirmed by Delilah's language (xvi. 6), "Tell me, I pray thee, wherein thy great strength lieth," words which could not have been spoken to a man of huge frame and muscular strength. To regard him as such is to miss the whole point of the teaching of his history.

19—God clave an hollow place that was in the jaw.—"Beyond all question the right translation is 'the hollow place which is in Lehi,' for the writer tells us that the name of the spring in Lehi (the feminine 'thereof' can refer to nothing else) was still called 'the spring of him that called,' up to his time. The word translated 'hollow place' means a mortar. Here it is evidently a hollow or basin among the cliffs of Lehi, which from its shape was called 'the mortar.' In this hollow a spring burst out in Samson's need, and abundantly quenched his thirst."—Sp. Com.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every fleet.

A LABOURER FOR GOD.

By Rev. ANDREW A. BONAR, D.D.,

Author of "Memoir of R. M. M'Cheyne," &c., &c.

"We wish all young men would read this brief memoir."—Baptist Magazine.

"This book will be read with interest and profit, and its perusal will stimulate others to follow the example of this devoted servant of the Lord."—Methodist Times.

"Those who knew the late Rev. James Scott, F. C. Probationer, or ever heard of the unique and important position he occupied during the remarkable work of grace which has been going on in Glasgow for the past ten years, will be pleased to have this short memoir of him from so accomplished a writer as Dr. Andrew Bonar. . . . A 'gracious spirit' pervades the book, which we heartily commend to the notice of all evangelistic workers."

A NEW SERVICE OF SONG.

PRICE FOURPENCE. (Fifty Copies will be supplied direct from the Publishers at half-price.)

The Man who Spoiled the Music.

By REV. MARK GUY PEARSE.

ARRANGED AS A

MUSICALLY ILLUSTRATED SERVICE. By FREDERICK BRETT.

WITH BOTH OLD NOTATION AND TONIC SOL-FA IN ONE BOOK.

There are many persons who are acquainted with Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's quaint and striking tract of "The Man who Spoiled the Music." By the Author's kind permission the story has now been produced as a SERVICE OF SONG; in which form it is expected to prove both acceptable and profitable. It is hoped that many who—like "Jack," of whom this story speaks—have been too long accustomed to spoil the music in their own hearts and their own homes, and to spoil the music also in the lives of others, may experience the same change of thought, feeling and purpose through which "Jack" passed; and then, like him, having learned the New Song, set themselves to work to bring back both music and sunshine into the hearts and lives of all around.

The WORDS of the Hymns of this SERVICE OF SONG may be had SEPARATELY on a Sheet,
PRICE ONE PENNY.

Fifty Copies of either Music or Words will be supplied direct from the Publishers at half-price.

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

ASTHMA and BRONCHITIS.

CASE of Mr. BARTIE, MONMOUTH.

This patient first writes me in April, last year, as follows:—"Having been confined to my bed for a long time with what seemed at first a severe cold, and afterwards reported by the doctor as a touch of Asthma, and then Bronchitis, and getting no better, your valuable medicine was recommended me, by the Rev. M. Robinson, of the Independent Chapel. I found benefit from a few doses. I took three family bottles, and am thankful to say I am about my duties again, though not strong yet."

I sent him medicine and advice, and prescription to rub his chest, and other directions. (Up to that time he had gone by the advice contained in my book only.)

In four months after this he says:—"I have great pleasure in stating that I am nearly as well now as ever I was in my life. I trust your medicine may become widely known." Also writing me in January of this year he says:—"I am speaking of you to everyone I know, as having been the means of restoring me to perfect health."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

FIFTY GUINEAS IN CASH

to the 50 persons who send us the 50 best specimens. Full particulars with each Camera, and in Catalogue.

Photography is now as clean and easy as it was once dirty and difficult. Any person can now become a successful Photographer. Ladies photograph their pets, gentlemen their houses and friends, tourists the places they visit, manufacturers their goods. People will no longer pay 8s. 6d. and 10s. 6d. doz. for Photographs when they can have the pleasure of producing their own at a cost of 1s. doz.

With every Camera we send the fullest and plainest Instructions, devoid of all technicalities; and with every Camera a ticket entitling the holder to enter into the competition for the 50 Guineas of Cash Prizes. We claim for our Sets that they are the best and cheapest ever offered. Many other advertisers only supply Camera, and say nothing of chemicals, disappointing the customer when he finds he has so many extras to buy. Our Sets include chemicals, &c., as under:—

No. 1. Kensington Camera will take Carte de Visite size, and consists of good Bellows Camera with Achromatic Lenses, Brass Front, Cap, Stained Framework, Folding Bottom, Set of Dry Plates, Set of Sensitised Papers, Two Bottles of Developing Solutions, Box of Fixing Crystals, Bottle of Gold Solution, Printing Frame, Elastic Bands, Mounting Cards, Glass Rod, Brass Fittings, and Dark Shutter complete. REV. A. N. SOMERVILLE, D.D., GLASGOW.

LAST week our venerable and much-esteemed friend, Dr. A. N. SOMERVILLE, of Glasgow, assumed the highest office given to the ministers of the Free Church of Scotland to fill—that of Moderator of the General Assembly. We have thought this a favourable season at which to furnish our readers with a portrait of our friend, and a short sketch of his busy and fruitful life.

Dr. Somerville was born in 1813, and was educated at the High School and University of his native city of Edinburgh, where he made the most of his time and opportunities. In his student days he attended the ministry of the saintly Dr. James Henderson, of Stockbridge, by which he greatly profited. His burning enthusiasm in the service of Christ burst the bonds of academic restraint, and found expression in evangelistic work in the Canongate, where he laboured along with his bosom friend McCheyne. Even thus early he showed preaching powers of a rare kind, and proved very popular. Tokens of Divine blessing followed their labours. One of the converts of these services, Alexander Stocks, was for many years a prominent figure in the Free Church Assembly, of which he was the zealous and useful janitor.

In due time the student became a licentiate. He finished his theological curriculum, during all of which he had the benefit of the inspiring teaching of Chalmers and Welsh. In 1835 he went to live in Roxburghshire, but could not be idle there. He acted for some months as volunteer missionary in the country districts, and preached with fervour and success in schools, farm-houses, and barns. Out of these meetings grew the formation of Edgerston quoad sacra parish church. After discharging the duties of an assistant in Stockbridge for three months, and in Larbert for ten, he was ordained to the full charge of Anderston Church, Glasgow, in November, 1837.

In his youth and early manhood Mr. Somerville was very fond of athletic sports, and through this exercise he developed the strength of constitution which has enabled him to stand so much hard and trying work. We suspect that his gymnastic feats would not always have met with the approval of good but narrow-minded elders. Dr. Thain Davidson, in his recently-published "Forewarned—Forearmed," tells how Mr. McCheyne, of revered memory, was walking in the country one Monday morning with a couple of ministerial friends. Mr. McCheyne was in the best of spirits. While crossing a field he bounded forward, and started "leap-frog," in which his companions joined heartily. A grave elder witnessed the game with pious horror, and came up to rebuke the divines for their levity. They good-humouredly confessed the error of their ways, and promised never to do the like again.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Ralston & Sons, Glasgow.)

Mr. Somerville, as might be expected, threw himself with whole-hearted consecration into the duties of his pastorate. His pulpit became a centre of inspiration and blessing. He began work at a favourable time. The long winter, which had frozen the spiritual life of Scotland, showed signs of coming to an end. Revivals raised the tide of evangelical fervour. The great religious awakening at Kilsyth, so much associated with the late W. C. Burns, afterwards of China, and in which Mr. Somerville with others had a part, produced a deep impression throughout the country. Men, wearied of the cheerless negations they had heard so long, listened eagerly to a full and simple declaration of the Gospel. It was a period of joy and light to those who lived in dark places.

The years that followed were full of events of far-reaching importance. Their conflicts and activities reached a culmination in the Disruption of 1843, when 474 ministers gave up everything for conscience sake, and went forth from church and home not knowing whither they went. Such strength of devoted faith and bravery of self-denial thrilled the lovers of evangelical truth. They wept, and thanked God; and the land of John Knox again rejoiced in the warmth that had been banished by the winter of Moderatism.

Mr. Somerville was in the front of the battle for Christ's Headship in his Church and for the purity of preaching. His teaching and example so influenced his people that, when the day of trial came, they stood faithful almost to a man. The whole of the office-bearers, all the Sabbath-school teachers, and nearly the entire congregation, followed him in joining the Free Church. The exodus was solemn and striking. The minister lifted the Bible, which had been given to him personally, from the pulpit-desk, put it under his arm, and marched out. The forsaken church remained unoccupied for a considerable time. In 1849 it was burnt to the ground. Its blackened walls lingered a picture of desolation till they were swept away to make room for a store.

A new church was built without delay. It soon got too small to hold the crowds that flocked to hear the earnest and eloquent preacher, so the large and handsome building, now known as Anderston Free Church, was erected. It was the scene of Mr. Somerville's labours during all the after years of his pastoral life.

Notwithstanding all the harassing duties of a town charge he found time for outside activities. His attention was drawn to the multitudes in Glasgow who were as sheep without a shepherd, and for whom no man cared. The Sabbath was spent by them in lounging idleness or walking on the open space called Glasgow Green. His heart yearned over them, and he resolved to tell them about the Saviour's love. They would not come to him, so he would go to them; he would hold open-air meetings. Such a thing was unknown in those days except to the Methodists. The resolution was quickly carried into practice. Notices were posted up on the trees and other conspicuous objects, intimating that Mr. Somerville would preach on the Sabbath. A great crowd gathered from the cheerless streets and squalid slums of the poverty-stricken. A chair was set in the centre of the Green to do duty for a pulpit. It was mounted by the minister, who wore his bands, so as to make apparent his clerical standing to his hearers, who, like most people in Scotland, were more inclined to accept truth from the lips of an ordained man than from those of a man who had not received the imprimatur of a recognised church.

The sermons then preached are still remembered with delight. Full of fire and fervour, they aimed straight at the conscience, and did not miss their mark. Many souls experienced the new birth, and purposeless lives were dominated with the desire to serve God. Other ministers have now taken up the work Mr. Somerville began; but it will ever remain a memorial of his consecrated energy that he was among the first in Glasgow to follow the example of his Master in going out to the highways and hedges to seek the lost sheep of society.

These labours revealed his tact and capacity for evangelistic work. The church to which he belonged was glad to utilise his gifts. It sent him in 1845 to Canada, where he preached with fiery eloquence and remarkable success; in 1846 to Shetland, where he infused something of his own spirit into the lonely dwellers in the storm-beaten isles of the far North; and in 1847 to Airdrie, where the miners flocked to hear him, and went away with quickened resolutions to live better lives. So much speaking was bound to tell on his constitution. In 1847 he was laid aside with a "minister's sore throat." His medical advisers ordered complete rest. He took advantage of this season of leisure to travel in Palestine, visiting Mount Sinai and Petrea, and to make personal acquaintance with localities sacred to him because of their associations.

On his return to Scotland he resumed his old labours with renewed zest and strength. His congregation grew in numbers and influence under his preaching. Every agency for spreading the Gospel and promoting the welfare of humanity met with his cordial sympathy and co-operation. He did much for the cause of missions in South Africa. He was one of the secretaries of the Glasgow Bible Society, and when that useful organisation joined its sister societies, he became a director of the united societies. He was so interested in getting Bibles for China, that he went through the country pleading for the necessary funds. And so the years glided past, crowded with leal-hearted service for whatever was good and true, and bright with the happiness that such a life alone can give.

In 1859—60 a wave of spiritual blessing visited Ireland. Many ministers crossed the Channel to bring back fresh fire to their own pulpits. Mr. Somerville went with them. He received a baptism of the Spirit, and returned to preach as even he had never preached before. His church was thrown open for nightly meetings, which continued for eleven months, and were productive of the best results.

In 1864 he was deeply interested in the persecution of Protestants in Spain. He followed with warm sympathy the fate of the leaders in that struggle against Popery. Manuel Matamoros, who was sentenced to nine years' transportation in the galleys for distributing Bibles, but had his sentence modified into banishment, became his friend. He met him at Lausanne, and learned to love him for his qualities of heart and mind. When the hero died, during his period of exile, Mr. Somerville embalmed his memory in these fragrant lines:—

I little thought, else keen had been my pain,
  Those brilliant eyes should beam on me no more;
That scarcely fifteen moons should wax and wane,
  Ere death had sealed them by blue Leman's shore.

Dear Matamoros! no friend have I known
  Of soul less soiled with earthliness than thine;
In chains and exile, brave thy Lord to own,
  The victor's wreaths the martyr-temples twine.

Loving and lovely, gentle, guileless, pure,
  All base alloy thy lofty bosom spurned;
To lead thy bleeding Spain to Christ for cure,
  With life-consuming fire that bosom burned.

I loved thee, as did those of many a clime—
  Thy glorious race on earth seemed but begun.
The Lord "does all things well." In golden prime Thou servest now, where shines no setting sun.

Mr. Somerville went regularly to Spain for some years, and strengthened the hearts of the brave Christians there. He took an active part in the secret printing of Bibles at Malaga before permission to print them publicly was given by the authorities. After the Revolution of 1868, he helped to organise the congregation at Madrid, of which Rev. Antonio Carrasco became pastor.

In 1874 he was requested by the Anglo-Indian Christian Union to conduct an evangelistic campaign in India. He consented, and spent upwards of five months in going over some of the largest towns in our great Eastern Empire from Madras to Moultan. He preached to the English and to the non-Christian natives who, throughout India, came in surprising numbers to hear him. Through his visit a Y.M.C.A. was started in Bombay, which still flourishes, and is increasingly a power for good. His activities were manifold, and always attended with tokens of Divine blessing. Two years later the General Assembly of the Free Church asked him to visit Canada as their representative at the first General Assembly after the union of the Presbyterian Churches in that country. When this pleasant duty was over he found time to take an evangelistic tour. Wherever he went old friends flocked round him, and cheered his heart with reminiscences of what he had spoken thirty-one years previously, in the North American provinces.

These services paved the way for what has been the special feature of his ministerial career. The revival of the year 1874 had drawn the Christians of Glasgow together, and filled them with an earnest desire to do good. They banded themselves under the name of the United Evangelistic Association, and resolved to give other lands the benefit of the blessing they themselves had experienced. They were led to ponder more deeply the command of the risen Redeemer: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." They could not go themselves, as duty called them to stay, but they could send a substitute. Whom could they send? Their thoughts turned to Mr. Somerville. They unanimously invited him to resign his pastorate, which he had held for forty years, and undertake the mission to regions beyond, "with a view to the promotion of union among Christians, the furtherance of aggressive evangelistic work, and specially the proclamation of the Gospel of the grace of God wherever he should go." The document in which this unusual request was embodied lies before us as we write. It is worthy of a place in the archives of Christendom, and marks a new era in missionary zeal.

This request came to a man old in years and full of labours, who might now legitimately think of spending the evening of his life in well-won leisure. It involved much travelling and hard work. It meant perils on land and by sea, and separation from home and friends. Yet it was cheerfully granted. Mr. Somerville could not refuse it: "the love of Christ constrained him." Before he went forth on his mission, he received the honorary degree of D.D. from Glasgow University. This was a tribute to the man and to his work.

The limits of our space forbid any lengthy account of his labours as "the world-evangelist." We regret this the less, because a detailed description of them has appeared in our columns from time to time. The interested reader can turn up old files of The Christian to learn the venerable preacher's experiences. In 1877-78 he visited Australia, New Zealand, and Tasmania, where he was the means of stirring up Christians to united endeavour, of inaugurating Y.M.C.A.'s and Ladies' Societies, and of awakening the unconverted to a sense of their danger. In 1879, after a short mission in Ireland, he proceeded to France and Jersey, where permanent good was done. In the spring of 1880 he addressed large audiences, sometimes numbering 3000, in the chief Italian cities. In 1881, and again in 1882, he devoted his energies to Germany. Some evangelical friends in Russia asked him to go to that country. He went to St. Petersburg and Moscow, but the social crisis caused by the assassination of the Emperor and the prohibition against preaching in the Russian language, interfered with the size of his meetings. Those who did come belonged to the upper classes, and listened attentively. In November of 1882 he responded to a cordial invitation from ministers, missionaries, and laymen at the Cape to conduct a mission in the South African colonies. It was signally successful, but was abruptly brought to a close by Dr. Somerville's illness through fatigue and exposure. Fears were entertained that his labours were ended, but they were not. A brief season of rest restored his health, and though now in his seventies, he entered on an apostolic journey to the East, beginning at Athens. How warmly he was received there was recorded in our columns at the time. At Corinth he met with strenuous opposition, but he fared better at Smyrna. He afterwards went through the other villages on the site of the Seven Churches of Asia, proclaiming afresh, with fire-tipped tongue and loving heart, the Gospel that had been sounded forth there 1800 years before. His mission extended to Constantinople, Bithynia, Thessalonica, Thessaly, and Eubœa.

The secret of the life, the leading events of which we have briefly sketched, has been that, like Enoch, he has walked with God. The spirit of devotion he caught in early life, along with his friends McCheyne and the Bonars, has burned bright and steady through his whole career. He loved God and souls, and that love gave him strength to do the work he has done. His gifts of mind and heart fitted him for the duties he has had to discharge. His culture is broad, his imagination vivid, and his emotional feelings strong. His sermons, while true to the cross as steel to the magnet, have a fine artistic finish, and are always lit up with apposite illustrations from science, art, and nature. His eloquence is not mere rhetoric, but the eloquence of the heart. The sublimity of the truths with which he has to deal, and his sense of their incomparable importance, make him speak with an earnestness and force which hold his hearers spellbound. The poet is born, not made, and we believe the true preacher is born, not made. Dr. Somerville loves to preach as the brook loves to run and the birds to sing. The power which accompanies his words can be traced to no natural causes; it is the result of the baptism of the Holy Ghost. He realises that "it is not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

We rejoice to know that Dr. Somerville is loved and esteemed by Christians in every part of the world; and we heartily congratulate him on the high honour conferred on him by his own Church. He is worthy of that honour.

THE MARSEILLES EXHIBITION.

The opening of the Marseilles Industrial Exhibition to the public is put off to May 29. This gives us time to make an earnest appeal for help towards the free distribution of the Scriptures, by sending subscriptions to Mrs. Robertson, 1, Oak Hill-park, Hampstead, who will forward them to me; and also copies of the illustrated Ouvrier Français, of which M. Dardier, of Geneva, has sent a stock of about 30,000, to be sold at a halfpenny each, or one pound for 1000. During the late fêtes, which brought out great crowds, we were able to give about 9500 copies of Testaments and Gospels. We long and desire to give the Word to all, and to leave out none who are willing to accept it. We are perpetually put to shame in Marseilles by finding people who for years have been longing for a Bible, and this in a city where there are above 14,000 Protestants.—Yours, M. E. Prinsep.

Hôtel du Petit Louvre, Marseilles, France.

EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD.

By Rev. Dr. A. N. SOMERVILLE.

[This is the subject Dr. Somerville took for the address, which, as Moderator of the Free Church Assembly, he delivered at the opening session in Edinburgh, on Thursday last. It is a subject that accords completely with the great work to which he has devoted his life in recent years, and his stirring words come home with all the weight and authority of experience. The limits of our space will only admit of our giving extracts. After a statement of the parting commission of the Saviour, the Doctor gives a cursory but graphic sketch of the early triumphs of the Christian faith, and the marvellous results that occurred over the whole of the then civilised world. Then follows a brief review of the spiritual declension that deepened into the gross darkness of the middle ages of the Christian era, and a concise account of the world's spiritual condition at the present time, leaving "almost at the opening of the twentieth century since Christ came into the world, one thousand millions of our fellow-men who know nothing of Christianity." We quote from the next division of the address.]

SUGGESTIONS AS TO THE FUTURE.

In offering some practical suggestions, I must not be supposed to overlook the urgent claims of our countrymen at home, even of their temporal necessities. But my present theme is the foreign field. One question I have to put is, Are we really willing to face the enterprise which Christ sets before us? Much depends on what I may call soul, for this object. By that, I mean the possession of an overmastering sense of obligation to fulfil Christ's commission, confidence in the Lord's promised presence in the discharge of it, an invincible assurance that the preaching of the Cross is the one instrumentality for the conversion of men, reliance on his providence to open doors of entrance into kingdoms, and more than all, a burning love to Christ Himself, an unfaltering enthusiasm for the salvation of men, an inflexible determination to persevere, conquer, or die.

PRAYER.

In regard to the world's evangelisation, enough cannot be said of the importance of prayer. The greatest, the most responsible, the busiest, and most successful servants that Christ ever had, divided their functions into two departments. "We will give ourselves continually to prayer and to the ministry of the word." What would be thought of dividing the twelve hours of our day by giving six hours to prayer for the Gospel, and six to the ministry of the word? Had all Christ's servants acted thus, could anyone estimate how mighty the results on the world would be to-day?

Would it not be well could we train ourselves to take up all the countries of the world in detail, and make mention of them systematically before God? There are persons who have attempted to do this every day of their lives, while others divide the world into portions, and take these up on successive days. I hope I may not offend any hearers if I venture to recommend the use of a prayer-book, which I have found of service, and which can be had from the shelves of Messrs. Keith Johnston & Co. I mean a pocket atlas, which should be spread like Hezekiah's letter before the Lord, and be gone over carefully from day to day, and from year to year, so that every kingdom, capital, island, and ocean shall be individually remembered. If this were done on an extensive scale among Christians, blessed issues would ensue.

The answer to your prayers may come by God's sending you as evangelists or settlers to the very lands for which you have prayed; or by enabling you to write a volume which may stir the missionary activity of hundreds, or to prepare hymns that may be sung in every land and tongue. God may enable you, by your addresses as ministers, professors, and laymen, to rouse congregations and entire synods to their duty to the heathen, as well as to call forth the Christian enthusiasm of young men in our colleges and universities; and mothers in Israel, like Hannah, Lois and Eunice, may, through prayer, be the means of sending forth a Carey, a Henry Martyn, a Duff, a William Burns, a Stanley Smith, or a Studd. I believe that the Day will declare that solitary individuals have, simply by their prayers, prevailed to introduce the Gospel into vast and populous dominions.

ACTION.

But prayer must be associated with action. In view of the seemingly insoluble problem, how the multitudinous populations of the world are to be reached with the Gospel, and our readiness to faint at the thought of the impracticability of the effort, I would venture to ask, Was the condition of mankind, let us say such as it is at this moment, actually present to the eye of Christ when He gave the imperative commission, "Go and make disciples of all nations"? Or, on the other hand, are we to suppose that the commission was only temporary, and that now, with 1000 millions to-day still waiting to be evangelised, He would say to us, The business is too weighty, the commission is accordingly suspended and no longer in force? For my part, I cannot bring myself to believe that any change has taken place in the commission or in the obligation to fulfil it. In that case I must put myself in the position of those originally addressed by the Lord Jesus, and recognise that the command is binding on me in common with others to lay out my life in the execution of it. This consideration must sustain me in the face of all incredulity, and of the ridicule that may be launched against me. It may not be ours to convert the world, but our Commander's orders are explicit, to carry the glad tidings to every soul.

May it not be, that instead of the commission waning in its terms, it is only now, when the world teems with 1440 millions of sinners, that the four "Alls" of Christ's majestic utterance are starting into their full significance and brilliancy, like the four angular stars in the constellation of the Southern Cross?

All power is given unto Me.
All nations go ye and disciple.
All my commandments teach them to observe.
All the days till the end of the world I am with you. . . .

The time is surely come when the entire Christianity of the British Isles should be aroused to meet the ever-accumulating necessities of a dying world. Apart from the rampant materialism and supercilious agnosticism abroad in society, there is undoubtedly in the churches a widespread indifference, a lurking scepticism, an ignoring of the saving doctrines of the Gospel, the substitution of ritual observances in place of the new birth and spiritual life. Indeed there is a strange blight resting even on those who are evangelical. And there is a pretty general complaint of an absence of power in the ministrations of the church generally, that her services are uninteresting and even wearisome, while few conversions are said to be taking place under the ordinary ministry; and the hearts of many are sinking within them from the apparent hopelessness of any change for the better.

May not the inquiry be suggested whether the unsatisfactory and ineffective condition of things is not traceable to the Church's insensibility to the mandate of Christ? May not the withdrawal of power from the churches in part be accounted for by their neglect to fulfil the great command? Does not Christ's commission warrant such an inference—"Go make disciples of all nations; and, lo, I am with you even to the end of the world"? Can the Church wonder should Christ withdraw power from her, even in her home ministrations, when she deserts the special duty for the discharge of which his abiding presence was promised? On the other hand, could we conceive of any means more likely to lead to an extensive revival of vital religion in the Church at large, that than she should be started into action—ministers and people alike—by the trumpet call to arise, go forth, and subdue the kingdoms for Christ?

Were the churches to realise that the function of their existence is to spread Christ's name in the earth, would not the result bear resemblance to what is promised to the Gentiles when Israel is restored—life from the dead?

Is not the case such as to demand the immediate attention of all the churches of the world to reconsider Christ's command, and in view of the races yet in darkness, and of the overwhelming increase in the population of the world (experts estimating that during the last hundred years it has even doubled), to lay to heart what can be unitedly done to meet the exigencies of mankind? Is the subject not worthy of international conference? We have Pan-Presbyterian, and Pan-Anglican Councils; why not a Pan-Missionary or Pan-Evangelistic Council?

[Dr. Somerville proceeded to refer briefly to the power of Christian education in connection with this great work, to the need for direct evangelisation on a wide scale, to the work of lady missionaries, to work among seamen, to the importance of fostering the visitation of foreign lands by accredited evangelists, to the facilities for interpretation in preaching to those of differing languages, and to the question of finance.]

AFRICA.

I have not called attention to any particular country, but if there be one which, next to our own empire in India, I may venture to plead for, it is Africa. The armies of Great Britain have lately had much to do with Africa. Witness the fields of Ashantee, Egypt, Soudan, Abyssinia, Kafirland, Basutoland, and Zululand. Shall the poor Africans have to associate the Christian name mainly with the blare of the war trumpet, the roar of the cannon, the hailstorm of bullets, the hurricane of shot and shell, the gleam of the bayonet, the flash of the merciless sword, the prowess and dash of our countrymen who have stretched thousands of Africa's brave sons on the bloody battlefield? I might also allude to the havoc still being wrought by that terrible implement of destruction—the spirit cask—against which Basutoland has within the last few months vigorously and victoriously exclaimed.

Shall we not be impelled, by late events, to adopt another method of approaching Africa, and, instead of expending our millions in the destruction of its people, send our hundreds of thousands to save them?

The story of Africa's sorrows makes the heart bleed. Think of the internecine strife that has raged for ages among its races, and wasted its tribes, the ignorance that has prevailed among its millions, the degradation of its women, its foul superstition, witchcraft, and poison ordeals, the wide sway of its fanatical and hopeless Mahomedanism, the bloody cruelty of its chiefs, the horrors of its slave traffic engendered by the cupidity of foreigners, the atrocities which so-called civilised nations have perpetrated alike on its central, eastern, and western regions, the shrieks of its slave gangs, the moans, tears, and wails of unmitigated despair from its women and children torn from their homes and consigned to remediless misery, the agonies of the slave ship, the fetters, manacles, and collars of iron, the battening down of hundreds of wretches under the hatches, the suffocation, the death pangs, the heaving overboard of the dead in unknown multitudes. Ah! what a tale will these depths of ocean have to tell when the sea shall give up its dead.

God remembers how, in the days of Joseph, Africa sheltered and welcomed to its hospitality the whole Church of God; nor has Jesus forgotten how, when his own people sought to destroy his infant life, Africa, of all countries in the world, opened her kindly arms to take Him in? Not by the onslaught of war can we expect to benefit Africa. The only curative for her deadly plagues is the Gospel which we hold in our hands. Shall we hesitate to advance when Christ is opening for us gates of access? Nay, shall we not rise, and, on a scale hitherto unthought of, devise for her in a manner commensurate with the evils and wrongs that have crushed her for ages?

CONCLUSION.

There is no choice left us. We must go on till the command is repealed. Reasons for the suspension of conquest during these long and dreary centuries are not far to seek. Let us hesitate no longer, but shake off indifference and despondency. If the Church has hitherto faltered in her advance, let her now start from her apathy, and while there are yet fourteen years of the century to run, let her appeal to her Lord, to be afresh endued with power from on high; and so clothed, "as with thunder," like a host, whose name is Boanerges, let her enter on the field with confident anticipation, resolved that by the grace of God, in the fourteen years which yet remain, more shall be accomplished than in all the fourteens that have gone before.

A mighty surprise is awaiting us in the conversion of Israel. The period in which they have been "shut up" within their wall of unbelief is now far gone. Tokens of approaching movement seem discernible. And as Israel passed over the ruins of the wall of Jericho into the city, so Israel shall step out over the ruins of their wall into the glorious liberty of the children of God, to take a mighty part in the winning of Christ's inheritance for Him throughout the world. At any rate, the wall is destined suddenly to fall. Even before that day comes, changes most momentous among the nations may rapidly take place. If one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, a thousand years are as one day.

At the present moment, while to many discouragements seem to abound, on the other hand, nothing is more striking to those who have opportunity of knowing what is going forward than the extraordinary openings that are to be had in foreign lands; the unexpected flocking of multitudes to listen to the Gospel when a stranger appears; the blessing that attends the efforts made by any agency that is seriously in earnest. Even at home, the most astonishing things are taking place in many districts at this moment, both within and outside the Church. Numbers of both sexes and of all classes are rising up, not only to give themselves to the Lord, but anxious to devote their life and service to propagate the Gospel. For example, in connection with our Y.M.C.A.'s, there are no less than 480 young persons under training, with a view to mission work at home and abroad. God is opening our eyes to see that there are spiritual gold-fields at our very feet. Even material gold for high undertakings is found never to be lacking.

There seems an impression in some quarters worthy of high respect, that, because the condition of the world is so deplorable after nineteen centuries of Christianity, the only hope for mankind lies in the second coming of Christ Himself. We hail the thought of the Lord's coming. And should He come while we are engaged fulfilling his orders, "blessed shall that servant be whom his Lord when He cometh shall find so doing." If Christ comes soon, then the present is faith's one priceless opportunity before He appears, to labour on behalf of his kingdom. Be it ours to take care lest our misapprehension of the blessed hope of his second coming should neutralise the influence of his first.

Let us then as one man arise, and without presuming to say in what manner God's purposes for the world are to be accomplished, or pronouncing in any way as to the time and season of our Lord's return, but ever lovingly waiting for his appearing, let us, at the risk of the world's ridicule, not be ashamed to say that the business immediately laid to our hand is to face the heathenism of 1000 millions of our fellow-creatures who have never yet heard the Gospel. What! Shall experts tell us there are 160 millions who at this hour bear the name of "Reformed," and shall the enterprise be considered extravagant? Rather let us sound the trumpet throughout Christendom, and summon these millions to the rescue. Did not Jesus love us, seek us in our misery, and die for us? Has his eye ceased to rest on us one day since He went to heaven? And shall his last request fall on unbelieving and reluctant ears? The Lord forbid. Let our compassionate eye then rest on the nations whom as his inheritance He has entrusted to us, lying in ignorance, weltering in sin, and crushed under the bondage of man's great adversary, and hasten to have our place among those of whom it is said, "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of Him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace; that bringeth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation; that saith unto Zion, thy God reigneth!" "Verily, I say unto you, if ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed, ye shall say unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place, and it shall remove, AND NOTHING SHALL BE IMPOSSIBLE UNTO YOU."

BIBLE STUDIES.—16.

"Enoch walked with God."—GEN. v. 22—24.

THIS implies—

(1) Agreement. "Can two walk together except they be agreed?" (Amos iii. 3). "God hath reconciled us to Himself by Jesus Christ" (2 Cor. v. 18; Mal. ii. 6).

(2) Friendship. (To go before is presumption; to follow is blessed, but to walk with Him is to enjoy his companionship, and to catch the softest tones of his voice.) "I have set the Lord alway before me: because He is at my right hand, I shall not be moved" (Ps. xvi. 8). "Come with Me." "Come, my beloved, let us go forth" (Cant. iv. 8, vii. 11, 12). "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear Him; and He will show them his covenant" (Ps. xxv. 14). "Enoch . . . prophesied . . . saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints," &c. (Jude 14, 15). "There is a Friend that sticketh closer than a brother" (Prov. xviii. 24). "When thou passest through the waters I will be with thee," &c. (Isa. xliii. 2).

(3) Abandonment to his will for us. "I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not" (Isa. xlii. 16). "He knoweth the way that I take" (Job xxiii. 10). "He shall choose our inheritance for us" (Ps. xlvii. 4). "They thirsted not when He led them through the deserts" (Isa. xlviii. 21). "He led them forth by the right way, that they might go to a city of habitation" (Ps. cvii. 7).

(4) Seeing things from the same standpoint. "Jesus . . . for the joy that was set before Him, endured the cross, despising the shame" (Heb. xii. 2). "They departed . . . rejoicing that they were counted worthy to suffer shame for his name" (Acts v. 41).

"Everyone that is called by my name . . . I have created him for my glory" (Isa. xliii. 7). "Ye are bought with a price; therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's" (1 Cor. vi. 20). "Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life or by death. For to me to live is Christ" (Phil. i. 20, 21). "The heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment . . . but my salvation shall be for ever" (Isa. li. 6). "We look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal" (2 Cor. iv. 18).

(5) Stedfast abiding. "Enoch walked with God . . . 300 years" (ver. 22). (Surely the Lord who kept his servant faithful all that time can keep us during our shorter pilgrimage.) "He will keep the feet of his saints" (1 Sam. ii. 9). "Able to keep you from falling" (Jude 24).

(6) Growing likeness to God. "The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day" (Prov. iv. 18). "Changed into the same image from glory to glory" (2 Cor. iii. 18). "All . . . wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth" (Luke iv. 22). "Thy lips, O my spouse, drop as the honeycomb" (Cant. iv. 11). (Contrast Rom. iii. 13, 14.) "His voice was as the sound of many waters" (Rev. i. 15). "The voice of a great multitude . . . the voice of many waters" (Rev. xix. 6).

(7) No fear in death. "By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death" (Heb. xi. 5). "Whosoever liveth and believeth in Me shall never die" (John xi. 26). "I will come again, and receive you unto Myself" (John xiv. 3). (He who has walked with us all the way will Himself take us to walk with Him in glory).

For the Young.

A SERMON ON THE BEACH.

My name is Gladys, I am ten years old, and I am writing a little bit of my life that other little girls who read it may find out something which has made me very happy.

I have a little brother named Christopher, who is two years younger than I am; so I am his example, as mother says, but I am sorry to say I am sometimes a very bad example for him. I do not mind telling you now how I sometimes used to teach him to do naughty things, although I was two years older.

One day when mother was going out, she came to the school-room where we were doing our lessons, and said, "Good-bye, my darlings; when you have done your lessons you may go for a walk, but do not go into the drawing-room while I am away." I think mother said this because Chris is rather a romp; sometimes he goes in and dances on the couch and disarranges the pillows, and makes it very untidy, so that when visitors come, it looks more like a play room than a drawing-room. Well, when lessons were over I wanted dreadfully to do just what mother had told me not to. I don't know why; I suppose the devil tries to make one feel like that. So I said to Chris, "You may just come with me into the drawing-room for a few minutes, if you are good."

Now, when we got in, what should we see on a little table but a dessert plate, with a beautiful yellow pear on it!

I thought how nice it would taste, and instead of running away from it. I looked at it again and again, and I thought, "Mother will be angry if she finds it out, but she will forgive me after."

Then I took a great bite out of it, and gave it to Chris, and he bit too; so of course after that it was of no good to leave it, and we ate it up.

When mother came home she said, "I have got something nice for good children," and she went into the drawing-room.

When she came back she brought the empty plate, and said, "Do either of you know anything of the pear I left on this plate, which was for you?"

I said, "No, mother," but when she turned to Chris, he got very red, and began to cry, so it was all found out.

Then mother talked to me about the sin of telling a lie, and said I must ask God to forgive me. I did ask Him that night, but instead of being happy again, I often felt quite miserable, when I heard about God, because I was not sure He had forgiven me, and besides that I felt that He knew of a lot of other naughty things, such as looking over the book sideways when I said my lessons, and altering the marks when our governess had gone. And though I always ask God to forgive me at night, I never felt quite sure whether He did, and I used to think, if I tried dreadfully hard to be good, perhaps He would when I died, but after I had tried a day or two, I got as naughty as ever, and so I often felt as miserable as a little girl can feel.

Now I am going to tell you how I got to be much happier, and to find it easier to be good.

Last August we all went down to Eastbourne. It was great fun playing on the beach, and running away from the big waves. I was doing this one day when a great many children, close by, began to sing, and a gentleman brought me a hymn paper, and asked me to go and sit down with the other children. He asked Chris too, but he said "No, thank you, I want to play." I sat down in a big ring, and after we had sung a hymn, a gentleman gave out the text, "And washed us from our sins in his own blood." He asked the big boys and girls who knew grammar, what tense the word "washed" was. We said, "Past tense." He said, "Oh, then, it is all done, is it not?" Then he told us that if we trust Jesus, and believe what He says, all the naughty things we have done are forgiven, and that we need not wait till we die to see if God will forgive us, because Jesus Christ has washed all those sins away. You may guess I was glad to hear this, because now I could try to be good without thinking of all those past naughty things, which made me think it was no good to try.

The next day I got Chris to come and listen too, and we learned a great many more things. One was, not to try to be good in our own strength, but to let Jesus help us, and that will keep us from doing naughty things; because He is so strong, He can send the devil away.

I must close, for my hand aches with so much writing; but I hope it will make some little boy or girl happy, to know that all their naughty things are forgiven them when they believe in Jesus Christ. If they go to the sea-side this summer, I hope they will look out for a children's service on the beach; if they see a great crowd of children, they need only go up to it, and some one will give them a hymn paper directly, and there they will learn more than I can teach them.

Gladys.

MR. TOYE AND HIS ORPHANS.

The trial of faith, the buffeting of the enemy, and the faithfulness of God which Mr. Toye has experienced during the last fifteen months, are in a measure set forth in his annual statement of work for his orphan children, which now lies before us. The little book purposes to be a report; but, if the truth is to be told, Mr. Toye cannot write such a document any more than he can ask for means to maintain his large family of one hundred and twenty-four little lads and lassies. What then do its contents consist of? It is in the form of a diary, and in it are described with more or less minuteness the condition of the home from day to day, the needs of the children, and the sources from which needed succour came.

The result is that the simple statements of fact, are far more eloquent than the finest "report" that could be written. "Give us this day our daily bread," the children pray. Here we are practically made to understand how that prayer has been answered. With regard to how the daily bread and the many things which children require have come, we dare not use such words as "wonderful," and "astonishing," although sometimes professed believers are surprised when prayers receive immediate answer. But that the needful supplies have always come, and often just as they were needed, and that the children have never missed a meal, are all here duly recorded. We cannot do better than present a few of Mr. Toye's entries:—

Nov. 19.—Nothing came in yesterday. This morning I received from Bonchurch 30s. for the orphans and 10s. for my own use. From Lewisham Hill four flannel petticoats, two chemises, two skirts, three pairs of stays, two scarves, and a pinafore.

Nov. 26.—Only 5s. 6½d. has come in for three days, and we are greatly tried; this morning I received from Tottenham £2 10s.; from London, 5s.; box at gate, 2s. 6d. This was most acceptable help.

Nov. 30.—Box at gate, 1d.

Dec. 1.—Only 1d. in hand, found in the box yesterday, to begin this month. From New Cross, 14s.; from Lewisham, twenty quarts of milk; from West Wycham, 49 lb. sugar.

Thus day by day the entries go on, sometimes showing "much worry from the enemy," through an almost empty storehouse, and sometimes an abundance of "corn and wine." Mr. Toye's requirements are evidently drawn from a wide area. Dundee thinks of him, Cornwall does not forget him, and the South of France sends liberally. He has many kind friends in Greenwich, Lee, and Blackheath, who evidently well know the innumerable things five-year-olds' require.

The little book begins and ends with praise. It is a striking commentary and exemplification upon the word of truth: "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." God bless Mr. Toye and his dear children, we say; we hope our readers will add a practical "Amen."

A YEAR OF LIFE-BOAT WORK.—The sixty-second annual report of the Royal National Life-boat Institution states that, notwithstanding the unusual absence of continued violent gales, hundreds of valuable lives were rescued by the life-boats, and many a family thereby saved from desolation and ruin. At the close of 1885 the number of life-boats under the management of the Committee was 290, through the instrumentality of which 371 lives were saved during the year, besides 29 vessels. Rewards were also granted by the Institution for the rescue, by shore-boats, of 184 other persons, making a grand total of 555 lives rescued within the year by means of the Society. The Committee make a strong appeal to the British public for pecuniary help to enable them to carry on their most responsible work. The office of the Institution is 14, John-street, Adelphi, W.C.

THE LOST SPRING.

Beaufort stands above our valley,
Stately ramparts fair to see;
And the Gervane far below it,
After rains it runneth free.

But for months no rain had fallen
On the parched and thirsty land,
Lay the pebbles of the Gervane
Waterless as desert sand.

The one fountain dwindled daily,
Scantly drop by drop it fell,
Scarce remained in all the village
Water in the deepest well.

Begging water, buying water,
Went the women all around,
When one day a man came running—
"Come and see what I have found!"

Down the hill he led them quickly,
Right across the river bed,
Paused where tumbled rocks lay scattered,
Huge blocks meeting overhead.

Stooped and showed where, in the shadow
Cool and dim, there lay a pool,
Brimming silent in the darkness,
Ever flowing, ever full!

As they drank, rejoiced and marvelled,
Thoughtfully remarked the Maire,
Half ashamed he seemed to say it,
"Always there was water there,

"Till the miners came who promised
To our doors its streams to bring,
And with mining and with blasting
They just covered up the spring."

Said a woman gaunt and haggard,
Weary feet with toiling lame,
As her dull eye glowed and softened,
"Why 'twas here my mother came!

"Here I played a child beside her
Ere my time for toiling came,
She is gone to rest, poor mother!
But the spring is still the same."

. . . .

Sisters, brothers, darkness lowers,
Hearts grow faint and hands grow weak,
Wander not afar for comfort,
Let me tell you where to seek.

Seek it where your fathers found it:
Jesus Christ is still the same,
Yesterday, to-day, for ever;
'Twas to Him your mother came.

E'en should haunting doubts assail you,
And you know not where to flee,
Kneel again, and say "Our Father,"
Learned beside your mother's knee.

Lo! in Him all power is centred,
Light from darkness He can bring,
Parchèd sand or rocky mountain
But conceal the ancient spring.

At his word burst forth the waters
Whence our fathers drank of yore;
Stoop and taste the stream He giveth,
Drink, and ye shall thirst no more.

As brave Luther in his cloister
Flung the tomes of man aside,
Seized and read the long-lost Bible
Till his soul was satisfied:

So no Gospel new is needed,
Hear again the words that save:
"God so loved a world of sinners
That his only Son He gave."

Listen to the Son's last message,
From the glory by the throne:
"Living waters I give freely,
Come and take, O thirsty one!"

Earthly cisterns all are failing,
Earthly lights are growing dim,
Ere the darkness closes round thee,
Brothers, sisters, come to Him.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS.

I.—DIVINE SOVEREIGNTY.

ANYONE whose mind is open to the influences at work in modern theological discussion cannot fail to note that theories are advanced, ideas promulgated, and positions assumed, tending to a repudiation of truths which lie at the very heart of a Biblical theology. The domination of Romanism over the minds of men has gone, we hope never to return; but in its place a one-sided anti-spiritual Rationalism is threatening a similar supremacy. The sixteenth century freed us from the bondage of the Pope of Rome; in our own day we need to be delivered from the pope who, as Luther said, resides in every man's heart. We live in an age of latitudinarian and æsthetic cant, when, under the demand, waxing louder daily, for a reconstruction of theology in harmony with the liberal tendencies of the times, there is a lurking half-concealed scorn for the treasures of religious thought that have been the Church's heritage for centuries.

It is a curious and suggestive fact in the history of theological movements that when a swerve was made from an historically Biblical position, it always resulted in opposition to, or at least depreciation of, the Reformers and the Reformation theology. The Anglo-Catholic movement of forty-five years ago, with its diverging lines towards Rome and scepticism, had little good to say of Calvin or Luther. And to this day the type of Protestantism prevalent at Oxford is miserably limp and pithless. In much the same way the advocates of the "newer theology" speak in contemptuous terms of the heroic intellects that in other days piloted the Church through stormy waters, and talk of sweeping away the "rubbish of Prostestant tradition and dogma"!

In the midst of religious and philosophic controversy, when all sorts of speculators are abroad, from the phrasemongers of an artistic humanitarianism to the devotees of an effeminate and worthless sacerdotalism, a voice ought surely to be uplifted in favour of a return to sober, Biblical lines, as manifested in the typically Pauline ideas of sin, grace, faith, righteousness, and Divine sovereignty. The articula stantis aut labentis ecclesiæ would need to be emphasised afresh. For, after all, Romanism and Rationalism have a common meeting-place; both alike find their raison d'être in that spirit of self-righteousness which is native to the human heart. A great deal of present-day thinking tends in the direction of man's glorification, making all things in heaven and earth subserve his interests, and teaching the fatal error that God exists for man, not man for God.

In a succeeding paper we may be permitted to show how this tendency leaves its vitiating tracks in the whole region of theology. Meanwhile, we contend that the corrective is to be found in the Pauline conception of the Divine sovereignty. God is the Sovereign of the universe—this is a foundation truth which must not be lost sight of by any system of religious truth professing to have a Biblical basis. It is the grand central point of Paul's teaching. To deny it is to disparage God's rights, and to make little of God's prerogatives. If God has a purpose of mercy towards a man, it is not based on any characteristic marking him out from his fellow-men, or any amiability of disposition or cultivation of intellect; it springs simply and solely from free and sovereign mercy. And this is a truth most unpalatable to the carnal appetite, and most unpleasant to the carnal eye; for it sets aside man's goodness, and refuses to recognise man's righteousness. And yet it is in the matchless display of his sovereignty in the salvation of his people that his character as a God of love, and mercy, and grace, shines out most resplendently, and upon this sovereignty the Church of God grounds her eternal safety: "The Lord is our Judge; the Lord is our Lawgiver; the Lord is our King;" and in this threefold capacity, "He will save us."

The transgression of the law brings inevitably in its train the penalty of death—"the wages of sin is death." In Eden, Adam heard the terms of his probation: "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Be it observed that the transaction in the Garden was strictly juridical and governmental. "Thou shalt" and "thou shalt not," express the fundamental relation of God to man; on the one hand right of government, on the other, obligation to obedience. Our representative parent fails to stand the trial, incurring thereby the threatened woe. And now only one course seems open to God as Judge—the infliction of the curse on the transgressor. But at this point the sovereignty of love steps in, not in any way to jar upon, or modify, or tone down the sovereignty of justice, but rather to conserve and protect and glorify it. Love, even though it be Divine, dare not violate law. It acts in a far grander and nobler way; it transcends law, paying all due homage to it; comprehending it in the sweep of its beneficence, and encompassing it round about with glory and honour.

The might of love's sovereignty is put forth for the sinner's rescue. Were the sinner left to his fate, to sin's righteous doom, there would be no claim interfered with, no law violated, no right in the entire universe denied or contravened. It would be simply the carrying out of God's declared and holy administration. But love's eye is dimmed with tears of pity as it falls upon the sinner, writhing under his just condemnation, and love's hand is stretched forth to pluck the sinner out of the pit of death, and give him such a standing in the sight of law as will enable him to challenge in triumph the uttermost powers of earth, and hell, and death. Love incarnates itself in the person of God's Son. Love finds in Him all that it needs, for it finds, linked together in indissoluble union, infinite compassion for the guilty, infinite love to the Father, and infinite reverence for the Father's law. In due time the Son of God appears "in the likeness of sinful flesh," having sin sovereignly imputed to Him, and having sin's grave constantly before Him. He appears that He may uphold the Divine sovereignty, honouring it in the sin-expiating death of the cross, and glorifying it in the eternal salvation of all his covenant seed.

Here, at length, in the person and work of Christ is found the solution of eternity's problem—how everlasting love can operate in the perfect fulness and freeness of its most beneficent range, yet so as not to interfere with or mitigate in the least degree the righteous and inflexible demands of everlasting law; how mercy can reach its climax of most absolute and most unconditioned sway, yet the claims of justice be respected and maintained; how the guilty can be acquitted and accepted in the court of heaven, yet the authority of the Most High as Sovereign Judge be established upon an eternal and irrefragable basis. Calvary links earth and heaven together. It is the only spot in the whole creation where God and man can meet in peace, where the Offended and the offender can join in a vow of abiding friendship.

He who would read the Cross aright must see in it not only the infliction of the law's curse, and the execution of the law's penalty, but also the evidence of love whose birth-time was eternity, and whose height and breadth and depth no creature can ever span. And thus encircling that wondrous scene on Calvary's hill—that scene in which the dread realities of death and judgment played such a terrible part—is the bright rainbow of Divine mercy ever widening, ever expanding, sending its beams the wide world over, as the Victor's dying cry rings out, "It is finished."

I dare not close without adding a practical word. And herein it will be seen how a consistent and Scriptural representation of dogma can afford the only true ground on which to base exhortations to practical piety. For in this truth of the Divine sovereignty have not the heralds of the Cross a powerful fulcrum wherewith they may reach the hearts and consciences of men, appealing in language at once direct, Scriptural, invincible, and fitted to awaken a quick response in every loyal soul? Shall not the appeal take some such form as this: If the Sovereign Lord and God Himself has laid the basis of your eternal happiness through the darkness and gloom of nature, and the blood and tears of his own dear Son; if his heart was sore vexed, hearing Immanuel's bitter cry wailing out from the accursed tree, that your heart might be filled with joy unspeakable; if He spared not heaven's best Treasure and heaven's most precious Gift that you might become the inheritor of immeasurable riches; if He has done all this, not of necessity, but as actuated by his free, unmerited grace, according to the sovereign purpose of his will, what shall be said as to your return for such an amazing display of love? What but this?—"Let everyone that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity;" "denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world."

YOUNG WOMEN IN RESTAURANTS.

MISS GOUGH has taken another step forward in her work among young women in London. By the kind help of her unfailing friend, Mr. Samuel Morley, that part of the house which bears his name (14, John-street, Bedford-row), below the rooms hitherto in use, has been secured. This has enabled Miss Gough to fit up two rooms as sleeping apartments, where young women engaged in refreshment bars, &c., and without homes, as well as any who may suddenly find themselves out of a situation, can be sure of a safe and pleasant place of refuge. This will doubtless prove an unspeakable boon to many friendless young people in our great city. We understand that Miss Gough requires help in order to complete the furnishing of these new rooms; we trust it will speedily be given, so that the added accommodation may be used to the fullest advantage in sheltering from harm and from temptation these hard-working servants of an exacting and too often unsympathetic public.

A few evenings ago our representative was present at Morley House when Miss Mary Davies very kindly sang a number of pieces to a goodly gathering of young women and other friends of the work. All were greatly charmed and thrilled with the song of Miss Davies, and at the close she was very heartily thanked for giving her toiling sisters the benefit of her great musical gifts.

IRELAND AND ROME.

WE are in receipt of several letters on the Irish question now before Parliament, but we cannot afford the space for a correspondence so voluminous as this would necessarily be. Party politics are not within our province, and we could not ourselves take up either side in this controversy without seriously interfering with the design and intention of this paper.

We must, however, urge upon our readers of all opinions in this matter, that the true question is not Home, but Rome, and we will bring a few plain facts before them as to what is the present temper of Rome. What it has been in the past let the Holy Inquisition bear witness. Read "Rome the Murderess," reprinted from our "Letters from Abroad," April 29 (at this office, 1s. 6d. per 100). We ask a careful perusal of "The Voice of History" (p. 8); and in addition to that we quote the following contemporary declarations.

The Roman Catholic Bishop Ryan, speaking at Philadelphia quite recently, said:—

> We maintain that the Church of Rome is intolerant—that is, that she uses every means in her power to root out heresy. But her intolerance is the result of her infallibility. She alone has the right to be intolerant because she alone has the truth. The Church tolerates heretics where she is obliged to do so, but she hates them with a deadly hatred, and uses all her powers to annihilate them. If ever the Catholics should become a considerable majority, which in time will surely be the case, then will religious freedom in the Republic of the United States come to an end. Our enemies know how she treated heretics in the middle ages, and how she treats them to-day where she has the power. We no more think of denying these historic facts than we do of blaming the Holy God and the princes of the Church for what they have thought fit to do.

In the interests of true Christianity it is most desirable that England should know the line that will be taken by the Roman Catholic clergy if they can. Here is one expression of their feeling:—

> If there is to be but one Catholic country in Europe, Ireland will be that country. We will make a clean sweep of heresy from sea to sea in three provinces. We will give you the alternative to conform or leave the country.

The Daily News attributes "religious hatred" to the Protestants who oppose the Bill now before Parliament; and Mr. Campbell Bannerman has ingenuously asked in the House of Commons why, if the Protestant majority have not persecuted the Romish minority in England, should we suppose that the Romish majority will persecute the Protestant minority in Ireland. The above quotations sufficiently show on which side the religious hatred lies, and equally answer the ingenious question of Mr. Campbell Bannerman.

THE CONGO has been brought very near to us, says The (Chicago) Standard, by the visit of Dr. A. Sims. He speaks with all the force and feeling of an eyewitness and hearty participant in the work in Central Africa. The Gospel has already accomplished much on the Congo, not only in winning souls and sending them out in the Master's spirit to win others, but in awakening an inquiry among the people respecting truth as it is in Jesus, in making gentle and docile these wild men, and restraining them from barbarous practices.

SOUTHSEA MISSION, PORTSMOUTH.—Mr. John Denning, Ebenezer Cottage, Inglis-road, Havelock-park, Southsea, writes:—During the past five years we have had the privilege granted us by the town authorities to pitch a tent on Southsea-common for Gospel services. The blessing given during the past has been great, and there are many in our midst to-day who are living witnesses to the power of God to save and to keep, besides the numbers who have gone to other parts of the world and are bearing testimony for Him. Being stimulated by the past and strengthened for the future, we go forth expecting to reap more abundant blessing than in any previous year. We need funds to commence with, even to get the tent repaired, so that we shall be thankful to receive freewill offerings.

THIS is a very remarkable book, and well deserves the careful consideration of all who would possess a clue to present political complications. The revelations it makes are most astounding, and could hardly be credited were it not that the writer, having been himself a pervert to the Church of Rome, is intimately acquainted with the hidden workings of that system, and possessed, while amongst them, exceptional opportunities of knowing many of their prominent leaders.

The book presents us with a vivid picture of the activity of Rome in its ceaseless efforts to reconquer England, and that chiefly through the subtle intrigues of the Jesuits in their control of political parties. According to the writer, neither party is free from blame in this matter; both the late Lord Beaconsfield, as well as the present Prime Minister, are represented as more or less tools in the hands of these crafty conspirators, whose aim is to overturn everything that stands in their way until, to quote the words of Cardinal Manning, "the whole world is open to the Church's will." To do this, the overthrow of English Protestantism is essential. "Conquered in England, it is conquered throughout the world. Once overthrown here, all is but a war of detail. England is the key of the whole position of modern error."

The present Prime Minister is well known to have advanced more than any other politician has ever done, the interests of the Romanising party in the Church of England; it has been a puzzle to many how he has at the same time maintained his position as the great trusted leader of the English Nonconformists. The clue to the solution of this difficulty, given by Lord R. Montagu, is that contained in a remark made to him when a Roman Catholic, in 1873, by Cardinal Manning, that Mr. Gladstone "would be wanted in Opposition to take up a high Protestant position, and lead the Nonconformists." Lord R. Montagu adds: "That was doubtless the reason that Mr. Gladstone shortly afterwards wrote his pamphlets on 'Vaticanism,'" and elsewhere quotes the opinion of a far-seeing Roman Catholic, that they were written "as a blind."

One effect produced upon the mind by reading this book is the suspicion that we are all much more in the hands of Romish manipulators than we have any idea of. It is not only that "Home Rule" is part of Rome's tactics in bringing about the destruction of Protestantism which she has so at heart, but that there is hardly such a thing as truth or trustworthiness to be met with in the political world. The professions of politicians often are, and are intended to be, the very opposite to their real aims. There is a fearful picture set forth in the volume of the influences brought to bear upon members of Parliament to force them into the committal of some act which may give the wire-pullers a hold over them.

But the book itself must be read in order to be understood; undoubtedly its publication is one of the most remarkable revelations of the springs of political action that has yet been made to the world. Lord Robert Montagu deserves the sympathy of all honest men, and above all, of all Christians who have the cause of the Reformation at heart, for so fearless an exposure of the crafty working of the Romish system.

* RECENT EVENTS AND A CLUE TO THEIR SOLUTION. By the Right Hon. Lord ROBERT MONTAGU. 12s. Hodder & Stoughton.

THE MORMONS are said to be moving toward Mexico. Over one hundred families have already arrived in the Mexican State of Chihuahua, and more are on the way. It is said that these emigrants are from towns and villages in New Mexico and Arizona, and that they do not disguise the fact that they are fleeing to Mexico to avoid imprisonment under recent laws, which they are satisfied will shortly be enforced in other territories than Utah.

SCHOOL OF INDUSTRY FOR THE BLIND, BRISTOL.—We are requested to state that there will be several vacancies in this valuable Institution after the Midsummer vacation. The vacancies will be chiefly for girls, and the Committee are anxious that those admitted should be between nine and twelve years of age. Girls, as well as boys, usually remain for seven years. The girls are taught the Braille system of reading, writing, and music, singing, chair caning, knitting and fancy work: whilst the boys are taught piano, organ, piano tuning, singing, basket work, mat making—as they show aptitude for music or trade. The great object of the Institution is to fit the pupils to face successfully the difficulties that meet them commencing to earn their own bread. There is a half-yearly payment of £5 5s. which Boards of Guardians are authorised to pay in cases where the candidates for admission are very poor. The Secretary will furnish such informa-

PROTESTANTISM & ROMANISM in SPAIN.

THE following is culled from a recent number of La Luz, published in Madrid:—"In the Protestant churches of Madrid, the attendance this (Passion) week has everywhere been large. Perfect peace and much spirituality characterised the proceedings throughout."

AN AWFUL CONTRAST.

We record some of the daily events furnished in the columns of the leading Madrid newspapers for the same week:—

Palm Sunday, April 18.—Assassination of the Bishop of Madrid by Padre Galleote, a Roman Catholic priest.

Monday.—A lady was brutally beaten in a church by Sr. Lacasas, the parish priest of Vendrell.

Tuesday.—A canon, who had been once in prison, attempted to assassinate the Bishop of Menorca.

Wednesday. — The schoolmaster of Esquer was to-day murdered by the parish priest.

Thursday.—To-day, a bomb was exploded in the church of San Luis, Madrid, seriously wounding a number of persons. Another bomb was exploded in the church of the Hospitalicos, Granada; many fainted and suffered bruises, &c.

Good Friday.—Desiring to prevent any disturbance in his church, the parish priest of San José, Madrid, gave notice that admission to the special services of the day would be by ticket only. Notwithstanding this precaution, a row took place among the worshippers, and one man mortally stabbed another before the altar, almost slashing his victim in twain. The usual procession for "the burial of our Lord" was consequently stopped. It is also reported that one reverend gentleman has stabbed another in a dispute.

Saturday.—The orthodox, after yesterday's drunken debauch, in honour of La Veronica, are preparing for the great bullfight to be held to-morrow—Ascension-day. Great lamentation among the faithful, on account of the celebrated image of the Virgin de la Cabera having been found upon the floor of the church, well-nigh burnt to ashes.

Such is the awful record of Romanism in Spain during the Semana Santa, or Holy Week, a time when Roman Catholics are supposed to be on their best behaviour. The only hope of the country is in the spread of the Gospel, and we rejoice that the preaching of the Word and the sale of the Holy Scriptures steadily progress throughout the land.

WORK AMONG THE SANTHALS.

DEAR SIR,—I have arrived in England, having left for a short time our interesting work amongst the Santhals. Since my departure one or two have been baptized. Last year twenty-seven confessed Christ by baptism. I commend them to the prayers of Christians at home that "Christ may be formed in them," and that they may prove to be genuine cases.

Mr. Haegert is now busy building a new mission-house at an out-station twenty miles from Bethel. We much need another missionary to labour there. I have had much encouragement in my work in the boys' school. The itinerating work in tents is most interesting. Miss Adam and I have visited at least 450 villages during the last three winters. When in tent the winter before last we baptized one man; when he returned home his wife shut him out. At that time they were in great trouble, having been robbed right and left by Bengalis. Mr. Haegert rode over to help them in the matter. After this his wife received her husband, and has since been baptized. They have also given us two of their boys for my school; the elder one has been decidedly converted since coming to us. This man is doing his best to bring others to Christ, and three families in his village have since been baptized. He is now employed as an evangelist.

Please pray for an increase of spiritual power in our work among the Santhals.—Yours,

EMMELINE HOLLYER.

THE VOICE OF HISTORY.

IN 1577, Pope Gregory XIII. issued his Bull to all "the Prelates, the entire clergy, nobility, and people of Ireland," urging them to aid James Fitzmaurice in his insurrection against Queen Elizabeth, and giving a plenary indulgence to all who should support Fitzmaurice, "by arms or any other means."

On April 18, 1600, Clement issued a similar Bull, urging the Irish to join in the rebellion of Hugh O'Neill. (See the R. C. Historian, McGeoghegan.)

On September 22, 1606, Paul V. issued a Brief condemning the Oath of Allegiance to James I.

A similar Bull was published by Urban VIII. on May 30, 1626, in the reign of Charles I. (See Foulis' "History.")

Hume relates that Pope Innocent X. sent to Ireland "a Nuncio, Rinuccini, who summoned an assembly of the Roman Catholic clergy at Waterford, and engaged them to declare against that pacification which the Civil Council had concluded with their Sovereign."

In the Papal "Instructions" furnished to Rinuccini, Innocent X. referred to the rising of the Roman Catholics in 1641, when, without warning, the cruel and atrocious massacre of the Protestants in Ireland was foully perpetrated. This rising Innocent X. stated "was at first doubtful and tumultuous, but was gradually organised into a well-arranged movement by the prelates and other clergy, who willingly gave both advice and assistance."

In these "Instructions," given by Innocent X. to Rinuccini, we find that Pope claiming Ireland as "being an ancient possession of the Apostolic See, the sovereignty of which Pope Adrian IV. had conferred upon Henry II., but which sovereignty Henry's successors had forfeited by violation of the conditions attached to the gift." We further find amongst the "demands" which that Pope puts forward on the part of the Irish Roman Catholics, the remarkable claim "that a Parliament should be held in Ireland distinct from that of England." Other demands directed to be urged were "that the ecclesiastical hierarchy and the religious orders should be maintained in their ancient condition; that the bishops should enjoy the Church property to the exclusion of the heretics; that the Viceroy and other governors and ministers of the island should be Catholics; that all the property taken from the Catholics should be restored."

THE OBJECTIONABLE CLAIMS URGED BY THE PAPAL POWERS, REFERRED TO ABOVE, HAVE NEVER BEEN REALLY RELINQUISHED; ALTHOUGH ENGLISHMEN ARE OFTEN INDUCED TO BELIEVE THAT SUCH DEMANDS ARE NO LONGER PREFERRED.

Dr. Moriarty, late R. C. Bishop of Kerry, stated, "There has been no concordat ceding the property of the Catholic Church to the British Crown, or sanctioning its secularisation. Our right is in abeyance, it is unimpaired."—Tablet, March 30, 1867.

In 1729, "the Popish Bishops of Ireland applied for and obtained a Bull from the then Pope, to raise money by the sale of indulgences, to be speedily applied to restore James III. to his right, and to put his Majesty George II. and all the royal family to the sword."

In 1829, the Roman Catholic Relief Act was granted upon the express assurances of the Romish Prelates, that Ireland would be therewith content, and that henceforth loyalty, peace and concord should everywhere prevail.

The Irish Roman Catholic Bishops at that time solemnly declared on oath that the Laws and Canons of the Church of Rome, which conflict with the authority of the State, "were not in force in their country, nor binding upon themselves, and never would be received by them;"

That they sanctioned the principle of mixed education, as then established in Ireland;

"That they would defend, to the utmost of their power, the settlement and arrangement of property in this country as established by the laws now in being."

They "also solemnly abjured all intention to subvert the Protestant Church Establishment, for the purpose of substituting a Catholic Establishment in its stead;" and further "swore that they would not exercise any privilege to disturb and weaken the Protestant Religion and Protestant Government in Ireland."

Yet Cardinal Manning, in addressing the third Provincial (Romish) Council of Westminster, said: "This nineteenth century will make a great epoch in the history of the Church. . . IT IS GOOD FOR US TO BE HERE IN ENGLAND. IT IS YOURS, RIGHT REV. FATHERS, TO SUBJUGATE AND TO SUBDUE, TO BEND AND TO BREAK THE WILL OF AN IMPERIAL RACE, THE WILL WHICH, AS THE WILL OF ROME OF OLD, RULES OUR NATIONS AND PEOPLE, invincible and inflexible. . . . Surely a soldier's eye and a soldier's heart would choose by intuition this field of England for the warfare of faith. . . . IT IS THE HEAD OF PROTESTANTISM, THE CENTRE OF ITS MOVEMENTS, AND THE STRONGHOLD OF ITS POWERS. WEAKENED IN ENGLAND, IT IS PARALYSED EVERYWHERE; CONQUERED IN ENGLAND, IT IS CONQUERED THROUGHOUT THE WORLD."—"Sermons on Ecclesiastical Subjects," by H. E. Manning, vol. i., pp. 166, 157.

DISESTABLISHMENT OF THE CHURCH OF IRELAND.

The funds taken from the Protestant Church have been devoted almost exclusively to the advancement of Romish interests, in direct violation of the 68th Section of the Act of 1869.

By the Act of 1869 itself, the sum of £427,996 was granted out of these surplus funds as a permanent endowment of the Roman Catholic College of Maynooth.

A portion of the surplus funds of the Disestablished Protestant Church of Ireland was granted by the Act of 1878 to the Commissioners for Irish Intermediate Education, and, by the payment of result fees, has practically effected an endowment of the Roman Catholic Monastic and Conventual Schools in Ireland.

Again, in the year 1881 the sanction of Parliament was given to the Royal University (Ireland) Act, by which an endowment of £20,000 a year, to be taken from the Irish Church surplus, was granted to the new University—an institution specially constituted for the advancement of Romish education.

ALL THESE MEASURES OF PACIFICATION HAVE FAILED TO ALLAY THE SPIRIT OF DISCONTENT AND DISLOYALTY. EACH CONCESSION HAS BROUGHT FORTH NEW AND MORE INTOLERABLE DEMANDS. THE CRIMINAL AGITATION THAT HAS BEEN CARRIED ON FOR SO MANY YEARS HAS RECEIVED, NOT ONLY THE TACIT APPROVAL, BUT EVEN THE AVOWED SANCTION OF THE IRISH R. C. ECCLESIASTICS.

In 1873 Cardinal Cullen and Archbishop Leahy declared on oath that the Papal Bull "In Cœna Domini," which excommunicates all Protestants as Heretics, was still in force.

In the Synod held at Maynooth, on September 7, 1875, many Bishops expressed opinions favourable to the Fenians. "The (R. C.) Bishop of Meath held that it was not expedient to condemn the Fenians by a special decree of the then present Synod, and he was supported in his opinion by the (R. C.) Bishop of Ferns. The (R. C.) Bishop of Cork then expressed his opinion that in the letters to be addressed by the Synod to the people, the Fenians should be treated with great charity and kindness (Magna caritate et benignitate), and to this many of the Fathers signified their assent."—"Acta et Decreta Synodi." Browne and Nolan, Dublin, 1877.

Catholic Progress, Feb , 1881, states, "The woes of Ireland are due to one single cause—the existence of Protestantism in Ireland. Away with the propagandists of Protestantism, and Ireland would be saved. Unless Ireland is governed by England as a Catholic nation, and full scope given to the development of the Catholic Church in Ireland by the appropriation to the Catholic religion of the funds that go to religion, THE RECURRENCE OF SUCH EVENTS AS ARE NOW TAKING PLACE IN IRELAND CANNOT BE PREVENTED." And, again, the March number (1881) of the same periodical states:—"Would that every Protestant meeting-house were swept from the land; then would Ireland recover herself! Outrages would then be unknown, for there would be no admixture of misbelievers with her (Rome's) champions."

The Rev. Mr. Cantwell, of Thurles, in addressing the meeting of the Irish Convention in Dublin, &c , September, 1881, stated that he was "expressing the sentiments of the (R. C.) Archbishop of Cashel," and urged the Convention "to support and sustain the Land League, which had struck down and would ultimately destroy landlordism in this country, and with it British rule."

On June 10, 1882. a Pastoral was issued by the R. C. Bishops in Ireland, in which they stated, "the object of our national movement has had the approval and blessing, not only of your priests and Bishops, but of the Sovereign Pontiff himself" (Tablet, June 17, 1882). With such incentives, is it matter of wonder that the Irish people are ready to indulge in the perpetration of crime and outrage?

"The organisation of crime and outrage in Ireland is proceeding with more rapid strides in the provinces, under the auspices of the National League, and with the benediction of the spiritual guides of the people."—Times, September 9, 1884.

The Rev. Mr. Harrington, "the head of the Roman Catholic diocesan school at Listowel, in which young men are trained for the priesthood," said, "There had been revolutions; they had heard talk of rifles and of bullets; and he would tell them that there are not many young priests in Kerry who would not be willing to lead the van in the battle-field. There was a strong feeling that a man could not be at all religious unless he was loyal, but they knew better."—Times. January 6, 1886.

On January 15, 1886, Archbishop Walsh, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, said that in the event of the issue of the elections being disregarded, "it would lead eventually, and that speedily, to one sad result. That the constitutional expression of a nation's voice was likely to be more effective for the accomplishment of its purpose than these other weapons to which even now some desperate men were waiting their opportunity to have recourse—the dagger of the assassin and those other and in some sense more fearful engines of destruction which the progress of modern science had placed in the hands of those who make no secret of the determination to seek for the last hope of freedom for Ireland, if they could not find it elsewhere, among the ruins of English cities and of English civilisation."

The R C. Prelates, no doubt, rightly judge that the transfer of the land in Ireland from the present landlords to a Roman Catholic propriety would open up a rich field for Romish exactions, and they believe that the expulsion of the Protestant landlords would remove the means of support by which the Protestant Church has hitherto been able to maintain its ground, and that rid of it they would obtain the complete submission of Ireland to Papal Rule, and the establishment of their undivided authority in that country.

Let us turn to Mr. Gladstone's pamphlet on "Vaticanism" (Murray, 1875), in which he has formally published his opinions on the Romish system. He writes, p. 111, "Of that system I must say that its influence is adverse to freedom in the State, the family, and the individual." Mr. Gladstone further asserts, p. 95: "To secure rights has been, and is, the aim of the Christian civilisation: to destroy them, and to establish the resistless, domineering action of a purely central power, is the aim of the Roman policy."

Is England willing to submit to these results? Is she now prepared to establish a separate legislative assembly in Ireland, filled with the nominees of the Romish Prelates, and to abandon the loyal and Protestant Irish to the tender mercies of Archbishop Walsh and the Land League?

The foregoing Extracts are taken from a pamphlet on "The Origin and History of the Irish Demand for a Separate Parliament," by Mr. A. H. Guinness, in which full authorities for every statement are given. This paper, under the title of "The Crisis," is issued from 11, Buckingham-street, Adelphi, London, W.C. Price 1s. per 100 copies.

NEWS FROM THE UPPER ZAMBESI.

A LETTER from M. Coillard, dated January 1, gives a dark picture of the Sesheke country. The deceit, cruelty, and blood-thirstiness of some of the chiefs is appalling. The inhabitants are in a continual state of terror and panic. Only the slaves are pleased, they have but to change masters, and then press on for their share of murder and pillage. The chiefs, in general, are friendly to the missionary party, but they are entirely at the mercy of the slaves; these may deceive, insult, or rob them, and there is no authority to appeal to, no justice executed, or protection given. M. Coillard was obliged to go alone to visit the chief, Robosi, who is said to be intelligent, but who is a vindictive tyrant, and his feet are swift to shed blood.

M. Dieterlen, another French missionary at Lessonto, gives an account of some visits to the Bassoutos. He came across a man named Jacob, who was lying on a mat in front of his hut unable to move a single finger; indeed, only his head seemed to have any life, and even then his speech was so difficult and indistinct that his wife alone understood him. After inquiry as to his condition, and expressions of sympathy, Jacob said, "Oh, do not speak to me of that, when God appears it is nothing." And it needed no words to tell that his large, brilliant, joyful eyes, and sweet smile, said more than a thousand words. Three years incapable of making the least movement, forsaken, and given up by the doctors, and that at thirty-five years of age, with a wife and children, and yet peaceful, joyous, blessing God, that is a visible proof of the power of the living God.—Journal des Missions Evangéliques.

YOUNG WOMEN OF GREAT BRITAIN.

Y.W.C.A. HEAD OFFICES.

By the good hand of God upon them, and through his manifest interposition, the Young Women's Christian Association have just made an important move forward in their growing work. While the Y.M C.A. has for some time secured the splendid Exeter Hall as an outward and visible token of its prosperity, and a rallying point for its widely-scattered forces, the sister Association has been without a common centre adequate to the necessities of the case. This lack is now in a fair way of being supplied.

The Welbeck Institute and Restaurant in Mortimer-street, W., one of the London Branches of Y.W.C.A. work, has been prospering so greatly for the past year or two that the Financial Secretary, Mr. DASHWOOD, has been casting about for some way of extending its scope and operations. It provides sleeping accommodation for some sixty young women engaged in West-end shops, and if there were room it could have as many more under its roof. Closely adjoining it there is a building that was used as a certain kind of "club," but for a considerable period it has stood empty. Mr. Dashwood conceived the idea of securing this building for an extension of the "Welbeck," and for a general headquarters for the Y.W.C.A., which now has a world-wide organisation. It is not intended to be a rallying point for London alone; this has been found for some years past in the Central Institute and Offices, 16A and 17, Old Cavendish-street. But the need has become urgent for some headquarters, like Exeter Hall, to form a centre for the benefit of young women from all parts of the world. Negotiations for the purchase of the building were entered on, and by persistent endeavour the offer of £5000 was accepted: a large sum, as it seems, but assuredly a small figure when the value of house property in that neighbourhood is taken into account. With his customary spirit of large-hearted generosity, Mr. Samuel Morley took a deep interest in the project, and at once gave £500 for the required deposit on the purchase-money, with the promise of another sum of £500 towards the capital amount.

A gathering of friends was held in one of the rooms of the newly acquired building on Tuesday afternoon last week. It was a matter of deep regret that Mr. Morley, being on a sick bed, could not be present to preside; his place was taken by Mr. T. A. DENNY, who was a very acceptable substitute. In his brief statement of facts Mr. Dashwood told of the efforts that had been made in past times to secure the building, but without avail, owing to the high price put upon it. As a purchaser could not be found, the price was at length reduced to £5000. The thing to be done now was to raise the amount of purchase money, and also the amount that would be needed for placing it in a proper state of repair for the purposes of the institution, in all £7000. He called for thirty lady volunteers to undertake the collection of £100 each towards these objects.

Addresses followed from the Chairman, Mr. S. A. Blackwood, Mr. George Williams (President of the Y.M.C.A.), Lady John Manners, Mrs. Ormiston Chant, Canon Fleming, and others. These friends expended much eloquent and earnest speech in describing the needs of the working young women of London—physical, social, mental, and spiritual; and in pleading for a generous response to this latest advance in the work of the Y.W.C A.

Those present, we understand, contributed or promised over £600, but this leaves a considerable amount yet to be made good. As this new building in Regent-street, a splendid and central situation, will be devoted to national, and we suppose international purposes, we think it has a distinct claim on the friends of the good work throughout the empire, and, indeed, throughout the world. Suitable offices will be provided for the Association, and a large wing of the building is to be adapted as a Servants' Home. There will be increased sleeping and refreshment accommodation for young women in shops, while the arrangements also include lecture hall for evangelistic meetings, class rooms, a library, and a gymnasium. On this last point Mrs. Chant waxed most pathetically eloquent, showing how much young women suffer, and how posterity must suffer, by their close confinement in daily toil, and the lack of sufficient bodily exercise. We most sincerely rejoice with our friends of the Y.W.C A. at this acquisition, and would commend the effort to the immediate co-operation of our readers everywhere.

SERVANTS' HOME.

DEAR SIR,—Your readers will, I am sure, be glad to hear that it is proposed to establish a Servants' Home, a want much felt by the Y.W.C A., in connection with the head offices, 316, Regent-street, W., where a meeting was held last Tuesday with the object of showing those interested in this Society the spacious premises obtained for the purpose of concentrating its many branches connected with the town and country.

One lady, feeling the great need of this Home, has kindly given £100; £500 more is required. This sum, we hope, will be kindly contributed, as well as the £3000 still required to pay for the new premises. Donations can be sent to, yours truly,

G. L. DASHWOOD, Hon. Sec.

A ROOT OF POVERTY.

In a paper on Pauper and Destitute Children issued by the Howard Association, London, they say:—"Emigration, whether for adults or juveniles, is not the panacea for poverty which some represent it to be. For whilst thousands may be sent out of the country, there is a constant stream of thousands of pauper foreigners into it. And so the process may go on indefinitely, without effectual diminution of the remaining mass of destitution. Further, it is often forgotten that adults are useless as emigrants, unless they qualify themselves by habits of temperance and thrift. Otherwise the process is like a mere shifting of rubbish."

The Howard Association also say, in the same paper, that "all persons desiring to diminish pauperism do well to act upon the motto that prevention is better than cure, and to ponder especially the question, What is the chief cause of destitution? It is, undoubtedly, intemperance. It is a rare thing to find a pauper who has been an habitual teetotaler. About £130,000,000 are spent in this country annually on intoxicating drink. This is nearly twenty times the amount spent in the official relief of pauperism in England and Wales. Drunkenness is the chief cause of the great mass of pauperism, accident, crime, cruelty and vice. Hence that is the greatest economy of effort which strikes at this special root of evil, by means of religious and moral persuasion, personal example, and the facilitation of rational substitutes for alcoholic indulgence.

"The recent prevalence of distress in London caused the issue of a Mansion House special appeal for funds. Some £70,000 was forthcoming in consequence Similar appeals have been made for the poor in Tyneside, Clydesdale, Midlands, and other districts. Irish poverty also raises many cries for help. But very many millions annually are spent in intoxicating drink, in the most squalid districts of Great Britain and Ireland; and if the spenders had only saved a fractional part from the public-houses, they would not have needed special appeals, but would have been amply secured against destitution."

CHINA AND AMERICA.—At the meeting of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the Pittsburgh Presbytery, Mrs. Thorne, secretary and treasurer, read a letter she had received from the missionaries in Japan. It relates to the present condition of things in China, and sets forth the absolute necessity of strong treaty stipulations for the protection of the missionaries. The Chinese outrages in the United States, the letter continues, have caused the greatest indignation in China, and if they are continued it is hard to tell what the result will be. China is becoming aware of her power, and that she will use it, if aggravated, there is not much doubt.

"THE INTERNATIONAL MISSIONARY UNION," an Association composed of returned missionaries of all Evangelical Churches, the object of which is to promote mutual sympathy and co-operation of missionaries in their work. and to hold annual meetings for the discussion of important questions connected with their work, and the diffusion of missionary intelligence, holds its next annual meeting at Thousand Island-park, New York, August 4 to 11, inclusive. At the meeting at Niagara Falls, Ontario, in August, 1885, over fifty returned missionaries from Japan and China and Siam, Burmah, India, Turkey, and many other fields, enjoyed a week and more of hallowed fraternal intercourse.

A HALL FOR RIO DE JANEIRO.

Those readers of THE CHRISTIAN who are interested in the progress of the Gospel in Brazil, and especially such as have contributed to the erection of a new building for the Igreja Evangelica Fluminense (Evangelical Church of Rio de Janeiro), will thank God that the hall and schoolrooms were opened, free of debt, on Sunday, April 4. It was a day anxiously and prayerfully looked forward to by the Brazilian and Portuguese Christians, who are, as they have always been, unattached to any society. While gratefully receiving the generous help sent them from this country, they nobly exerted themselves to secure the enlarged accommodation which has long been required.

Over one thousand persons attended in the course of the morning; eight hundred in the afternoon (when the church met at the Table of the Lord); and twelve hundred during the evening. One of our correspondents adds that more than a third part of these were persons who had never before entered a Protestant place of worship. Several American missionary brethren and the German Pastor were present, and took some part in the proceedings, and the Lord gave the Brazilian Pastor, Señor Santos, great strength for the duties of that busy day. His morning text was Eph. ii. 20, and we are told that many of the strangers present appeared "to drink in" the Gospel message. Our friends write with overflowing joy and thankfulness, and it does not surprise us to find that the Jesuit newspaper of Rio de Janeiro (a well-known enemy!) is full of equal rage and indignation. Possibly its articles may have swelled the numbers who desired to see for themselves what was going on. Many of them remained to speak approvingly with the Pastor and other brethren.

PRAYER FOR IRELAND.

There was a largely attended meeting at the Conference Hall on Monday week in response to the invitation to assemble for prayer to God on behalf of Ireland. It was quite evident from the tone of the speakers and those who engaged in prayer, as well as from the feeling of the audience, that the utmost anxiety and apprehension were felt with regard to the result of the present crisis.

Mr. S. A BLACKWOOD, who presided, said he believed it was impossible to exaggerate the gravity of the present crisis. All knew that certain elements had been at work for a long time, but at last this question had come before them suddenly. He did not speak as an Irishman, though from Ulster, but he expressed the feeling of his fellow-countrymen when he said they believed that not only were their lives and liberty and property at stake, but that this movement was likely in their judgment to lead to the extinction of the Protestant religion in Ireland. It was impossible for those who were so closely united by religious ties not to sympathise with their fellow-countrymen in the North of Ireland in regard to the alarm and apprehension which they were experiencing on this subject, and more especially with those scattered in thinly populated parts. Surely, it became them in all earnestness to help their brethren by prayer, and to lay this matter before God, in whom was their refuge and strength, that He would put forth his hand and bring order out of this confusion. The things they feared most might be but the instruments in bringing about results far better than they anticipated, but they could only deal with facts as they present themselves. He urged all, while confessing and lamenting national sins—such as boasting that as a people they were better than all other nations of the earth, national greed, and covetousness; withholding the Word of God from India and Ireland, intemperance and impurity, and the sin of forcing opium on the people of China—while acknowledging such national sins, they should at the same time ask themselves what about those same sins as representative of shortcomings, and failure and offences in the individual life. Various friends accordingly led the meeting in prayer, and a collection was made on behalf of the Irish Church Missions.

BALTIMORE, U.S.—The evangelists, Sam Jones and Sam Small, began their work in Baltimore on Sunday, May 2. Four thousand people were packed in the Biddle-street Skating Rink to hear the evangelists, and two thousand more tried to get in at the afternoon services, but the doors were shut against them and the surging crowd was held back by the efforts of a dozen sturdy policemen.

"RECENTLY ADMITTED."

IT was rather a hazardous experiment for Dr. Barnardo to fix his annual meeting for a Saturday. By the fag end of the week towards the close of May the frequenters of Exeter Hall are apt to grow weary of crowded and heated assemblies. The public interest, however, in the institutions under Dr. Barnardo's care, seems intense enough and general enough to overcome any obstacle in the matter of arrangement. Every seat in the hall was ticketed, from the aristocratic figure of 10s. 6d. for reserved places, down to the plebeian 6d. of the gallery; yet at the hour of opening scarcely a vacant rood of space was to be seen. The great orchestra, of course, was crowded with "the manufactured articles" that Dr. Barnardo turns out, in the shape of rosy-faced, winsome and well-clad maidens, and spruce, healthy-looking lads and boys. Of these and their performances more anon. The Doctor has not taken the hint we ventured to give him last year, to show the speaking contrast between the manufactured article and the "raw material," by reserving a row on the orchestra for specimens of the latter; that would, doubtless, be regarded by him as a too sensational method of advocacy. By his kindness, however, we are again enabled to give some excellent engravings, representative of the varied phases of the work; foremost among these will be found a picture of one "recently admitted"—perhaps a too favourable type of many others who go through the Stepney mill.

THE DIRECTOR'S REPORT.

Before referring to the very interesting proceedings of Saturday evening, we may furnish a résumé of the work of the past year, submitted to the meeting in brief by Dr. Barnardo.

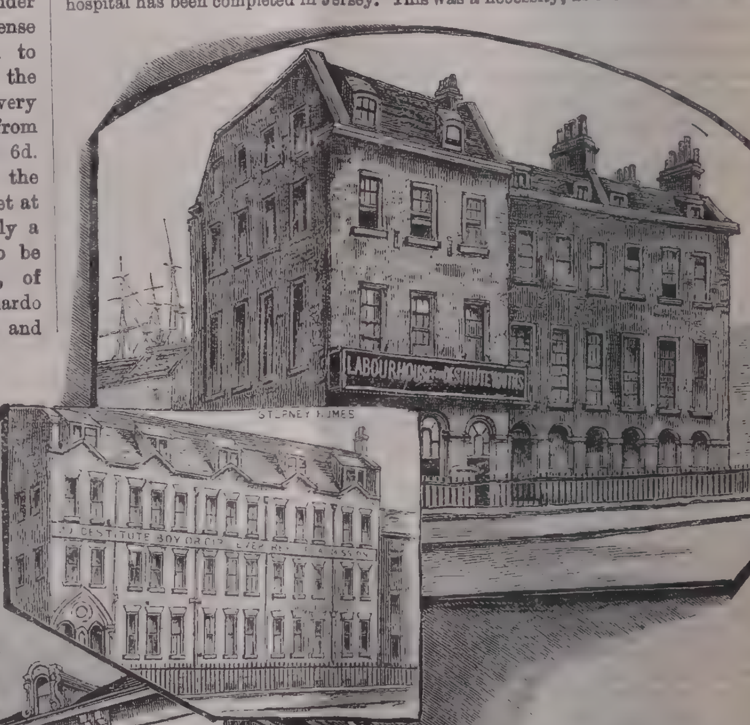
The year, he said, was remarkable for great and widespread commercial depression, causing much poverty and consequent suffering among the poorest classes of the East-end. To meet this state of things the Institutions not only opened their doors more widely even than their wont, but adopted special methods of relief. Nearly 40,000 free meals to necessitous children in our Ragged Schools were given away. No less than 4005 applications were made during the year for the admission of children to the Institutions: of these 1111 were accepted. On several occasions over 1600 children have been in actual residence at one time. The actual number emigrated during the financial year was 420, consisting of 301 boys and 119 girls. 237 were afterwards placed out in life or sent to situations, leaving on March 31, 1307 children chargeable to the Institutions. That number was increased by May 20 to 1534.

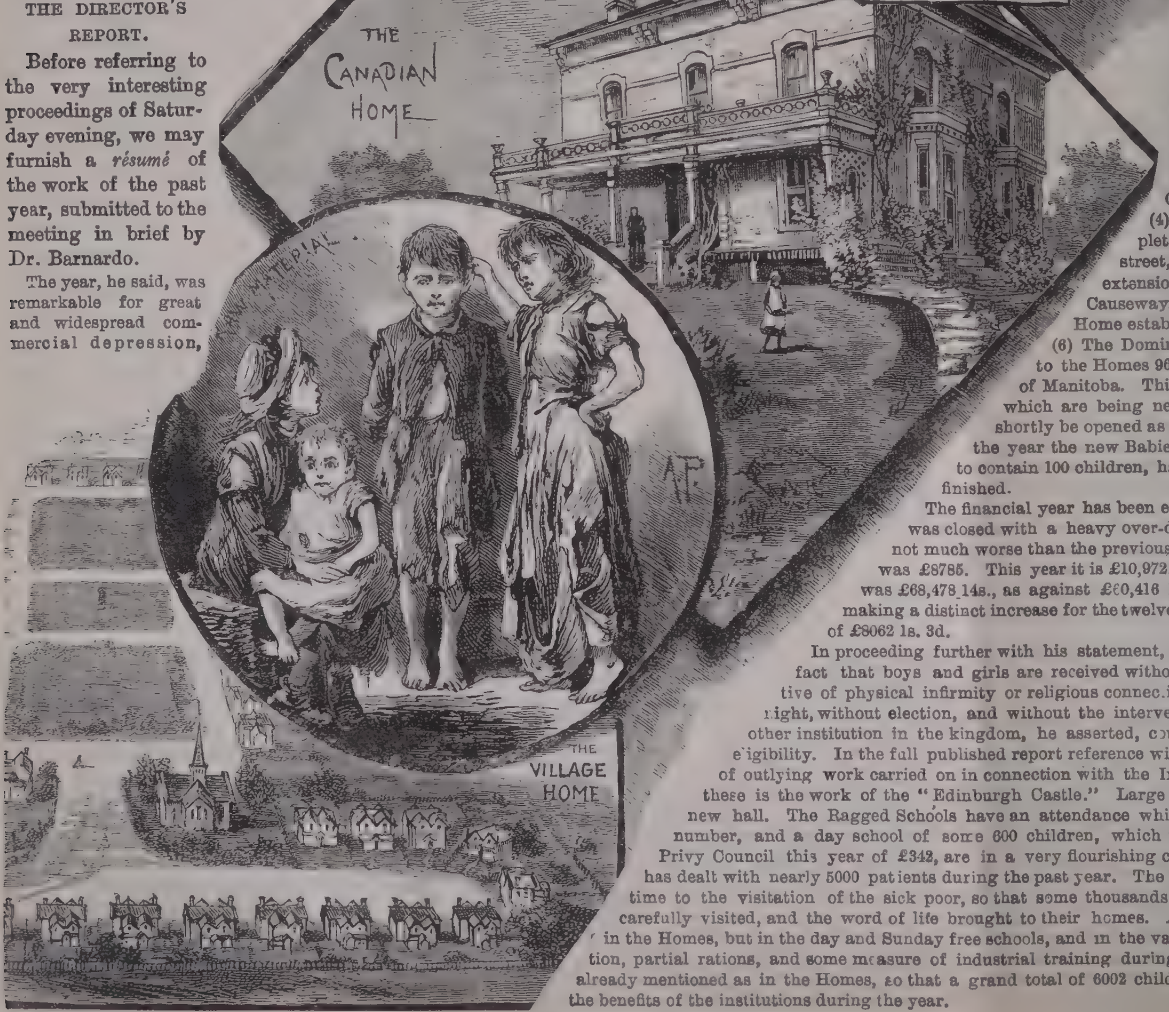
The forward steps taken during the year were specified: (1) Twelve new cottages have been built at the Ilford Village Home; these were separate gifts by benevolent friends. It is hoped they will be opened in the autumn. (2) A cottage hospital has been completed in Jersey. This was a necessity, as there were no means of dealing with the sick, and the island authorities insisted upon some adequate arrangements for the treatment of infectious diseases. (3) A small Rescue Home for little girls in positions of danger such as are contemplated by the Criminal Law Amendment Act. (4) The purchase has been completed of eleven houses in Bower-street, to be eventually added to an extension of the Boys' Home, Stepney Causeway. (5) A temporary convalescent Home established at Felixstowe.

(6) The Dominion Government have granted to the Homes 960 acres of land in the Province of Manitoba. This, with some 5000 other acres which are being negotiated for, will, it is hoped, shortly be opened as an industrial farm. (7) During the year the new Babies' House at Hawkhurst, Kent, to contain 100 children, has been begun, and is nearly finished.

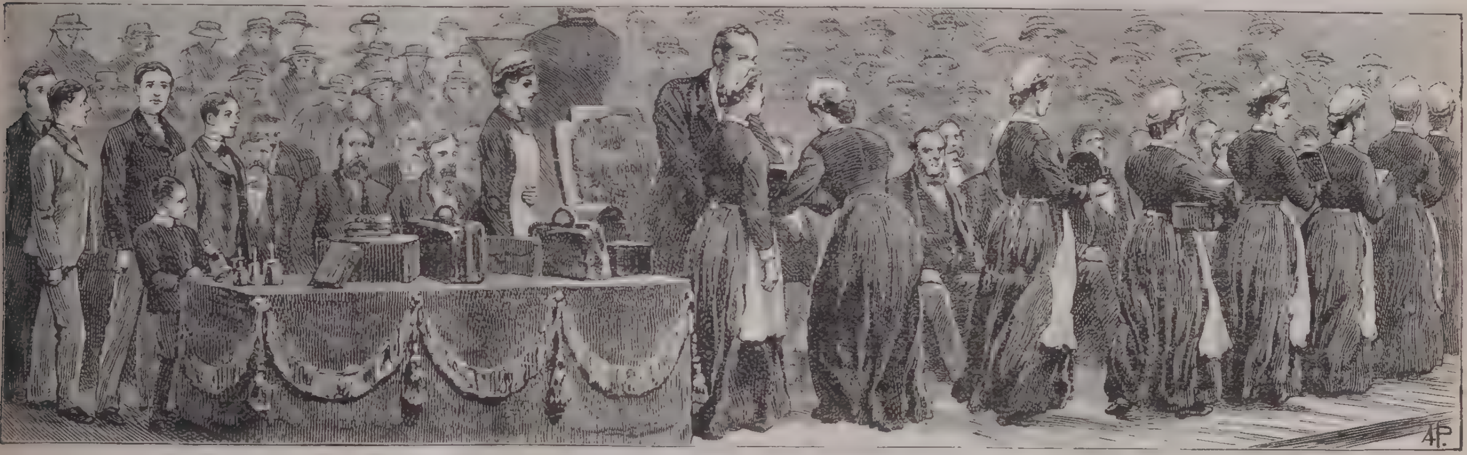
The financial year has been encouraging. Although the year was closed with a heavy over-draft, the position is practically not much worse than the previous year. Last year the overdraft was £8785. This year it is £10,972. The total donations this year was £68,478 14s., as against £60,416 12s. 9d. for the previous year, making a distinct increase for the twelve months closing March 31, 1886, of £8062 1s. 3d.

In proceeding further with his statement, Dr. Barnardo emphasised the fact that boys and girls are received without any limit as to age, irrespective of physical infirmity or religious connection, at any hour of the day or night, without election, and without the intervention of wealthy patrons. No other institution in the kingdom, he asserted, could show any such standard of eligibility. In the full published report reference will be found to the great variety of outlying work carried on in connection with the Institutions. Prominent among these is the work of the "Edinburgh Castle." Large congregations assemble in the new hall. The Ragged Schools have an attendance which varies from 1500 to 1700 in number, and a day school of some 600 children, which has earned a grant from the Privy Council this year of £342, are in a very flourishing condition. The Medical Mission has dealt with nearly 5000 patients during the past year. The deaconesses devote their whole time to the visitation of the sick poor, so that some thousands of families are regularly and carefully visited, and the word of life brought to their homes. About 3700 other children, not in the Homes, but in the day and Sunday free schools, and in the various brigades, received education, partial rations, and some measure of industrial training during the year, in addition to those already mentioned as in the Homes, so that a grand total of 6002 children and young people received the benefits of the institutions during the year.





Dr. Barnardo made a supplementary statement that must have gone straight to the hearts of all before him, as he partially pictured forth "the darker side" of the work, which is hidden to the world at large, but with which he is perforce familiar. He lifted the veil a bit, revealing the unspeakably sorrowful lives that are led by many of the waifs and strays who are tossed to and fro on the sweltering sea of London life. Very pathetic indeed was the tale he told of one wee girl waif whom he rescued from a den of infamy, and who died after a short stay at the Village Homes. As she lay waiting for the burial, her pains and sorrows gone for ever, one of her little fellow-dwellers at Ilford quaintly but suggestively said, "God has smoothed out her face, hasn't He?" The Doctor waxed exceeding eloquent as he expatiated on the fact that no really and absolutely destitute child has ever been turned away from his doors. Much more that we cannot repeat, he said, and well said, about the many advantages the children enjoy in the way of religious training, education and the chance of emigrating to the broad and fertile fields of Canada. He closed his somewhat lengthy statement by an earnest appeal for continued support. The proposed emigration arrangements for the coming year will alone involve an expenditure of over £5000.



LORD POLWARTH GIVING THE PRIZES.

CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS.

Lord Polwarth, who had come all the way from Scotland to preside, said he could not but think that the great and loving Father in heaven must be gazing with joy on the spectacle afforded by the meeting. Such works and sights as these afford the highest proof of the power of the risen Christ, exercised through his servants on the earth. It was a large work that Dr. Barnardo had built up, but not too large for the abounding need. It grows not only in width, but in variety, and that, too, is required by the diverse circumstances of the poor among whom it is carried on. Who could measure the loss to the community that must have accrued if it had never existed? We could form some faint estimate of that when we look into the bright, happy, intelligent faces that were clustered around. The noble lord was very brief, but nothing could well exceed the warmth of his sympathetic good wishes, and the heartiness with which he commended the Homes to the sympathies of all who have a heart to feel for the sorrows of the helpless little children.

THE PRIZES.

One of the most exciting items of the programme is always the giving of prizes to young women and youths who have earned honourable mention by fidelity in service, after leaving the fostering care of the Homes. A long procession of these passed in single file along the front of the platform, amid the approving plaudits of the audience, taking from the Chairman's hands and carrying with them the reward of their good behaviour. The artist has faithfully depicted the scene for our columns. Perhaps the loudest cheer of all on this occasion greeted a young redcoat; Policemen X., who was so popular last year, was this time awanting, as he so frequently is. Some who had previously received prizes came up again and claimed long service certificates.

THE SONG OF THE CHILDREN.

To many of those present the sweet voices of the children must have been the most eloquent sounds that greeted their ears from first to last. Even Dr. Barnardo, familiar as he must be with their strains, was constrained to confess that he could not listen to them unmoved. Trained to perfection by Mr. Proudman, their performances, spread over the entire evening, were almost sufficient to reconcile us to the loss of our usual Saturday half-holiday scamper on wheels through the country lanes. There were all the old spectacular "effects," and a good many new ones in the way of character songs, that strikingly showed the receptive capacities of the children. We had songs sweet and songs stirring, songs grave and songs gay, songs melodious and songs harmonious, and we know not what besides—variety enough and pathos enough to justify us in dubbing these children a huge chorus of human nightingales. Mr. Proudman must have been indeed a proud man to handle such a choir. During the important business of taking the collection, the little Hand-bell Ringers of the Homes discoursed deftly on their instruments, under the guidance of Mr. McNab.

THE SPEECHES.

Of these (including the Chairman's remarks) we had no less than seven—the perfect number. Dr. Alford, a portly and jovial representative of the Bench of Bishops, led off in a blunt and hearty, if not eloquent, little address, speaking well of the work, and giving some good advice to the boys who were to emigrate. Mr. C. T. Ritchie, an East-end M.P., said he was convinced from experience that the work of the Homes is an essential, effectual, and economical one; that being so, it ought to go on and prosper. The reputation of the new Chief Commissioner of Police, Sir Charles Warren, had evidently preceded him, as he received a more than usually cordial cheer of welcome. We should judge that the gallant General is more an administrator than an orator; still, in bluff, soldierly, and thorough-going fashion, he contributed his quota of commendation respecting the excellence of the institutions, and their claim on the public. Mr. Joseph Howard, another M.P., in effect, said "ditto" to those who had gone before. It is hard to say anything new about a work like this, but he made a point in remarking that it was a pity any of the children, after having got such good training, should leave the British shores and be lost to the community. No doubt, however, emigration was the best thing for themselves. Canon Girdlestone, in a very short speech, moved the thanks of the meeting to the chairman, and also paid a passing tribute to the wonderful virtues of Dr. Barnardo's spectacles. They must be constructed, he humourously observed, to see round corners and into the hearts of the London waifs. The Canon slyly suggested that as Dr. Barnardo's methods were constructive and not destructive, he should be entrusted with the Government of Ireland for the next twelve months. We pass on the suggestion to Mr. Gladstone and his Cabinet. Mr. Grattan Guinness briefly but warmly testified, from the closest personal acquaintance, to the value of the work carried on through the Homes among the seething masses of East London. As he contemplated the condition of that part of the City, he greatly rejoiced in this noble rescue work, and prayed that a copious and constant shower of Divine blessing might descend upon it.

The meeting was not quite so punctual in breaking up as in commencing, but by nine o'clock the great hall that had resounded to the many cheers of the delighted audience was given over to vacancy, while the small army of lads and lasses were on their way home, conscious, we doubt not, of having spent a happy evening, and of having contributed to the happiness of those who had come to rejoice in their joy.

A PROTESTANT SCHOOL IN SPAIN.

Dear Sir,—Some little time since a letter appeared in your pages from a friend interested in the work of the lamented Miss Ross, at Puerto, deploring the closing, by the order of the Alcalde there, of the school which had worked so well under her superintendence. You will rejoice to know that this obstacle is removed. The circumstances which led to this step are changed, and there will now be no difficulty in re-opening the school. This will be done by Mr. and Mrs. Moore, who have the superintendence of the work in Puerto, and whose friends in Ireland have engaged to provide the rent of the room. They have also what is absolutely necessary in the way of school materials; a suitable teacher has been found, and £10 towards the first year's salary raised. But it will take £30 more to complete the sum for this year, and without it they would not be justified in beginning.

The work at Puerto is very encouraging, the converts are most attentive and regular at the services held by the pastors who come over expressly every week, with the aid of an assistant on the spot; the people appreciate the blessing of united worship.

These converts have had their faith tried by much persecution from bigoted neighbours. They are intensely anxious for a school for their children (none but Jesuit ones are forthcoming) and continually the women of Mrs. Moore's Bible Class ask, "Is there any hope of a school? We know not where to send our children, they are running wild for want of teaching. Do give us a school!" Will not some who care for the true welfare of Spain come to the help of these friends?

Notes and Comments.

OUR next portrait and sketch will be those of Rev. Joseph Cook, of Boston, U.S.

The Autumnal Conference of the Evangelical Alliance will this year be held at Ryde, in the Isle of Wight, and on Sept. 21 to 23, an earlier date than usual.

We commend to our readers the startling truths contained in "The Progress of Ritualism, and the Designs of Popery." (Haughton & Co. 1d.) This and similar information should be scattered broadcast.

We hope our readers paid good heed to the advertisement on page vi. in our last issue, of the proposed new building of Talbot Tabernacle (Powis Chapel). Our dear friend, Pastor Frank H. White, has for more than five-and-twenty years done excellent work in London. Now the Iron Church, in which Mr. Gordon Forlong ministered before him, has become so dilapidated that it is absolutely necessary to build. The proposed structure will seat 1200 persons, and will cost £4000, of which nearly £1800 has been contributed or promised. There is no preacher more faithful to great foundation truths than the Pastor of Talbot Tabernacle, nor one more deservedly held in reputation by his fellow-Christians.

In these days, when foundation truths are undermined by those who pass for evangelicals, every testimony to the truth which has been thoroughly thought out, and is uncompromisingly expressed, is a great gain to the Church of God. As such we commend Dr. Robert Anderson's new book, "Human Destiny" (Hodder & Stoughton. 5s.) It deals with the books entitled "Eternal Hope," "Salvator Mundi," "The Restitution of All Things," and "Eternal Life in Christ," and shows the fallacies in each of them. It does more than this. It points out common misconceptions of heaven and hell, and is reverently content to believe in God where his ways are hidden from our sight. Two expository appendices enhance the value of the book.

We have inserted the long letter on the Universal Fatherhood of God (p. 13) partly in response to the request of a clergyman deservedly held in very high repute, partly because it is well to let error come out into the light. But it is seldom that the same amount of mistaken teaching is condensed into the like compass:—The germ of the regenerate life naturally inherent in every man, abiding in and unseverable from God, when it does not in this earthly life come to outward birth. Atonement, redemption, reconciliation, made interchangeable terms. No atonement in the true sense of expiation recognised. Scriptures written to men in the Spirit applied to men in the flesh. The distinction ignored, if not denied, between the sonship which results from the federal relationship of all men to Adam by natural generation, and the sonship which results from the federal relationship of believers to the Second Adam, the Lord from heaven, by faith in his Divine person and his atoning work. No apparent knowledge of the oneness of the believer with Christ in his death and resurrection. No recognition of our marriage union with Him who was raised from the dead, that we might bring forth fruit unto God. What wonder if we see not our signs, when the light of Divine revelation is thus obscured!

Visitors to the Colonial Exhibition may see there a case of lace which was sent by the Government of Madras. It is the work of native women, who were first taught to manufacture it by a devoted English lady who lived and laboured for the women of Nagercoil.

"Consistency" is an old-fashioned term, but it is a virtue of the first order. "A Christian Mother" thinks (and we agree with her) that there is a want of consistency in Christians having in their houses statuary or pictures wholly or partially undraped. She says, "I know a lady, who takes a prominent position in the Social Purity movement, who has in her house an immense picture of an unclothed female figure, and statues and statuettes of the like order. I know a mother of several boys and girls who has a similar figure on her mantelpiece. When will Christians wake up to see the sin and inconsistency of these works of the devil?"

Mrs. President Garfield asked someone if he could account for her two sons taking to a seafaring life. Pointing to a large picture of a splendid ship on the wall, he said, "There is the solution of the mystery." And so with regard to sensuous and sensual pictures. Parents little think how far they are responsible for the sin of after-life in their boys when they allow in their otherwise pure homes the impure, ungodly things that provoke to unholiness. Can we not, at least in things like these, help to keep the sons, dearer to us than our lives, at all events from a home influence to evil?

Why do Christian men talk about the Roman Catholic Church? The Church is the Bride of Christ. If Rome be the harlot she cannot be the Bride. If she be Babylon she cannot be Jerusalem. If she be the woman sitting upon the scarlet-coloured beast she cannot be "the Church which is his Body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all."

It is possible to extend charity till it becomes cruelty; it is possible in the name of liberty to play into the hands of tyranny. Charity to Hinduism meant burning or burying alive to Hindu widows. Liberty to Rome to establish convents means tyranny of the worst kind over English girls. We have abolished Suttee in India, why should we permit the sensual and devilish Confessional in England? Better that Indian widows should be buried or burnt alive than that the modesty and virtue of English girls should be destroyed—seared with the hot iron of priestly infamy. If there is one kind of cry more mischievous than any other it is the cry got up against "No Popery!" while Popery is increasing in enslaving England, though it is losing ground in every other land.

We regret, for the credit of Boston, much more than for his own, that our beloved brother, Christ's faithful servant, Horace L. Hastings, the editor and proprietor of The (Boston) Christian, was lately fined ten dollars for preaching on Boston Common, and thirty dollars for reading the Scriptures there, without preaching, on the following Sunday. He and others had often preached there before, but some old bye-law appears to have been resuscitated by the Committee in charge of the Common. Not having forty dollars in his possession, he was taken to jail, and was told he would have to stay there four months if the fine was not paid. This, however, was done during the day.

Mr. Hastings was told he could easily get a permit to preach on the Common. He immediately applied for one, but never got it. This is his account of this part of this disgraceful story:—

> The jailor, Mr. Bradley, was exceedingly courteous and polite, and very reluctant to lock up a minister. He wished to send to some of our friends to pay the fine, and offered to pay a quarter of it himself. This proffer we declined with many thanks, as we had no desire to rob the City Government of Boston of the honour of shutting up ministers in jail for reading the Bible on Boston Common. We had been before five different judges, all of whom had decided against the preachers; and the case had also gone before the full bench of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts; and now we had no idea of taxing a kind-hearted jailor to relieve the rum-ridden city of Boston of the shame and disgrace of fining and imprisoning a minister for daring to preach the Gospel and read the Bible on the Common, when unable to obtain a permit so to do from an Irish "wholesale and retail rum-seller."

There are important principles in this case which concern ourselves, of which, for lack of space, we cannot speak further this week.

Before the month closes, two reflections may be usefully made on the May meetings. One is the altered tone of the secular press in relation to them. It is not many years since they were either ignored, or spoken of with a sneer. Newspaper writers are now compelled to admit that the civilising and ameliorative changes which, on a vast scale, are passing over heathen and barbarous nations, are no work of mere enthusiasts, and few things are more remarkable than the tone of respect with which some of the secular papers refer to these Exeter Hall anniversaries.

Another thing to be noticed is the prospect of unity that is coming nearer. At the Christian Vernacular Society's meeting, Lord Northbrook enlarged upon the importance of different sections of the missionary Church working together. The Baptists and Congregationalists had two combined meetings. In Scotland among different sections of Presbyterians a united movement is in progress, and an amalgamation of the Scotch Congregationalists and the Evangelical Union is spoken of.

The cry for unity should be for something more than what is external. When our Divine Lord prayed that his believing followers might be one, He petitioned that they might be one as the Father was in Him, and He in the Father. That was a oneness of will and operation for the salvation of a lost world. Let none stop, therefore, at a merely visible unity. When Christ's servants come up in mind and heart to this pattern of oneness, the world will believe that the Father sent the Son for the deliverance of a ruined race.

In starting another year of missionary labour, it should be firmly borne in mind that the founders of the most successful Missionary Societies were intensely evangelical. It has been on the lines of bidding the nations behold Christ as the great atoning Sacrifice and Lord, and drawing them off from false philosophising and human reliances, that the witnessing Spirit has worked. What has now to be guarded against is the danger of men who are of a different spirit rushing in to share the advantage which the early missionaries have won. The harvest is plenteous; the call for labourers is wide; the same glorious self-denial of the pioneers is no longer demanded; Satan will thrust forward self-seeking men, and this is the peril which has now to be watched.

The Christian.

REFRESHMENTS PROVIDED ON THE PREMISES.

SPECIAL APPEAL.

THE EXTENT, and consequent cost, of all our work have rapidly increased. Funds have not kept pace with them. We have, therefore, a large deficit in our accounts, and WANT immediately £2,000 to meet it. We have property of considerable value, but its sale would be great inconvenience to the various Institutions we have established. Still, they cannot be CONTINUED IN DEBT.

Friends are earnestly asked to help NOW to raise a sum of money sufficient to close all accounts. UNITED PRAYER to the Gracious Give of "WHATSOEVER we ask" is the way to obtain this relief for us.

Will all our readers join us in this, and send us any amount they may be able to contribute to our SPECIAL FUND? A Meeting on behalf of this Appeal will be held (D.V.) in THE WOMEN'S MISSIONARY INSTITUTE, Clapham Road, at Seven o'clock p.m., on June 18.

Cheques to be addressed to MRS. SUSANNA MEREDITH, crossed "MESSRS. BARCLAY & BEVAN"; or to CAROLINE G. CAVENDISH, Union Bank, Charing Cross.

DR. BARNARDO will feel greatly obliged to Clergymen, Ministers of the Gospel, or ladies resident in the country and having a knowledge of the industrious poor, who will send him the names of worthy people suitable to be entrusted with the care of a child to be "boarded out" with them. A sufficient weekly sum would be paid with each child, and its clothes would also be provided. It is desired that the persons recommended should themselves be godly people connected with any Evangelical denomination, total abstainers, and not having a large family. The children to be boarded out would be mostly young, and proper arrangements would have to be made for their attending an elementary day-school, divine service, and Sunday-school. As the scheme of boarding out in connection with "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" is likely to be greatly extended this year, the names of a very large number of persons in humble life willing and able to undertake the care of a child are required. In reply give full particulars, name and address, calling, denomination, number and ages of own family, whether most suitable for care of boy or girl and at what age, and if correspondent would be willing to visit the child so placed out, say once a month.—Address Boarding-out, 18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

WILL ANY CHRISTIAN Mother or family going to Tasmania in July or August, take kindly oversight of two helpful girls during the voyage.

BOOKS

SUITABLE FOR

BIBLE STUDENTS & TEACHERS.

Published by MORGAN & SCOTT.

QUESTIONS ON THE FACTS OF THE BIBLE,

Suited for use in Schools and Families. By JABEZ HORNE, Inspector of the Schools in the Orphan Houses, Ashley Down. Tinted covers, 6d.; cloth, 1s.

"A good examination in the Scriptures might be conducted with the help of this little manual, the questions in which are extremely well arranged."
The Rock.

May also be had (for the use of Teachers only),

KEY TO QUESTIONS ON THE FACTS OF THE BIBLE.

Which furnishes the Answers to all the Questions. Cloth, 6d.

THE NUMBER "SEVEN" IN SCRIPTURE.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, Esq., C.B. Paper Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d. Presentation Edition, Cloth Boards, Bevelled, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"Many other attempts have been made in tabulating the circumstances connected with the word "seven" in the Bible, but we cannot think of any one which is so complete, so concise, and so systematic as in the small volume compiled by Mr. Blackwood. From Genesis i. to Rev. xxii. all the many times the word occurs are duly noted, and each book is dealt with seriatim, so that reference is easy. One object of the book is "to stimulate search and to arouse inquiry," and with this book by the side of the Bible one course of study can be made very profitable indeed."—The Rock.

CHRIST LIFTED UP.

Meditations on the Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ. By Rev. ROBERT GILCHRIST. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"An earnest, practical exhibition of the Gospel under a variety of aspects. Christ lifted up on the cross, and at the Father's right hand, is the grand theme, and affords scope for setting forth a wide range of Gospel teaching. The writer does this in an interesting, while simple style."—British Messenger.

"Old-fashioned divinity presented in a pleasing form. May its readers be many."—Sword and Trowel.

THE GOSPEL IN LEVITICUS.

Chapters on the Old Testament Foreshadowings of the Great Redemption. By the late Rev. Dr. FLEMING, of Kentish Town. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"The subject is set forth with a clearness, a directness, and a persuasiveness which leave little to be desired. Every lover of sound Scriptural theology, especially in regard to the momentous doctrine of the Atonement, will find in the book a rich treat."—Baptist Magazine.

JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED.

The Character, Writings, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple. New and Enlarged Edition. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. With Chromo-Lithographic Views of the "Sea of Galilee" and the "Island of Patmos." Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.

"It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."—Sword and Trowel.

"THY FIRST LOVE."

Christ's Message to Ephesus. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"It is a heart-searching and stimulating little book."
British Quarterly Review.

"Its language is chaste and clear; its thoughts are fresh and invigorating; its tone is evangelical without being sentimental. While there is a genial warmth of devout feeling, there runs through its pages a healthy breeze of robustness."—Literary World.

BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR & KNOCK.

Christ's Message to Laodicea. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. Tinted Covers, 1s; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"The exposition is fresh and original, displaying great critical skill and discrimination, together with happy quotations of Scripture. The style is all that could be desired—chaste and polished, yet full of force; here and there, as in the author's other works, we meet with passages of great poetic beauty."
Aberdeen Daily Press.

CALLS TO CHRIST.

A Series of Addresses by Rev. R. W. NICOLL, M.A. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"Force and freshness are eminently the characteristics of these 'Calls to Christ'; they are also brief to a proverb, and hence they may be of great service to an earnest evangelist who knows how to use another man's thoughts."
Kelso Courier.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings;

JAMES SCOTT:

A LABOURER FOR GOD.

By Rev. ANDREW A. BONAR, D.D.,

Author of "Memoir of R. M. M'Cheyne," &c., &c.

"We wish all young men would read this brief memoir."—Baptist Magazine.

"This book will be read with interest and profit, and its perusal will stimulate others to follow the example of this devoted servant of the Lord."—Methodist Times.

"Those who knew the late Rev. James Scott, F. C. Probationer, or ever heard of the unique and important position he occupied during the remarkable work of grace which has been going on in Glasgow for the past ten years, will be pleased to have this short memoir of him from so accomplished a writer as Dr. Andrew Bonar. . . . A 'gracious spirit' pervades the book, which we heartily commend to the notice of all evangelistic workers."

A NEW SERVICE OF SONG.

PRICE FOURPENCE. (Fifty Copies will be supplied direct from the Publishers at half-price.)

The Man who Spoiled the Music.

By REV. MARK GUY PEARSE.

ARRANGED AS A

MUSICALLY ILLUSTRATED SERVICE. By FREDERICK BRETT.

WITH BOTH OLD NOTATION AND TONIC SOL-FA IN ONE BOOK.

There are many persons who are acquainted with Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's quaint and striking tract of "The Man who Spoiled the Music." By the Author's kind permission the story has now been produced as in which form it is expected to prove both acceptable and profitable. It is hoped that many who—like "Jack," of whom this story speaks—have been too long accustomed to spoil the music in their own hearts and their own homes, and to spoil the music also in the lives of others, may experience the same change of thought, feeling and purpose through which "Jack" passed; and then, like him, having learned the New Song, set themselves to work to bring back both music and sunshine into the hearts and lives of all around.

The WORDS of the Hymns of this SERVICE OF SONG may be had SEPARATELY on a Sheet,
PRICE ONE PENNY.

Fifty Copies of either Music or Words will be supplied direct from the Publishers at half-price.

London: Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Boards, 1s. 6d.; Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2s.

THE "NUMBERS OF SCRIPTURE"—as Two, Seven, Twelve, Fifty, &c.

Specially intended as a Help to the Preacher; the Sunday-school Teacher; and the Bible Student.

"We do not know of a more useful Handbook for Bible readers and Bible students."
The Christian Commonwealth.

"This little book will, like others of its class, be specially helpful to Sunday-school teachers."—The Friend.

"The Bible Remembrancer contains an enormous amount of valuable Biblical information. It should be in the hands of every Bible student."—Christian Progress.

London: Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

By Rev. J. H. ROGERS, M.A. FOURTH THOUSAND.

THE KING'S PALACE.

A Series of Readings for each Day of the Month. By Rev. J. H. Rogers, M.A. With Carmine Borders. Cloth limp, 1s.; Cloth bds., 1s. 6d.; with gilt edges, 2s.; Leather binding, gilt edges, 3s. 6d.

From "The SWORD and TROWEL" for May.

"This adds another to the already long list of text books. This book has a practical reference exclusively to Christian service, and touches upon the parts which the heart, the lips, the eyes, the ears, the hands, and the feet are to play therein. There is much freshness and force, both in the idea and its treatment; and we think it will hold its own with its many competitors."

London: Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

WORKS BY

Rev. E. P. Hammond, M.A.

(COPYRIGHT.)

JESUS THE LAMB OF GOD:

Showing how He died on the Cross for Children; and how Little Ones have Learned to Love and Trust Him. By Rev. E. Payson Hammond, M.A. With Seven Full-page Illustrations.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.;
Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

This little book will be eagerly read by almost any child into whose hands it may fall. It is full of stories, all clustering round some great truth, made simple to the very youngest mind. By way of illustration, the author occasionally refers to interesting cases of children who have been hopefully led to the Saviour in his meetings. Parents and Sunday-school teachers, who would see their little ones led to Christ, should get the book for them to read, and pray that the Holy Spirit may use it in teaching them the way of salvation.

GATHERED LAMBS:

Telling how Jesus gathers the Lambs to his Fold. With Eight Illustrations.

Tinted covers, 6d.; Cloth limp, 1s.;
Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"In this book we find some excellent samples of Mr. Hammond's anecdotal addresses to the young. They are full of picture and parable, some of the most effective of the illustrations having been picked up in the Highlands of Scotland. The book contains striking letters received by the author from children converted under his ministry."—Christian Leader.

THE REAPER AND THE HARVEST.

Scenes and Incidents, in connection with the Works of the Holy Spirit, in the Life and Labours of Rev. E. Payson Hammond, M.A. Edited by Rev. P. C. Headley. 550 pages. With Life-like Portrait of Mr. Hammond. Cloth, 4s. 6d.

Ministers, Evangelists, and Christian Workers, who are looking for illustrations and facts, will discover here a treasury of information. They will at the same time feel their own hearts stimulated to labour more earnestly for the salvation of souls.

JESUS' LAMBS:

A Series of Stories for Children. Teaching the Little Ones How to Find Jesus. With Five Full-page Illustrations, and numerous small Engravings.

Tinted covers, 6d.; Cloth boards, 1s.

WORDS ONLY. Sewn, 1d.; Printed Cloth, 2d.

"A charming collection of two hundred and twenty-eight hymns and tunes, specially adapted for Gospel Services, Sabbath Schools, &c. While it includes some of the finest compositions of the great masters of sacred song, there are many hymns and tunes in it that will be new to the Christian people of this country; and it may probably surprise most readers to find how prolific and successful Mr. Hammond himself has been in this department of literature. Not a few of his pieces have been suggested by the touching testimonials of children led under his ministry to give their hearts to Jesus; and in these strains there is a richly experimental power."—Christian Leader.

WHAT AN ELECTRIC BATH WILL DO.

A Doctor of Divinity, one of the most prominent men in London, told me some time ago that he was suffering from sleeplessness, and that he meant to take a course of Electric Baths. When I saw him some time after, and asked him what the effect of the baths had been, he was loud and enthusiastic in their praise.

Now I took it into my head the other day to have an Electric Bath myself; not that I was suffering from sleeplessness (my trouble is all the other way with sleep), nor was I afflicted with neuralgia or gout. No, I simply wanted a "pick-me-up." I had had a long, hard spell of brain work, and I had got run down, or "played out," as the Yankees say. When a fellow gets down in this way, the best thing he can do is to pick himself up again, or he may stop down altogether; and sometimes it happens that he wants a little help—a little gentle stimulus. It is from the influence of nervous exhaustion, and consequent physical depression, that many people begin to drink. I found out a "more excellent way," which I will describe for the benefit of others.

I got in the train, and went to Baker-street; not to visit Madame Tussaud's, but the Royal Galvanic Baths, 55, Marylebone-road, three doors from the station. A courteous gentleman received me, and conducted me to a comfortable and well-fitted bath-room. It differed from other bath-rooms in that it was fitted with electric arrangements, as well as with every convenience for the comfort of bathers. At the bottom of the bath itself were slung some strong bands, on which the body rested, so that when lying on these one was swinging in a sort of hammock, with warm water all around the body. This, in itself, was luxurious to a tired man; presently, however, the battery began to work; I experienced a series of gentle, pleasant vibrations, as the wondrous, subtle electric fluid began to make its influence felt in every tissue and muscle. Yet so quiet in its operation, and so gently administered is the electric bath current, that it is perfectly harmless to the most delicate person.

In a minute or two the attendant applied what he called an electrode, by means of which he concentrates the Electricity upon any part of the body. Thus, if there is lumbago, or gout in the foot, or rheumatism in the arm, the vitalising fluid is localised in that spot, often, I was told, with such success as to send the sufferer away painless. The effect is chiefly felt in the muscles, and that it is felt I can testify, though the effect, even when it is strongest, is not allowed to be unpleasant, and I came out of the electrified water not merely refreshed, but, so to speak, energised. The languor was gone; I felt lightened and lifted up, and I tripped homeward in better humour with myself and with all the world.

The form of Electricity which is of greatest utility is the induced or Faradic current, as utilised in the Electric Bath, and is, therefore, of most interest to ordinary people, who naturally ask: Will this renew the energies of those who are in a low state of health? Will it cure disease? The twofold question can be confidently answered in the affirmative. Take, first, the people who can hardly be said to be really ill, but who are worn and fagged. Preachers, writers, men of business, politicians, all brain-workers who live in a condition of excitement and strain, belong to this class. Now for these people, worried, fevered, restless, sleepless, a course of Electric Baths is simply one of the best sedatives and restoratives known. It will calm, soothe, vitalise, and produce that exquisite sense of exhilaration which is the invariable accompaniment of perfect health. People who get into this languid, dejected condition do not need medicine; they require recuperation. Even if they suffer from liver or kidney complaints, which induce great depression of spirits, the Electric Bath will do them far more good than pills or potions.

Then as to the people who suffer from specific diseases. In many cases Electricity, administered through the bath, is the finest remedy they can have. This is specially true of rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica, and gout. I could give the name of a gentleman acting as private secretary to a Cabinet Minister, who went to these baths suffering from neuralgia in the forehead. For twelve years he had suffered pain; he took four baths, and was cured. That was in 1881. He has been well ever since. Another gentleman of standing in the political world drove up to the gate suffering from lumbago. He walked up the path with the utmost difficulty; after taking a bath he walked out erect, and after a course of baths the lumbago left him for good. A case of nervous deafness was cured by four baths. The names of the persons who have been cured of these complaints will be given (in confidence) to anybody who will apply for them at the Baths. Perhaps I ought to add that in cases of paralysis especial good is wrought; while children are effectually cured of such diseases as St. Vitus' dance, &c. Ladies who patronise the Baths will find that their comfort is in every way considered. Absolute privacy is secured, and the services of an experienced lady attendant are always available. There is nothing in them to alarm or injure the most delicate woman or child.

I hope I have said enough to induce any who desire skilful treatment in this department, at reasonable cost, to visit the Royal Galvanic Baths and Sanatorium, 55, Marylebone-road, London, W. (three doors west of Baker-street Station).

THE UNIVERSAL FATHERHOOD OF GOD.

To the Editor of The Christian.

Dear Sir,—My attention has been directed to a communication under the above heading, in The Christian of May 6. I am glad that the writer believes, so far as I apprehend, that He whom an Apostle sets forth as "the God and Father of all," is in very deed and truth the Father of some men at least, of himself I presume amongst the number. So far I heartily agree, but not with his limitation; because, in the light both of revelation and of reason, it involves insuperable difficulties, and appears to me contrary to the character of God as revealed in the person of Christ. If generally believed it would prove fatal to the growth of the Christian religion.

Caste, as an element of social life, as in England, and of both social and religious life, as in India, is highly deprecated; but what is such caste, whether social or religious, in comparison with the belief, as a fundamental truth of the Christian religion, of the infinite difference between a son of God, and a child of the devil, especially as, in this view, parents who have become children of God, may and do give birth to offspring who are wholly children of the devil, and remain so throughout all eternity.

I do not lose sight of the fact that our Lord told the Pharisees, who thought themselves righteous and despised others, that they were of their father the devil, and rightly so, for all unholy and malicious and selfish thoughts and words, as well as actions, are the offspring of the wicked one. But surely the most malignant and self-righteous Pharisee had another and better parentage, if only from Abraham, according to the flesh; if so, why not another and higher sonship within, though not yet born? for the second spiritual birth, no less than the natural, presupposes being and existence before its outward manifestation to its subject and to others. That which is non-existent cannot be born. Yea, before natural birth, there may be inherent spiritual life, for John the Baptist was "filled with the Holy Ghost, even from his mother's womb." On the other hand, suppose that every child and man before conversion is not merely in his carnal nature, which all Christians admit, but in his whole being—spirit, soul, and body—a child of the devil, he can in such case have no responsibility, that is, no will or power of responding to anything of God, therefore no more blame can attach to his unbelief and love of evil than can be attributed to any animal for being unsusceptible of the highest human culture.

To come more directly to the testimony of Scripture, I quite agree with your contributor that the universality of Divine Fatherhood was not, directly at least, revealed to or held by the Jewish nation. Not until "the Desire of all nations," the light and life of every man born into the world, became incarnate, was this Gospel revealed. But the Jewish nation did believe, as taught by their prophets, that Jehovah stood in paternal relation to all the people. Thus, "Doubtless Thou art our Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not: Thou, O Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer; thy name is from everlasting" (Isa. lxiii. 16). "I said, Thou shalt call me, my Father," &c. (Jer. iii. 19); "When Israel was a child, then I loved him, and called my son out of Egypt" (Hos. xi. 1); and "If I then be a father, where is mine honour?" (Mal. i. 6). If, then, by natural birthright every Israelite stood in a filial relation to God, surely Gentile nations are in a worse case under the fulness of the Gospel dispensation, if they cannot, except under conditions, regard God as their Father. The Gospel which is to be proclaimed to every creature would be indeed no "glad tidings of great joy to all people," if its preliminary announcement should make those to whom it comes worse than orphans, by declaring them to be, not, as St. Paul did, the offspring of God, but children of the devil. The Christian consciousness instinctively revolts from any such declaration, and the unexpressed belief or notion that such difference exists between the evangelist and his hearers is of the leaven of the Pharisees.

In the Sermon on the Mount, in which our Lord asserts the Divine Fatherhood of his hearers, He spoke not only to his disciples who stood near Him, for his audience embraced the people generally, as we learn from Matt. vii. 28, that "the people were astonished at his doctrine."[*] In that discourse He spoke of those whom the Father could not forgive, because they had not the spirit of forgiveness. Nevertheless, God is their Father, "Neither will your Father forgive your trespasses." Even of hypocrites, who give alms to be seen of men, though they could have no Divine reward, God is still called their Father. It was not only to his immediate disciples, but to the assembled multitude, including Scribes and Pharisees, that Jesus said, "Call no man your father on earth: for one is your Father, which is in heaven" (Matt. xxiii. 1—9).[†]

In all our Lord's parables of atonement, the redemption of the lost is represented as a restoration of condition, not of inherent being. The lost sheep has not become a wolf through its wanderings in the wilderness; the lost coin, however tarnished and incrusted with earthy matter, remained silver, retaining the image and superscription of its owner, and in that fullest of all parables of atonement, the wasteful son never ceases, because he cannot cease, to be the son of his father. He can mis-spend a portion of his father's money, but not the parental patience and love, and when the youth comes to himself, it is not by the recognition that he has lost his sonship, however unworthy, but that he has still one whom he can address as father; even his self-righteous, envious brother does not deny the fact.

If there are any professing Christians who can conceive of an atonement of that which is essentially different from the nature to which it has to be reconciled, there is some vitiating error in their belief. A lost sheep can be reconciled to the shepherd, and brought back to the fold, and a lost son to his father's house, but a wolf, though it may be tamed, can never become a sheep, and a son of the devil can never become a son of God, or even a son of man. What is of the seed of the serpent in every one of us has to be destroyed. The impelling cause of atonement—God's infinite love of the world lying in wickedness—could not have been possible except from the Divine consciousness of inherent quality worthy of love; that is, God's own image and nature in the objects of affection. The Holy One cannot love what is evil, nor what has no existence. The very word atonement, redemption, or reconciliation, implies inherent quality, or nature which has to be renovated or restored. In the ordinance of infant baptism, there is a visible declaration that there is that in the subject worthy of cleansing, and which needs only to be cleansed for its admission into the fellowship of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, into whose name it is baptized. We do not wash what we know to be intrinsically vile or worthless [‡]

Has your contributor ever known or heard of any Christian who intelligently believed in the universal Fatherhood of God, and preached it, who found there was no more place either "for the atonement or for the general mediation of Christ"? What are the injurious results which are alleged to have arisen from the teaching of Kingsley or of any other teacher on this subject? Kingsley certainly did not originate the doctrine. It is, as I have endeavoured to show, the doctrine held by our Lord Himself. It is asserted by the evangelist Luke, that the progenitor of our race was the son of God. "Adam, which was the son of God," and thus necessarily of the whole race, by transmission through human ancestry. It is very clearly and forcibly asserted by Paul, to and of agnostic Athenians, in that discourse only casually referred to by your contributor. If, by the assertion that all men are the offspring of God, Divine Fatherhood is not declared, I do not know the meaning of words. Certainly those words and their context involve so much more real relationship between God and man, that human parentage in comparison becomes figurative and unreal. We are not only the offspring of God, but our real being, our true self or life, abides in Him. "For in Him we live, and move, and have our being." Have we ever reflected on even something of the all that is implied in that statement?

The true being of man, which in regeneration comes to outward birth, is born from above (ἄνωθεν), that is, from God. But what if the true self or life of a man does not, in this earthly life, come to outward birth? In such case the real man abides in God, and cannot be severed from Him. God cannot cast out or deny our life in Himself. The life may be hidden, but it is hidden in God.

Now, although we could not have discovered such an important truth apart from Divine revelation, enlightened reason may see, that it is no less a necessary truth of philosophy than of theology. Is the most advanced believer in any more intimate relation to the Father than this? True, he has, more or less, through faith and experience, attained to the realisation of the truth, and that is an unspeakable advantage. Yet every man's true life is and abides in God by eternal necessity of being.[*]

A word, in conclusion, as to the possible effects of the notion in the churches of a limited idea of Divine Fatherhood. If God has no parental relation to a man, that man has no filial obligation to God. If the limited view is really according to the Scriptures, it must, where accepted, very seriously affect Christian education in the home, Sunday-school, and Church. Every mother who so believes would consciously be teaching her child to begin the Lord's prayer with a lie. Every repetition of it in church would, for many, be not of faith, and therefore a sin against God. Indeed it is difficult to see how anyone not assured of his full conversion and regeneration could consistently pray to God for anything, since it is as children to a father and not as slaves, or subjects to a ruler or governor, that he desires us to draw near to Him [†]

I have just read the notice in last week's Christian of Mr. Gibbon's "Gospel of Fatherhood," and while I am glad to see that the reviewer affirms the fact of universal Divine sonship through Adam, yet I cannot find, whether from the teaching of Scripture, or in the light of reason, that God is more truly, or in a higher sense the Father of some men than of others [‡] The difference, and it is great, as I apprehend it, is that the former through faith in Christ, and obedience to Him, realise the fact of their Divine sonship, while the latter remain ignorant and rebellious children, needing atonement or reconciliation [§] For, as I have already observed, in all our Lord's parables, atonement or redemption makes no change in the essential nature of the subjects, only in their state or condition [‖]

While it is quite true, as the reviewer remarks, that the son of a king, when he becomes criminal or rebellious, loses the privileges of sonship, the fact of sonship remains, and cannot be lost, and through forgiveness and reconciliation all its privileges may be restored.[¶] There is an important distinction between fathers of our flesh and the Father of our spirits, who is "the God of the spirits of all flesh." For the spirit is the essential life of every man, which "lives, moves, and has its being in God."

Trusting that the importance of the subject will excuse the length of this communication,

I am, Sir, &c., J. W. F.

[*] See Matt. v. 1: "His disciples came unto Him, and He opened his mouth and taught them." It may be true that some parts of the Sermon on the Mount were spoken to the multitude, but certainly all were not. Are any but Christians "the salt of the earth," or "the light of the world?"

[†] This is not the case. See ver. 13, where He turns to the Scribes and Pharisees—"But woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites"

[‡] This paragraph represents atonement as = reconciliation. But atonement is = expiation, without which reconciliation would have been impossible. The argument from infant baptism is without any Scripture basis.

[*] Two extraordinary paragraphs. That the new life which is born in regeneration is inherent in man by nature, is indeed a new discovery; but if it is contained in Divine revelation we have not found it. If the believer (advanced or otherwise) has no more intimate relation to the Father than any other man, what becomes of Paul's persuasion that "neither death nor life, . . . nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord"? If "every man's true life is and abides in God by eternal necessity of being," how can it ever be said to any, "Depart, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels"?

[†] This is an entire reversal of the fact. The very first note of the Gospel was, "Repent, for the Kingdom of heaven is at hand" (Matt. iii. 1, 2).

[‡] We refer our correspondent to John i. 11—13:—"He came unto his own, and his own receive Him not; but as many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God, . . . who were born not of blood . . . but of God."

[§] Is this the Gospel—that some "through faith in Christ, and obedience to Him, realise the fact of their Divine sonship," while others "remain ignorant and rebellious children, needing atonement or reconciliation"? Did not the former need these? They did not realise the fact of previous sonship, they became sons of God by believing in his Son—if we may depend on the evangelist John.

[‖] But Peter limits the partakers of the Divine nature to those who have obtained precious faith (2 Pet. i. 1—4).

[¶] Truly all that has been lost is much more than restored when we are born again. But if there be no repentance and no forgiveness, is it certain that any sonship remains which God will recognise? We suppose Satan to be a fallen angel. The angels are sons of God. Is Satan, therefore, now to be regarded as a son of God?

Anniversaries.

Ragged Church and Chapel Union.

On Thursday last, after a social tea, the anniversary was celebrated in Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Mr. George Williams. An admirable report was read by the hon. secretary, Rev. Burman Cassin. About one hundred preaching stations are under the control of a parent committee. Most of the speeches were above the average. In addition to an address from the Chairman, the claims of the poor were urged by Colonel Puget, Rev. W. J. Smith, Major Evered Poole, Rev. Dr. Tyler, Major John Smith, and Rev. G. D. Hooper.

Evangelical Alliance.

The annual conversazione of this Society was held at Regent's Park College on Tuesday week. In the unavoidable absence of Lord Polwarth, the chair was filled by Sir Robert Fowler, who spoke warmly of the good work done by the Alliance. It was of the utmost importance, he said, that those who love God should be united in prayer and effort.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe then delivered a very remarkable and bracing address on "God's Threefold Creation." The basis of the Evangelical Alliance, he said, was love. But we love the brethren because we love God; and we love God because He first loved us. So our unity really rests on our knowledge of God. We cannot love one another aright unless we know God. Therefore he would in his address go at once to the fountain-head. "Great is the soul that passes from the contemplation of the world to the contemplation of God," said Plato. He would have his hearers leave the question of personal interest in the great salvation behind. We all know how hard it is to get away from such considerations. Yet our highest happiness is reached only when we forget self by apprehending God and his work. Why are we so selfish in our religion? We are units now; but we are intended to be unified.

He then spoke of God's manifestation of Himself in his threefold creation. "In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." Here the goodness of God is specially seen, "And God saw everything that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." All things are full of the praise of the good Creator. The last book of the Bible, like the first, tells of creation—a new creation. "Behold I make all things new." "I saw a new heaven and a new earth." In Genesis we see God's goodness in creation and providence; in Revelation we see it glorified in the new creation. Midway between these two, leading from the one up to the other, is God's third manifestation of Himself in creation. The speaker alluded to the spiritual creation, the Church of the living God, which is "created in Christ Jesus . . . a new creation." Contemplating this as a unity, we behold in this new spiritual creation the wonder of God's power and goodness, "How manifold are thy works, in wisdom has Thou made them all!" In the first creation the manifestation of God is more physical than spiritual; in the second it is entirely spiritual; but in the third, "the new heavens and the new earth," the physical is again recognised, but in subordination to the spiritual. The first was a material-spiritual creation; the second, purely spiritual; the third will be spiritual-material. These three creations might be distinguished respectively by the words, goodness, grace, and glory. The Church is failing to so large an extent in her life and work just because she is so absorbed in her own salvation, and in her own interests, instead of showing forth the majesty of the glory of God.

At the close of this address, prayer was asked "for sixteen converts from Mohammedanism who are enduring persecution in Turkey, if they be still alive."

Rev. J. J. Varnier, of Messina, Sicily (formerly a Roman Catholic priest), said he had been very zealous for his faith, and had gone to India as a missionary, where through an English chaplain he learned the simplicity of the Gospel. Thirty years ago, all over Sicily the name of Protestant was the accepted synonym for all that was ungodly, immoral, and diabolical, and this idea still remains in many minds, though light is beginning to shine. The Sicilians are people of deep religious sentiments. Many who, mistaking Romanism for Christianity, and seeing its errors, have become sceptical, are longing for truth. The missionaries often find, when they visit a village the second time, that the simple exposition of Scripture given during their first visit has brought light to some who now sought to know the way of God more perfectly. Signor Varnier testified to the great value of the Evangelical Alliance. The Sicilian priests teach that Protestantism was a name for a thousand different religions. The Alliance replied to this by gathering Christians of every body into public union in work and worship, and so demonstrated the essential oneness of believers.

The audience was numerous and influential. Dr. Murray Mitchell, General Sir Robert Phayre, and Dr. Schaff, of America, led the prayers of the meeting.

Young Men and Foreign Missions.

Our Y.M.C. Associations are catching the fire of missionary zeal that has lately been stirred in our midst. A good index of this could be seen in the large attendance and fervour of spirit that characterised the recent meeting at Aldersgate-street of the Young Men's Foreign Missionary Association. As the Chairman, Mr. George Williams, remarked, it is yet the day of small things with the Society, but it is all alive, and it is sure to grow. Its main object is to awaken and foster the desire for missionary service among the young men, and also to render help to candidates for such service during their period of preparation and training. Mr. Hall's report showed that a good work has already been done; if the Christian public will co-operate, its sphere of operations will widen with the growing needs of the time.

All the speeches were of thoroughly genuine interest, and would have done credit to Exeter Hall itself. The Chairman's "secret"—that in the warmth of his first love as a young Christian, he had greatly longed to become a foreign missionary, but his friends discouraged the proposal—was a most interesting bit of information, though we daresay most of those present sympathised with the remark of one speaker that God had clearly hedged up Mr. Williams's path that he might be of greater service even to foreign missions by remaining in London, than if he had gone to Fiji or Timbuctoo. One most encouraging fact casually mentioned by Mr. Williams was that the great Missionary Societies have had larger incomes than ever during the past year, despite the prevailing depression in trade. Mr. Eugene Stock closely held the attention of the audience while he sketched the life career of the late Bishop Hannington; in an early issue we hope to give a portrait and memoir of this brave missionary pioneer. The young Hindoo student, Chowry Muthoo, put in a touching plea for India's millions, sunk either in heathen superstition, or led away by the glamour of false philosophies and agnosticism. Mrs. Hudson Taylor was equally pathetic in her presentation of the needs of the perishing millions of China. Rev. G. Cousins gave the latest intelligence about Madagascar. Every true friend of the courageous dwellers in that island will rejoice to know that the London Missionary Society mean to resume their missionary operations there with renewed and even increased vigour and determination. The Jesuits are also going to try whether they cannot plant their flag in the island; let us all pray and believe that God will prosper and defend the right.

To crown all, we were treated by Rev. W. Piercy and a grave-looking "celestial" to a verse of "Oh, happy day that fixed my choice," sung in Chinese. Miss Burford sang two very appropriate solos in sweet compelling strains of melody; the occasion altogether was a singularly happy and profitable one.

Cruelty to Children.

There are still left a few fundamental points on which all thinking men can unite, even in this age of divided opinion and action. Such a point is the care of the helpless children. Thus it came to pass that at the second annual meeting in the Mansion House, last week, of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, there might be found cheek by jowl on the same platform the Romish Cardinal and the Orange Duke, the Conservative Earl and the Radical M.P. One touch of human sympathy makes a whole community kin. It only needed a genuine costermonger to complete the circle.

Though the subject was so good, yet the meeting, on the whole, was poor and inadequate. The thought of cruelty to defenceless and innocent children might well have evoked a little healthy warmth of speech, not to say a noble frenzy, at the bare idea of such things being enacted in this centre of the world's civilisation and refinement, and at the opening of the twentieth century of the Christian era. Instead of that the utterances, with two or three exceptions, were as mild and measured and formal as if it had been a Committee of Supply in the House of Commons. One exception was the brief secretarial statement of Rev. B. Waugh, who described broadly the kind of work the Society had been doing—how it had dealt during the year with 147 cases, chiefly of the crimes of parents, involving the wretchedness of 327 little victims. Many of these have suffered savage assaults with boots, fists, ropes, pokers; others have been gradually starved or wilfully exposed, so as to get them "out of the way;" others neglected by gin-sodden "mothers;" others sent into the cold and cruel streets to gather money, on which their worthless and lazy owners may luxuriate; while yet others have been the subjects of nameless outrage. It was satisfactory to be told that only in two or three cases where the Society prosecuted, did they fail to secure a conviction. The work of the Society, however, as its name implies, is preventive even more than punitive; therefore, it is promoting a Bill in Parliament for a further amendment of the law with regard to children. This measure has received the approval of the Lord Chancellor; it is hoped that it may soon become law and thus constitute an additional terror to evil-doers.

There were many references during the afternoon to the clauses in the Criminal Law Amendment Bill, passed last session, relating to the treatment of children, and a due meed of praise was accorded to Mr. Waugh for his yeoman service in connection with the insertion of these clauses. One thing, however, greatly struck, and we may say disgusted, us—the studious avoidance, by every speaker, of the remotest reference to The Pall Mall Gazette or its heroic editor. Even Cardinal Manning, in a very decided vindication of the Mansion House Committee's decision last autumn, carefully took refuge in generalities. Some excellent and telling things were spoken by Mr. S. Smith M.P., about the barbarism of English law in its appraisement of the guilt of offences against the person and against property respectively. Lord Iddesleigh was sympathetic, as was also the Lord Mayor, who presided. Among the other speakers were the Duke of Abercorn (who has been elected President of the Society in place of the late Earl of Shaftesbury), Mr. C. Kegan Paul, and Mr. J. H. Wilson, M.P. The last-named gentleman said the Society must be well supported while the need for it exists, but he was of opinion that if the Government officials—policemen, magistrates, and the like—did their duty, the need of it would cease.

British Women's Temperance Association.

Going down Fleet-street to attend the annual meeting of this Association in the Memorial Hall on Tuesday week, our representative passed a respectably dressed woman, surrounded by a crowd of people. She was in trouble; for she was dragging her sailor-son, in a state of intoxication, from a public-house, hurried along by an officer of the law, and gaped at by the crowd who were looking at what they called "the fun." If the British Women's Temperance Association had been in existence to bring its influence to bear upon that mother years ago, she might have been spared the sorrow and the indignity.

Inside the hall we found Mr. Kegan Paul in the presidential chair, surrounded on all sides by the other sex. We wondered why the ladies had a gentleman there at all. They certainly could have done all the work themselves. The report presented by the Secretary showed that there were 169 affiliations to this Society, which, together with what were called the branches, made a total of 284 societies. A special feature of the report was the holding of the drawing-room meetings in different parts of the country, which had been productive of much good. The Society rejoiced in the progress of legislative action. The most important work of the year had been the opening of the Temperance Home at Forest-hill.

The Chairman, like a wise man, was brief. About this Society he said there could be no question at all. Even people who were not total abstainers must admit its usefulness. It was impossible, he held, to exaggerate the influence which women ought to have in the great Temperance movement. What was it they had banded themselves together to do? It was to exercise every legitimate pressure to induce others to put away the drink which did nobody any good, and did so vast a number of people an infinite deal of harm.

Mrs. Wellstood, of Edinburgh, fresh from the land of Sunday closing, was a very proper person to move that a petition should be sent from that meeting to Parliament in favour of the Sunday Closing Bill for England. She showed that although there was so much pauperism and domestic misery, the sale of intoxicating liquors had not decreased so much as it ought to have done. Whole families are starving, and yet many of the public-houses are driving a roaring trade. The speaker must have had a grand faith in memorials to Parliament. For our part, after seeing the way petitions are generally treated in the House of Commons, and after the last five or six years with practically no Temperance legislation, notwithstanding all the pledges and promises, we are not quite so faithful or believing in the power of Parliament.

Miss Brewster followed with a speech both powerful and eloquent. When ladies get into the House of Commons, depend upon it there will be no counting out. How she pictured one Biblical heroine after another, and brought us down to the women of to-day! With what biting sarcasm did she cover with contumely and reproach the system which gave to the savage with the one hand civilisation, and with the other the intoxicating fire-water which is the curse of our own people, and the destruction of these poor savages! With what effect she quoted from Mr. Gladstone's well-known utterance about the drink traffic and intemperance, and then called upon him, in the name of the women of England, to take his axe and strike at the root of this Upas tree, which is blighting the prospects of our fair country. After telling some pathetic stories, with all the eloquence and pathos of a woman's heart, she declared that the women of England would not be silent—would never rest until the last beer-barrel should have been rolled up to the British Museum, as a relic of the dark ages.

Mrs. Smith, of Philadelphia, said much about the influence of mothers. By "mothers" she didn't mean married women only, but women with womanly hearts, all who had anything to "mother." There was going to be a belt of mothers encircling the world, so that if a mother had a son in the Antipodes she had only to send to one of the mothers there, linked on to her, and her boy would be looked after, and if in danger rescued and saved; 200,000 women in America were working in 10,000 towns and villages, and the men had found out that it was no good to run a man for any office unless the women were prepared to support him.

Mrs. Ormiston Chant was the next speaker. What a wonderful woman she is! A hundred such workers, and such eloquent talkers, would transform England. She seriously admonished the shaky brethren. It was no use dealing with the surface; if they were to get rid of drunkenness, they must get rid of all the alcoholic drinks that caused it. She very pertinently remarked that if a drunken man struck her down in the streets, it would matter very little to her whether he had got drunk upon small beer or the best brandy. The audience listened with deep interest to her address, and afterwards to some words from Miss Tod, Mrs. Lucas, and others.

The Theatrical Mission.

Just a year ago the foundation stones of the new building of this Mission, in Henrietta-street, Covent Garden, were laid. Last week found it comfortably settled in Macready House holding its anniversary, under the sympathetic presidency of Lord Robert Montagu.

The addresses by the chairman, Archdeacon Richardson, Mrs. Baxter, and Rev. Dr. Whittemore, were excellent in their way; but, like so many other May-meeting speeches, they mostly went round and round about the work of the Mission, rather than to the heart of it. That was nothing to their discredit: they could not be expected to have a practical acquaintance with the details of the work. The statement by Mr. C. Todd, the Director, was what chiefly interested us. One letter, he said, penned in 1876, has now expanded into a band of consecrated women, a thousand in number, who write letters every month to actresses throughout the world. One small room hired in 1879 has grown into the fine and commodious Macready House. Three children, who were the first objects of the Mission's care, are now represented by a roll of names 6000 all told. £18 were contributed in the first year; the income for the bygone year was over £2600. Last year the blessing that followed the efforts of the workers was greater than ever before, though, unfortunately, there is still a debt of £3000 on the new building. The various branches of effort among children, youths, and young ladies have been continually growing. It was not intended to use the upper floors of the new building till next autumn, but the urgent circumstances of some who came up from the provinces, induced him to furnish five cubicles, which are now in occupation, and will continue to be so. This, of course, has caused extra expense. The amount available for relief has thus been greatly exceeded. Every case of need presented to them has been helped. Many have been saved from destruction. Mr. Todd told how thirty girls had engaged themselves to a theatrical manager to go to Russia. Entreaties and warnings given to them were for a time of no avail, but, it was made a matter of prayer to God by the workers, and He had graciously moved the hearts of these girls so that not one of them has gone to Russia. It transpired that the agent did not really intend them to join a theatrical company, but in plain language they were to be sent to Russia for immoral purposes. Mr. Todd said he made that assertion without fear of contradiction. In the strenuous plea for help with which he closed his statement, he said that for a fresh cubicle £5 would be a good investment; a still better one would be £100 for a new dormitory.

Turkish Missions' Aid Society.

The annual meeting of this Society was held on May 18, at 3, Stanley-gardens, Notting-hill. Mr. R. N. Cust, chairman, emphasised the strong claims which the Bible lands have upon evangelical Christians. The American missionaries, to whom by mutual agreement this district has been allotted, besides deserving credit for their own efficiency, have this advantage, that political motives cannot be attributed to them. The Turkish Missions' Aid Society formed a bond of union between England and America, and was peculiarly useful in that respect during the civil war in the United States.

The secretary, Rev. T. W. Brown, then read the report, which contained a rapid review of the outstanding facts which have occurred during the past year, beginning with Greece, and ending with Egypt. It closed with an earnest appeal for continued support. It may be mentioned that the committee have remitted sums larger or smaller to forty-four different portions of the field.

The meeting was addressed by Rev. J. Gosset Tanner, Mr. Hanford (who has resided for several years in the Lebanon, and who gave a most interesting account of educational work at Sûk el Ghurb, near Beyrout), Revs. W. Burton Alexander, H. Simon, W. Wingate, and Dr. Wickson. All bore most favourable witness to the perseverance, activity, and spirituality of the American missionaries. The recent and lamented death of Dr. John Hogg, to whose efforts the success of the "magnificent mission" in Egypt may be largely attributed, was adverted to in terms of deep regret by more than one speaker, as well as in the report.

Policemen at Mildmay.

The thirteenth annual gathering of members of the N, Y, and G, divisions of the Metropolitan Police was held at the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park, on Tuesday afternoon, last week. The day being beautifully fine, the grounds both before and after the meeting presented an unusual scene, the men, about four hundred and fifty of whom were present, engaging in football and other amusements, while the band played.

Mr. T. A. Denny presided over the meeting in the large hall at three. Mr. J. E. Mathieson, in giving the men a hearty welcome, said the Christian Policemen's Association now numbered 2600 members, who were united in real, hearty dedication to Christ, and in confession of Him before men. Rev. Hugh Price Hughes said nothing was more remarkable than the growth and development of the police force, whose duties and difficulties had been continually increased by the drift of modern legislation. Observation had convinced him that such were the importance and delicacy of the duties devolving upon them that policemen ought to be as carefully selected as ministers of religion. Upon the faithful discharge of their duties the morality and happiness of this great city largely depend. Having urged upon them the necessity of their being total abstainers, he said the gaoler at Dover once told him that out of 23,000 prisoners which had come before him, he had never known of one who was a total abstainer. Referring to social impurity, he said Christian policemen could do far more than ministers to arrest this awful evil. He pointed to the splendid example set by the Chief Constable of Glasgow, who by his high Christian character and its effect upon those under his control, had done more in reducing this devastating sin than had been done in any other way. Mr. Hughes insisted, it was impossible a policemen could perform his duties properly unless he were a true Christian. With much feeling he urged all to submit themselves to God.

Subsequently the men met for tea, which was thoroughly enjoyed by all, Sir Charles Warren (Chief Commissioner), addressing them in tones of hearty congratulation. A meeting of the Christian Policemen's Association was also held in the course of the evening, at which there was a large attendance.

The Railway Mission.

There is a sentence in the new report of this Society which runs thus: "The Mission has quite outgrown its childhood, and has become a strong man running a race." Nobody who attended the annual meeting in Exeter Hall last Thursday evening could have any difficulty in believing that. A crowded hall, an equally crowded platform, a full tale of successful work, excellent speeches, stirring testimonies, a wonderfully responsive audience, and a general overflow of enthusiasm—these were all unmistakable indications of lusty life and well-directed energy.

The meeting was unusually fortunate in its chairman, Mr. Miles MacInnes, M.P., and Director of the London and North-Western Railway. A clear-headed man of business, well fitted to command a popular assembly, with a practical mind, an impressive delivery, and a strong sympathy with the work of the Mission, his address was one that his hearers will long remember. Comparing the great body of railway employés throughout the country to the Queen's army, in respect to discipline, mutual dependence, mutual confidence and mutual trust, he showed how the successful carrying on of their avocations hinged on the fact that every man in his particular sphere was resolutely and persistently doing his duty. A reference to the hidden and sudden dangers to which railway-men are exposed gained a sympathetic response. An incident, well told, about a friend who was in a railway collision, but quailed not, because "he knew he was ready," was skilfully applied and pressed home; while some most excellent counsel was given to the men about "standing fire" when they had to bear the scoffs of ungodly mates. Very weighty, too, was his tribute to the worth of Christianity as he told how Christian men were frequently selected for positions of trust even by those superiors who were not themselves Christians, because they could be relied upon. Some strong and timely words were spoken on the subjects of intemperance and impure living; a most earnest appeal to guards and porters to seize their many opportunities of protecting young and lonely lady travellers from the dangers to which they might be exposed, was heartily applauded. His words on this point deserve to be quoted in full:—"We all can do something in the way of dealing with this evil. We each have our different opportunities, and you railway-men have your opportunities in a marked degree. You guards, think what you may do. Think how easily and how, by a little watchful care over some girl who is travelling alone in the train of which you have charge, you may, without trouble to yourself, shield and protect her. From time to time in the course of the journey see what companions she has. See who has left her and who has joined her, and by so doing you may render her a service for which she will thank you to the end of time. You railway porters, who lead a busier life, think what you can do in this matter by a few kindly words and a little kindly advice to the girl who arrives forlorn and friendless at a station in a large town. Railway porters who have girls of your own, think how you would like them to be watched and helped on their arriving, strange, unknown, and unprotected, in a great town! You young men who are not yet married, and to whom I cannot appeal in that respect, treat every girl you see in a railway carriage and on every crowded and busy platform as you would wish your own sister to be treated if she were travelling alone from the old home she has left." Mr. MacInnes wound up his eminently useful address by commending his brethren of the iron road to take for their motto the words of the ancient captain, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

We have not space for details of the rousing speech of Mr. George Clarke, who was very warmly greeted, and who gave encouraging testimony as to the progress of the Mission "all along the line;" or of the testimonies by delegates from Manchester, Perth, Belfast, and London. The Manchester delegate, Mr. Goodridge, a driver and a Christian of many years' standing, is one of nature's orators, and a local Primitive Methodist preacher we should judge, from his fervid utterances, which were greatly enjoyed. Mr. Clarke's skilfully expressed pleas to the railroad magnates on behalf of the railway-men for a cheap cup of coffee, for mission-halls and waiting-rooms, and for "a Sunday off," brought down the house over and over again. Mr. T. A. Denny pleaded hard for the needed £1000, while words of solemn exhortation followed from Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, and words of encouragement from Lady Hope.

Mr. D. Spencer's report was full of good matter—progress in every direction, and much fruit resulting from the labours of the evangelists, special mention being made of the recent missions in Scotland by Mr. George Clarke and Mr. H. Eliot Walton. Mr. Gurney Sheppard's financial statement was by no means a discouraging one, though the growing demands of the work necessitate enlarged help from the Christian public.

On the evening of May 19, a hundred or more delegates from the provinces, with three hundred railway people in London, met at the Lillie-road Hall, West Brompton, for a preliminary Conference. Stirring testimonies were given by a number of the men on the progress of the work in their own places. This was continued at Aldersgate-street next day, the men being reinforced by others from all parts of the country. The increase on former years was considerable, and the account given by the delegates was most cheering, and caused great enthusiasm. The two prominent features of all the testimonies were the salvation of souls and total abstinence from intoxicating drinks. The majority reported that great success had attended their efforts in the places referred to. Not the least feature in the reports, was that of the Scotch progress. The English brethren rejoiced much in the news from North Britain. It was remarkable too that ladies in very many cases were to the front in starting the work. To them the Mission owes very much, and will be glad to owe more.

Suppression of the Opium Trade.

The annual meeting of members and friends of the Society for the suppression of this trade between India and China was held in Devonshire House on Friday. The report read by Rev. Storrs Turner alluded to the negotiations with the Chinese Government relative to the sale of opium, and regretted the unsatisfactory nature of their termination. There were however grounds for encouragement in the fact that no longer can it be said that opium is forced upon China. Meanwhile it is disappointing to know that Chinese statesmen have laid themselves open to a suspicion of complicity in the admission of this drug into their country on account of the revenue derived from its taxation. The Society would continue to observe an attitude of vigilance, and adopt any new measures that might be necessary to further its ends.

The chairman, Sir Joseph W. Pease, M.P., bore testimony to the universal support which the Society had received from the Churches. He reviewed the Parliamentary efforts during the past ten years, and the opposition met with. It was incumbent on the Christians of this country to continue their efforts in the same direction as heretofore. Among the speakers was Dr. B. Foster, M.P., who reminded the Society that the failure was not due to them but the Chinese themselves. The responsibility of producing and supplying the drug rests with India. Mr. James Cropper, M.P., remarked upon the growing strength of the Chinese nation, and thought the time might even come when they would demand the prohibition of the opium traffic as a right.

Mr. Garnet Man, who has lived twenty-five years in the East, related instances of strong men who had become wrecks through opium smoking. The unanimous testimony of officials in Burmah was that of condemnation of its use. Rev. T. Richards (Baptist missionary), Rev. E. W. Syle, D.D., and Rev. C. M. Warren (from Japan), and Rev. James Thomas (from the Bible Society), also addressed the meeting, all of them strongly condemning the traffic. The report published at the office of this paper furnishes in brief much interesting matter on the past efforts and present position of the Society.

Gospel Purity Association.

Six editors all in a row, on one platform! Was there ever before such a conclave of headsmen of the tribe of the fourth estate? And on a subject, too, which, until very recent times, has been deemed unfit for mention, even in a whisper, to ears polite. As for that, Mr. R. C. Morgan, Editor of this journal, who presided, said they certainly did not meet to discuss questions of purity and impurity from choice, but because stern necessity was laid upon them by the circumstances of the time. The Lower Exeter Hall was crowded out at the meeting on Friday evening. Another mark of the notable advance we have made in the effort to heal this running sore of the body social was seen in the overwhelming preponderance of ladies on the occasion. It seems to us that, as it is a question vitally affecting their sex, nothing could be more consonant with propriety than that they should take a full share in the crusade on behalf of private morals and all public legislation affecting them.

The right note was sounded when the gathering arose and sang the grand old hymn beginning with the stanza—

> "O God, our help in ages past,
> Our hope for years to come;
> Our Refuge from the stormy blast,
> And our eternal Home!"

Rev. George Brooke offered prayer, and then a letter from Mrs. Josephine Butler was read. After expressing much regret at inability to be present and speak, she strongly emphasised the need for continued effort in removing the national stigma that yet rests upon the British people for the wicked official connivance at sexual vice, if not the deliberate provision for it, in some of our colonies and dependencies. The International Repeal Congress, that meets in London next month, will be a deeply interesting occasion, and may be trusted to wield a good influence on foreign communities, as well as on our own. Mrs. Butler had also something to say about editors, even of Christian journals, requiring to be kept up to the mark, but we scarcely imagine her admonition could apply to any of the journalistic gentlemen on the platform.

As Chairman, Mr. Morgan was brief in his remarks. He dwelt on the fact that the recent successes of the movement, and the prosperity of the Gospel Purity Association were the outcome of long years of brave, unwearied, individual effort. On the banks of the Thames, he said, as well as on the Ganges, the weaker sex is, in a measure, handicapped in the race of life from its very beginning, and we cannot but rejoice at the increased protection given to female children by the Act of last year. A resolution calling for the raising of the age of protection from 16 to 21 was moved by Rev. B. Waugh, Editor of The Sunday Magazine. As specially representing the little children, he graphically described the course of events last session, as they related to the clause in the Criminal Law Amendment Act dealing with offences against the young. It was a great deal for Mr. Waugh to say that, within eight days, what Sir Richard Cross, as Home Secretary, and other M.P.'s had declared to be impossible, was accepted by the House of Commons and embodied in the Bill without a division. But the statement was quite justified, and Mr. Waugh deserves the thanks of all lovers of children for those eight days' work in the lobbies of St. Stephen's. His plea for the raising of the age of consent was a very telling one, and we hope all those who heard it will have caught some of the speaker's enthusiasm. The resolution was seconded by Rev. W. T. Moore, Editor of The Christian Commonwealth, in a weighty address on the charms of the home life, and the need for persistent faith and effort in advancing this social reform.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, Editor of The Methodist Times, is as popular as ever, and his speech was marked by all those qualities of strong sentiment, strongly and crisply expressed, that have gained him his platform reputation. He moved a resolution bearing on the abolition of regulation in the colonies. Mr. Hughes met with some unmannerly interruption when speaking of the infamy that has attached to the barrack arrangements in India and Hong Kong; but he stood his ground, and declared that until very recently at least his charges were strictly applicable to the authorities in these two places. The only true remedy for vice in the army was to enable our warriors to lead a natural and virtuous family life, and that was purely a money question. We must continue to exercise constant godly pressure on the powers that be, if we would secure a fair and efficient administration of the Criminal Law Amendment Act. As for himself, he was determined to pursue with fire and sword every public man who was known to lead an impure life.

At this point in the proceedings, Mr. J. B Wookey, the Secretary of the Association, made a strenuous appeal for more liberal support to the Society's operations. He referred in strong terms to the abominable literature and objectionable pictures now so freely exposed and offered for sale in different parts of London. Mr. Wookey asked for £300; but we fear that the response of the meeting was a long, long way behind that figure. We commend the good work of the Society to the best sympathies of all lovers of social and national purity. Many living in quiet homes, far removed from the centres of vice, might help in providing the sinews of war for those engaged in the thick of the fight; they can send their contributions to our care.

A long and very powerful address followed from Mr. W. T. Stead, Editor of The Pall Mall Gazette, who has borne such an honourable part in the fray. We cannot now attempt to do anything like justice to his remarkable speech, but we are glad to inform our readers that all the leading speeches delivered at the meeting will be immediately published in pamphlet form. Mr. Stead's leading idea was that we are now in the midst of a great and growing movement for the full enfranchisement of women, socially and politically. This inevitable change carries with it a serious danger—viz., the possibility that the higher moral standard hitherto held by women should be degraded to that of the male sex. It is for the nation to choose whether this result shall follow, or whether the low standard of the man shall rather be elevated to that of the true woman.

The sixth Editor on the platform was Mr. A. S. Dyer, of The Sentinel, but unfortunately he had to leave before the close of the proceedings, and we were deprived of his testimony. The Pall Mall Gazette terms the meeting an unique one, and all who were present will coincide.

UNION TABERNACLE, WANDSWORTH.—A most successful series of Evangelistic meetings, conducted for ten nights by Rev. R. Simpson, senior pastor of the Congregational Church, Govan, Glasgow, has just come to a close. After each service some professed to have received rich blessing, and specially at the evening services of the two Sabbaths which intervened, when the entire building was crowded. Numbers professed to have accepted Jesus as their Saviour, and by Divine grace determined to follow Him. The chapel has been planted in a most necessitous district, where it is surrounded by a population of many thousands who attend no place of worship.

Letters to the Editor.

THE MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

Dear Sir,—Referring to the letter in a recent issue, signed "J. A. S ," with respect to the Mildmay Conference, I may state that I have acted on the suggestion, and invited a fellow-secretary from the provinces to stay with me during the Conference. I shall be pleased to receive the names of any Y.M C.A. Secretaries who may desire to be present, so that I may endeavour to secure them accommodation in Christian homes. Will any friends, willing for the Master's sake, to entertain one or more of these brethren, kindly communicate with me as early as possible.

I am also hoping to be able to arrange for a meeting of London and provincial secretaries during the Conference.—Yours truly,

Walter Jervis, Gen. Sec.

Y.M.C.A., 17, Camden-road, N.W.

GIRLS' BOARDING SCHOOLS.

Dear Sir,—A correspondent in your last week's issue complains that he cannot find a girls' boarding school where the advantages of "homely accomplishments" are given, combined with "a liberal education, under Christian guidance." May I, as one having had more than twenty years' experience in the teaching and training of girls, remind him and others who may raise the same question, that in this case, as in many others, the demand creates the supply. Given a sufficient number of sensible Christian parents, who prefer solid mental culture to mere outward show, and who would not consider it beneath their daughters' dignity to take a real part in the work of a household, and be practically instructed in the duties of a "housewife," and I have no doubt there are many sensible Christian ladies who would be glad to receive their daughters upon such terms, and conscientiously seek to fit them for the duties of life.—Yours truly,

C W.

MEMORISING GOD'S WORD.

Dear Sir,—May I be allowed to add a line to the excellent letter of "D." on "Memorising God's Word"? Very sure am I that if more time were spent in committing the Bible to heart we should see the result, in the happier holier lives of those who profess to believe its precepts. Admirable as is the plan suggested by "D." it is difficult to some to commit to memory whole chapters, or even considerable portions. To such it may be helpful to collect, write out, and then learn texts enjoining special duties, or conveying special promises.

But my object in writing is to urge upon Christian parents the paramount duty of teaching God's Word to their children, and this not as a lesson, but as a pleasure; from happy experience I know it can be done. From early childhood I knew nothing would give my parents so much pleasure as for me to learn a short psalm, to repeat it correctly each Sunday. With increasing years it became a longer one, then a chapter in the New Testament was added, till it became a habit. Many a little present was given as a reward at first, and afterwards when a wish was expressed that the small allowance of pocket money would suffice to purchase a new frock or hat for some poor child in the Sunday-school class, or a warm garment for some aged saint to whom I was permitted to go and read the Bible, the smiling answer would come, "Well, if my child likes to learn an Epistle or any other portion, I think we shall find the money."

Thus, before the blessed Book was valued for its own sake, it was associated with many happy feelings, and when God the Holy Spirit brought its truths with power to the heart, it was a daily joy to recall the well-known precepts and promises to mind, "as we walked by the way," "when we lay down," and "when we rose up."

We cannot give our children grace, but we can help each one, "from a child to know the Holy Scriptures, which are able to make wise unto salvation." When the habit of systematically learning and repeating is acquired, it is a blessed help after a busy day, whether spent in the nursery, schoolroom, shop, office, or the quiet round of home life, to lie down with a message from the Master as our last thought. And none but those who have "wearisome nights" appointed them can fully realise the comfort of having his Word brought to the memory when mind and body seem too weak to seek for it.

As one who in the decline of life has been thus privileged to read through the Holy Scriptures nearly sixty times, always once a year, besides trying to commit some of it to memory, I would earnestly press the duty for themselves and their children upon my fellow Christians. H. W. E.

FEMALE EMIGRATION.

Sir,—A friend lent me to-day The Christian for October 22, 1885, in which I noticed a paragraph about under-paid women workers, who receive 2s. to 3s. per week for nine hours' work per diem. It appears to me to be a great pity that the labour market in Glasgow is over-stocked to such an extent that hundreds of poor girls are on the verge of starvation, while here many cannot get servants, and willingly pay housemaids 10s., and general servants 12s., or still higher. If girls are sent out they ought to have letters to the various ministers and clergymen in Brisbane, and these ministers and clergymen should be notified beforehand that the girls are coming out. Then they will be looked after.

Perhaps you will say, "These girls have never been in service, and cannot do the work." They can surely learn. What one wants in this country more than all else is honesty. The worst girls are too often sent out, and one gets into one's kitchen thief upon thief. Send us honest, respectable girls who are willing to work; that is what we want. Why do Scotch girls so seldom come out? Is it because none of the Glasgow shipowners will take them on their vessels?

I am a quite obscure individual; but if my letter has the effect of a number of nice Scotch girls being sent out here I shall be glad I can guarantee their getting places at once.—Yours truly,

I. I. Jardine.

Wickham-terrace, Brisbane.

MR. E. P. TELFORD is preaching in the large Albert Hall, Nottingham, during this month. The meetings are very successful, and there are many inquirers.

T. J. Woollatt.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—May 30, Psa. cvii. 31—43; May 31, cviii. 1—13; June, 1 Psa. cx. 1—7; June 2, cxi. 1—10; June 3, Acts i. 1—14; June 4, i. 15—26; June 5, ii. 1—13.

MR. SPURGEON.—Having recovered somewhat from his recent attack of gout, Mr. Spurgeon on Sunday morning occupied the pulpit at the Metropolitan Tabernacle, and preached with his accustomed vigour, notwithstanding that a cough troubled him occasionally.

GLASGOW.—A thanksgiving meeting was recently held in Kelvinside Free Church, in connection with the work of grace during the past winter in the West-end of the city, largely through the evangelistic efforts of Mr. George Clarke. A number of friends led in prayer and thanksgiving, while others exhorted the converts to stedfastness in life and testimony.

MEDICAL MISSIONS IN PARIS.—Rev. R. W. McAll asks us to correct a statement in a recent issue, that the dispensary lately opened in connection with his Paris Mission is "the first of its kind." He refers to the medical mission work of Miss de Broen's Belleville Mission, which has been in operation for a number of years. We read the brief paragraph mentioned as meaning that this dispensary is the first of its kind in conjunction with the McAll Mission, not in Paris generally.

BRIGHTON MEDICAL MISSION.—The annual meeting of this Mission was held on Tuesday, May 18, in the Royal Pavilion, Rev. J. G. Gregory presiding. The hon. secretary, T. D. Holmwood, read the report, which showed that there had been 6020 attendances during the year at the Mission Hall in Edward-street, and 4208 at Connaught Institute. The doctor paid 3040 visits to patients in their own homes in the Edward-street district. The deaconesses' visits numbered 3384. In connection with this Mission evangelistic and other meetings are held. Addresses were given by Rev. C. Bond, Mr. G. Maule, Dr. Barnardo, and Rev. W. Fraser.

THE RIGHT SORT OF REVIVAL.—We want the sort of revivals that will make men do the clean thing. If we can have that sort of revival I want to see it; but not cornstalk revivals. Do you know what a cornstalk revival is? Well, if you were to pile up a lot of cornstalks as high as this house, and burn them up, there wouldn't be a hodful of ashes. We want a revival of righteousness; we want a revival of honesty; we want a revival of cleanness and purity, of debt-paying, of prayer-meetings, of family-prayer, and of paying our brothers a little more salary. That's the sort of revival we want. The Lord give us this sort!—Rev. Sam Jones.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—A singularly interesting meeting was held in Stafford Rooms on Monday week to celebrate the Anniversary of the West London Auxiliary of the Open-air Mission. The report, read by Mr. William Davis, hon. secretary, showed the value of the Mission as a means of binding the workers together. Mr. Samuel Gurney Sheppard (the chairman), Rev. Thomas Richardson (vicar of St. Benet's, Stepney), Pastor Frank H. White (of Talbot Tabernacle), Rev. C. F. Webster (head of the Church Army Training Home), Mr. Pericles Green, Mr. Gawin Kirkham, Mr. W. H. Maynard, and Mr. John Short, had each a word of experience, encouragement and counsel; and the meeting separated more determined than ever to carry on the work. So eager were some of them to be at it, that a meeting was at once extemporised in the Edgware-road, under the leadership of Rev. Barclay F. Buxton, curate of St. Paul's, Onslow-gardens.

EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD.

CONFERENCE IN THE GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL, MILE-END.

Tuesday and Wednesday, May 18 and 19.

The new, commodious, and well-appointed building lately erected by Mr. F. N. Charrington was appropriately utilised last week for the second of the series of conferences on this important subject in London.

On Tuesday morning Hon. Ion Keith Falconer presided. Mr. J. E. Mathieson read and commented on Phil. ii. 1—11, after which some time was spent in prayer.

Mr. Reg. Radcliffe said it had been impressed upon him for years that we Protestants have greatly neglected to spread the knowledge of the Saviour; we have been keeping the loaf to ourselves, scarcely sending even a crumb to the heathen. We have been fond of saying, "God so loved the world," &c., but we have kept the knowledge of it pretty much to ourselves. The Roman Catholics have been more scriptural in their operations, sending their emissaries "into all the world," not, alas, to win them to Christ, but to their own system. Let us enter fully into the Spirit of the Master, and be willing to go where He may be pleased to send us. Mr. Radcliffe at the close of his remarks led the meeting in earnest prayer for individual consecration, and for a blessing on the proceedings of the Conference.

Mr. C. H. Judd (China Inland Mission) told how, during the first three years of his stay in China, he became despondent, realising his inability savingly to influence a single soul. For this work we need in a special sense to realise in its fulness the power of our living union with Christ. He related several encouraging incidents from his own experience. God is greatly blessing missionary work in China, still there are only between twenty and thirty thousand converted persons out of all its two hundred and fifty millions.

The Chairman spoke of Aden, on the Red Sea coast, the key to South Arabia. He found the place—contrary to what he had heard—not "all sun and cinders," but quite healthy. The natives crowded round him, willingly accepting portions of Scripture, and eager to learn English. He hoped to return there shortly, and carry on evangelistic work by means of a school, a medical mission, and preaching in the open air, distribution of the Word, &c. The Sultans and tribes in the neighbourhood, being subsidised by the British Government, have motives for not being unfriendly.

Mr. A. G. Parrott referred to the terrible evil of unconverted men being in the foreign mission field.

At the afternoon meeting Mr. R. Paton presided. Mrs. Hudson Taylor said Chinese women in thousands are committing suicide, and drowning their babies as we do kittens. Why? Because they are without God and without a knowledge of his love. Yet thousands of Christian women in this country spend their time in making things for bazaars, paying morning calls, and all that sort of thing, missing the unspeakable joy of winning souls for Jesus. Miss Laura Campbell gave encouraging accounts of work amongst soldiers at Aldershot, Plymouth, and Colchester. She told how soldiers converted became missionaries not only in the ranks, but in the various places where they are stationed.

Dr. Gauld, of Bethnal Green Medical Mission, described the manner of working these missions, and related some instances illustrative of their wide-reaching influence both in China and Bethnal Green. He urged the great importance of Zenana work. A comparatively slight medical training would be sufficient to enhance and greatly increase the usefulness and success of women workers.

Mr. Bailey, who has laboured among some of the 135,000 lepers in India, chiefly in the Madras Presidency, described the loathsome and incurable character of this disease; so terrible that, with all his love to the people, he could not persuade himself to go near nor cross the thresholds of their homes. Yet the power of Christ in the soul enabled the converts to triumph in and through it all.

The subject of the evening meeting, which was held in the Large Hall, was "Home and Colonial Evangelisation." The Chairman, Mr. R. Paton, after reading and commenting on Matt. x., referred to the work of the Religious Tract Society, and spoke of the place and power of the printed page in the evangelisation of the world. The devil is using it very extensively. We must get greater hold of it, and use it. He told how a man in the neighbourhood of Paris got hold of some little books and tracts, made fun of them, and took them with him into the mine. His fellow-workmen read them, and three of them were saved. The simple Word of God, without any interpreter, can do mighty things.

Pastor Frank White read Rom. x.11—15. These passages embraced the scope of all their thoughts. He exhorted to humiliation, in view of the lost condition of so many of our fellow-countrymen. We want Christ's eye in looking on the multitudes perishing.

Mr. Charles Inglis said a sentence of Scripture had been ringing in his ears, "Son, go work to-day in my vineyard." Every word of this command is pregnant with meaning. "Go." Unless we go on in communion with God, service, instead of being a pleasure, will be a burden. "Go work," not idling, not seeking pleasure, not bestowing criticism, but rather words of cheer to encourage on the way. The season for work, "to-day." Our candle may be nearly burnt out! For the love we have to Him who died for us, let us be up and doing while it is called "to-day."

Mr. Henry Varley said Britain had been made the great custodian of the light of the Gospel, of printing presses, civilisation, &c. We had the opportunity of being the pioneers of truth and righteousness to the ends of the earth. Yet he feared our nation had done more during the last fifty years to damn men in the heathen world than we have done to save them. For every man, woman, and child saved, fifty are blasted and cursed by our opium and intoxicating drinks, and not least by the licentiousness of our soldiers, sailors, and civil servants. If Britain thinks she is going to prosper thus, it is time that some one proclaimed that God will have a voice in this matter. Proceeding, he urged working men to see if it was not the will of God that they should find the way to some foreign land, and by their skill and industry maintain themselves while letting their light shine. Young sister, perhaps God wills that you should acquire a little skill in nursing and medicine, and then go among your heathen sisters for Jesus. Although we know iniquity is increasing, we also know that the harvest of Jesus will be glorious. The time is coming when ironclads and torpedoes and all the engines of destruction shall vex the earth no more. Meanwhile, let us see to it that Christ shall have our all.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 19.

At the morning meeting the subject proposed was "Continental Evangelisation." Mr. R. C. Morgan presided, and spoke specially about the hindrances and progress of the Gospel in Spain.

Mr. Hoste described some of his experiences in France, and its terrible need of the Gospel. He spoke encouragingly of the success attending the missions carried on by Mr. MacAll and Miss de Broen.

Mrs. Gardner James spoke of her work in connection with the continental department of the Y.W.C.A. She said young women who had been converted in connection with the Association while governesses in this country frequently were the means of establishing branches on their return home.

Mr. J. E Mathieson gave some particulars as to the condition of Belgium. He said the Roman Catholics have taught the people there that Protestants have no God. But he gave encouraging particulars on the other side.

At the afternoon meeting Mr. H. Grattan Guinness presided, and spoke on "Missionary Emigration." He said he was reminded of the answer of the Scotch minister in days before missionary enterprise was common. At a meeting of Presbyterian ministers, held some hundred years ago, to consider the subject of foreign missions, the prevailing idea seemed to be, Civilise first. One good man said in his broad accent, "Rax (reach) me that Bible." Having opened it, he read Rom. i. 14, 15: "I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the barbarians," &c. We are apt to take too restricted a view of our responsibilities, and confine ourselves to our immediate surroundings. Like her Lord, the Church should have universal sympathies. The gift of tongues to the early Church represented universality. The chief agencies we look to for the accomplishment of the work under consideration are (1) missionaries sent forth and sustained by the Christian Church, and (2) self-supporting missionary work. He had great doubt as to whether missionary effort is gaining upon the field, or whether the field is not gaining upon missionary effort instead. In conducting missionary operations the plan too often adopted is that secretaries and others interested talk and write about their work, and what they have done—not about what has been left undone, and so create a false impression as to progress made.

As to self-sustaining workers, there are some in this country and in other countries. In some parts of the world, however, such as Central Africa, this system would not succeed. Missionaries must be helped. In South-East and South Africa there is a good deal of missionary effort of this character. Some thirty men sent out from the East London Training Institute support themselves in various ways in South Africa, as schoolmasters, farmers, or pastors of churches. William Taylor, of California, planted many self-sustaining missions. He would strongly urge the sending out to India, China, Africa, &c, Christian men of various callings on this basis. The Englishmen who usually go out to India are much more a curse than a blessing. Appalling acounts reach us of their doings and influence.

Rev. W. Float, of Market Harborough, advocated self-sustaining work. Mrs. Osborne, from Cape Town, urged the need in Africa of men and women with souls on fire with the love of God. She said the Zulus are very desirous to be taught. Her own work is specially among soldiers and sailors, in whom she bespoke increased interest.

Mr. Reginald Radcliffe said, as one result of the preaching to Italian soldiers in Rome lately, a man who heard the Gospel was converted, went back to his native Lombardy, where a soul-saving work broke out, and an evangelist had to be sent to carry it on.

Mr. W. Hind Smith said many men now working as missionaries had been converted through the Y.M.C.A.'s. We want from God power, and consecration of motive. He related many interesting incidents of his late visit to North Africa. Although he did not know a word of Arabic, he went among the people in the market, and made extensive use of the small stock which he learnt to repeat, "Allah ebarrak feek (God bless you)." In that Kabyle country there is an open door, a good climate, which will suit Englishmen. A large proportion of the missionaries ought to be ladies, as after the girls are ten years old they cannot be got at until they are married.

Rev. G. F. Dustan, Canada, said those in England have an altogether inadequate idea of the vast extent of that country. As Christian workers, they found it a terrible difficulty to deal with Roman Catholicism there; they regard it as they do Buddhism, and find it even a greater hindrance to the Gospel.

Mr. Radcliffe led in prayer on behalf of the millions sitting in darkness on account of the neglect of those at home who sing about "the precious name of Jesus."

At the evening meeting the subject for consideration was "Foreign Missions." Mr. R. C. Morgan presided. Mr. W. Hind Smith repeated some of his North African experiences, and urged many to give themselves to work abroad.

Dr. Barnardo said he considered technical knowledge of trades and industries of great importance to those who go to engage in foreign work. When mission are self-supporting we shall see blessing hitherto not approached. He knows two young men from the East-end who are now in China working for the Lord as unpaid missionaries. One of them, without much education, holds a position in the Chinese Customs, and the other is supporting himself by following his trade.

Mr. R. Radcliffe with his accustomed earnestness urged the necessity of getting rid of the absurd notion that a man must have passed through a University before he is fit to go as a missionary. We cling too much together in these little islands. Think of the hundreds of thousands of pounds spent on building costly churches and chapels in England. Could we not spare some of it for the heathen? David Livingstone wrote in his journal just before he died, "My Jesus! my king! I again dedicate my whole self to Thee." How many of us feel that we can fully subscribe to this?

The meetings on Thursday were devoted to prayer and testimony. The limits of our space preclude our giving any detailed report of them.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.—On Friday evening last one of those gatherings full of promise and satisfaction to the friends of rescue work was held at 200, Euston road, at the Central Home of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution. The meeting formed the second held this year for the giving of reward books to young women who had been former inmates of one of the Homes, and who attended on this occasion to receive the reward books annually bestowed upon those who retain their situations and give satisfaction to their mistresses. It was pleasing to find, as the names and length of service was called over, that many young women had retained their situations for periods extending over years, one as long as fourteen years, another nine years. The Secretary, Mr. Thomas, gave a most practical address to the young women.

WORKERS' MEETING, HOME OF INDUSTRY.

IT is spring time, the season for the removal of tender plants to fresher air and freer soil. To keep the children shut up in our close East-end poisonous dens is certain moral death. Thank God, we have again been permitted to rescue and train by home Gospel life nearly another hundred. My brave sister, Mrs. Merry, has sailed forth with them accompanied by Miss Stock. Whilst my heart is strong to save another hundred and accompany them (D.V.) in the Sardinian on July 29.

The old Beehive was filled to its utmost capacity by a most sympathetic company of friends on Wednesday evening, embracing representatives from all creeds and climes, home and foreign missionaries, Christian men and women full of love to Jesus and his little ones, ministers from the Society of Friends, learned Jewish doctors (formerly Rabbis), old fellow-workers and new ones, heads of missions and associations, whose tears, as they looked upon the lambs, and heard their sweet songs, said, "This is the best way to scatter and evangelise, by sending the well-trained young ones" Our dear little ones looked bonnie in their bright travelling hoods. Most of them were orphans, and some very young without a relative on earth. Many mother-hearts with myself crushed back in silence the tears that would come as we gazed on these lovely children.

Then we were all brightened by the cheering words of Mrs. MERRY describing the homes of those who had been adopted. Mr. MERRY led in prayer for the definite need of the night's railway journey, &c. Several others followed, and the presence of the Tender Shepherd was felt in our midst. The omnibuses arrived at eight o'clock to take the children back to their supper at the Training Home, from whence they again departed for Euston Station at 10.30 p.m , arriving at Alexandra Dock, Liverpool, where breakfast at 7 a.m. awaited them on board the Sardinian. The party was so arranged that one half over twelve years were each to mother one under that age. Two of Messrs. Allan's stewards and stewardesses will be in constant attendance, besides a doctor.

Mr. W. R. LANE gave us a most appropriate address from the life of the Naaman maid, drawing from the Scriptures lessons of profit. He urged us not to lose our opportunities in testifying to others of the Lord Jesus, for if we do, God has other agencies ready at hand to take our place, and we miss our reward.

We desire to take a step onward in establishing a boarding-house to endeavour to save a few of the many young women from the multitude going to destruction, in the factories around us. Our streets at midnight become more and more awful. We can say with the Psalmist, "All our wisdom is swallowed up" (cvii. 27—30). God only can bring us to "the haven of our desire." With Asa's cry, "We rely on Thee, and in thy name are we come against this multitude" (R.V.). Plead with us while we go forward.

ANNIE MACPHERSON.

BEER IN THE HAY AND HARVEST FIELDS.—Some interesting and useful literature on this subject has been prepared for general circulation by the Secretary of the Agricultural Department of the Church of England Temperance Society, and can be had from the depôt, 9, Bridge-street, Westminster, S.W.

BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.—The South London Branch is in want of flowers, and the workers appeal to country friends for regular supplies of the bright, fresh blossoms which grow in such simple beauty all around their homes. To each bunch is attached a carefully selected text, and the work of distribution affords many an opportunity for telling "The old, old story of Jesus and his love." Some who cannot send flowers could help by sending text-cards. Hampers should be sent off in time to arrive by ten o'clock on Wednesday morning, and will be returned if the address is enclosed. Reports of last year's work can be had by applying to the Secretary, Flower Mission, Metropolitan Tabernacle, Newington Butts, S.E.

RESCUE WORK.—I opened a small Home for young women who had made one false step and wished to retrieve without going into a long Home. The details confided to me of the deceit and falsehood practised on these too confiding sisters are harrowing in the extreme. I am glad to say the twenty girls that have professed restoration are all doing well in service. This is a family Home where these girls are mothered, not allowing them to think they have not erred, but seeking to show them the way back to the paths of virtue. I have had very little help, but the Lord has encouraged me to go on trusting Him. Dressmaking has recently been added as a means of helping to support the Home.

Yours very truly, (Mrs.) H. HARRIER.

The Book World.

THE PULPIT TREASURY. E. B. Treat, New York. The May issue contains a number of articles of great homiletic value. Suggestive in matter and evangelical in tone, it should prove a helpful assistant to pulpit preparation.

OUT OF STEP; or, The Broken Crystal. By C. M. CLARKE. 1s. 6d. S. W. Partridge & Co. Well written and illustrated. Practically helpful in suggesting the right motives for character and conduct. A capital book for all young folks.

WORDS AND WEAPONS FOR CHRISTIAN WORKERS. J. H. Richards, New York. The current number of this monthly, conducted by Dr. G. F. Pentecost, is—what it professes to be—a storehouse of thoughts for those who work in the Master's vineyard. Dr. Pentecost's notes on the Sunday-school lessons are very interesting. Copies may be had from this office, 4d. each.

MEDICAL MISSIONS: Their Place and Power. By Rev. JOHN LOWE, Edinburgh. 5s. T. Fisher Unwin. Christ combined preaching and healing in his earthly ministry; and He commanded his disciples "to preach the kingdom of God, and heal the sick.". The latter part of his command has not been obeyed as it ought by the Christian Church. Only during this century has the power of the ministry of healing as a means of paving the way for the Gospel in heathen lands been utilised. Mr. Lowe insists at length on the duty of using this power, and supports his argument with facts which tell an eloquent tale. He describes how Medical Missions arose, what they have done, and what they are doing. His story is full of interest, and should deepen the growing conviction that all missionaries ought to have some knowledge of medicine. We made an extract in a recent issue from the closing chapter of the book.

HELPS TO BELIEF. Edited by Rev. T. TEIGNMOUTH SHORE, M.A. 1s. each. Cassell & Co. Three volumes of what promises to be a valuable series of manuals on the religious difficulties of the day lie before us. "Creation," by the Bishop of Carlisle, looks at God's creative work from three points of view—the theological, the philosophical, and the scientific. It is characterised by breadth of information, and is calculated to meet the perplexities of any whose faith in revelation may have been somewhat shaken by recent speculations. "The Divinity of our Lord," by the Bishop of Derry, is a suggestive manual that will find a distinct place for itself. Its arguments are pointed and convincing, and its style is lucid. "Prayer," by the Editor, Mr. Teignmouth Shore, is written with an impassioned force and depth of conviction that cannot fail to impress. It shows the relation of prayer to God, law, and the physical world, and dwells emphatically on its potent power in the spiritual realm.

ANNIE WILLIAMSON is the title of a booklet by Mr. JAMES BALFOUR, W.S., of Edinburgh (Religious Tract Society of Scotland, Edinburgh 1d), in which he tells of the wondrous way of grace in the heart of a poor sick girl who heard him explain the way of salvation. So blessed has he found the recital of the story to be that he has put it into this form, hoping the tide of blessing may flow on in still larger measure. We cordially commend it as suitable for enclosure with correspondence to unconverted friends.

THE CONVERTED CATHOLIC is the title of a monthly magazine conducted by Mr. O'Connor, a converted priest, who, while evangelising in New York, carried on a relentless paper warfare with Rome and all her works. In the April number there is a very remarkable letter purporting to be written by Cardinal Manning to Lord Robert Montagu in 1883, in which the Cardinal expresses intense dissatisfaction with the state of things among the Romish clergy. Mr. J. Kensit, 18, Paternoster-row, is the London publisher of Mr. O'Connor's magazine.

DISTRESS IN WALES.—DEAR SIR,—I ask the favour of your inserting my grateful acknowledgments of generous gifts in reference to my recent appeal for aid in the relief of the prevailing sad distress in South Wales. I have not, I trust, omitted to acknowledge any kind donations accompanied by an address; for all, I would renew my warm thanks. What I have received has enabled me sensibly to alleviate the privation and suffering, now, I fear, deepening, rather than abating in many places.—Yours most faithfully,

SAMUEL GILLESPIE PROUT.

Dylais Lodge, Aberdulais.

HACKNEY SERVANTS' HOME.—Last Friday evening a few friends met at Beresford House, 13, Fremont-street, South Hackney, to dedicate the house as a Servants' Home. It is pleasantly situated in a quiet street on the edge of Victoria-park, and is well adapted for its purpose. After viewing the premises, the guests took tea together, and then held a dedication meeting, presided over by Mr. Gawin Kirkham. These havens of refuge for servants out of place are much needed, and we rejoice that another has been opened. Those who wish to encourage the work in its infancy may communicate with Mrs. Seymour, Wilton Lodge, Winchmore-hill, N.; or Mrs. Gawin Kirkham, 15, Beresford-road, Highbury New-park, N.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

THE Dundee Licensing Court refused all applications for new licences.

OF 280 English Presbyterian Churches, 240 have Temperance Societies.

THE first temperance organ in Spanish has been started at Monte Video, South America.

MR. JAMES GILLIES of the Scottish Temperance League has recently had a successful temperance tour in the Orkneys.

A NATIONAL TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL has been opened at Chicago, under the auspices of the Women's Christian Temperance Union.

OUT of 382 Congregationalist theological students, 337 are abstainers. Last year 80 of 94 newly settled ministers declared themselves abstainers.

THE Church of England Temperance Society employs 23 missionaries in London and the provinces in special rescue work at police-courts and elsewhere.

THE report of the Prince's Hall Conference on Temperance Legislation has been published. Both sides of the question were ably represented, and the report will be a valuable record.

THE Synod of the Presbyterian Church in England recently met in London. Many of the members were present at breakfast, when an able address on Total Abstinence was delivered by Archdeacon Farrar.

THE Cardiff Town Council, since January 1, has secured the suppression of six "bogus clubs" in the town. The Sunday Closing Act is found inadequate to the suppression of the "clubs," and needs strengthening.

REV. J. W. HORSLEY directs attention to the startling increase in female drunkenness. The proportion of arrests is one female to three males, but of criminals ten times convicted there are 9000 women as against 5000 men.

SCHUMACHER, of Ohio, the "oatmeal king," will not employ, in any capacity, anyone who drinks intoxicants. From drawing a hand-cart he has risen by sobriety and hard work to be the owner of the largest oatmeal factory in the world.

A WRITER in The Times complains that in Shaftesbury-avenue, London, three new public-houses are in course of erection, all on one side the way, and within a distance of 300 yards, though the avenue and adjoining streets are already over supplied.

THE Glasgow Abstainers' Union has just held its annual meeting. The work of the Union embraces cookery and sewing classes, mothers' meetings, a Band of Hope, entertainments, lectures, penny savings bank, a sea-side Home for the poor, besides other forms of Christian work.

MR. AND MRS. MOUNTAIN.—A correspondent of The Victorian Independent writes in very warm terms of the Gospel services held by these evangelists at Kew, where they conducted a ten days' mission.

BUXTON, DERBYSHIRE.—Shortly one thousand soldiers will encamp on Buxton Common. Rev. Walter Bradbury will conduct a mission and hold Bible readings for visitors daily at 3, Belle Vue-terrace.

THE FRESH-AIR HOME ON REDHILL COMMON, says Miss Macpherson, where our widows have gone for three weeks' change, and have been most hospitably entertained, is in need of funds. Many an aged life has been brightened by spending there the first holiday of the kind they had ever known on earth. No better way could a pound be spent in summer time than in sending an East-end widow to enjoy the fresh air, and forget her aches and pains and loneliness.

LITTLE MELTON, WYMONDHAM.—An all day meeting for prayer and humiliation, in connection with the evangelistic work superintended by Mr. G. M. Chamberlin, was held in the Mission Hall on May 20. Under the presidency of Rev. R. Govett, of Norwich, the morning was spent in prayer and singing, the afternoon and evening in prayer and short addresses by Rev. Easter, of Dereham; Revs. McAllan, Perkins, and Mr. Bullimore and Mr. Adie, of Norwich. The Norwich city missionaries also were present, with many ministers from surrounding towns and villages.

WANDSWORTH.—The London Presbytery has engaged the services of Messrs. Davey and Irvine, two evangelists, whose labours have been blessed to the salvation of many souls in the North of Ireland, to evangelise in London for the next three months. They commenced their work very auspiciously in Wandsworth Presbyterian Church. At the close of each service anxious souls remained to the inquiry-meeting, and many left professing to be converted to God. We would gladly have kept our brethren longer, but they were advertised to begin at Millwall on May 17. Christians have been much refreshed, and Christian work greatly stimulated by this visit.

C. MATHIESON SMITH.

INDIAN AND COLONIAL EXHIBITION.—The Prince of Wales and the executive of the forthcoming Exhibition have, in response to the representations made to them by the President of the Bible Society, placed at the disposal of the Committee a site for a kiosk in the South African section of the Queen's Gate Annexe, for the display of versions; they have also granted to the Society the use of a shop in Old London-street. Visitors to the Exhibition will thus have an opportunity of seeing the Holy Scriptures in some hundred and twenty-five of the languages and dialects spoken in the British Empire, and will be enabled to realise to some extent the diversity of the nations and peoples which own the sway of the beloved Queen of England and Empress of India.

Notes on Daily Readings

SUNDAY, MAY 30.—JUDGES XVI.

THE history of Samson is little else than the alternate putting forth of great strength or great folly. The strength came from God, the folly from himself. Now that the end approaches, the folly for a time triumphs, and betrays the secret of his strength to his enemies, by whom he is deprived of it. But at the last, chastened and humbled by his folly, he calls upon God to renew his strength, which is so far granted to him that his last putting forth of strength is more destructive to his enemies than all the previous actions of his life. Whilst Samson was doubtless raised up to show Israel a picture of themselves, we should not overlook its personal application, even as depicting to the Christian the two natures within him, of which we read Gal. v. 17: "The flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh: and these are contrary the one to the other." Samson may be a warning to the believer of the evil results of "walking after the flesh" rather than "after the Spirit;" whilst his mighty deeds may show what triumphs wait on faith and true Nazarite consecration to God.

17.—If I be shaven, then my strength will go from me.—So said Samson in describing the result of destroying his Nazarite consecration to God, but in ver. 20 it is better explained in the words: "He wist not that the Lord was departed from him." His strength was not in his hair, but in the Lord. The reason why long hair was specially the mark of Nazarite consecration to God seems to have been (as we gather from 1 Cor. xi. 3—6) that long hair was regarded as a covering, and as the wife's covered head, whether naturally or artificially, was a recognition of the headship of the husband, so the Nazarite's covered head implied a covering up of self that God might be recognised as his head. The spiritual lesson to be derived from this is that as "Christ is the head of every (Christian) man," self must be covered, if Christ's headship is to be owned or displayed.

MONDAY, MAY 31.—JUDGES XVII.

"A wholly disconnected narrative here follows, without any mark of time by which to indicate whether the events preceded or followed those narrated in the preceding chapter. The only point of contact with the foregoing history of Samson is that we are still concerned with the tribe of Dan. Josephus places it after the death of Joshua."—Sp. Com.

1.—There was a man of Mount Ephraim whose name was Micah.—"The account of the image worship which Micah established in his house upon the mountains of Ephraim is given in a very brief and condensed form, because it was simply intended as an introduction to the account of the establishment of this image-worship in Laish-Dan in Northern Palestine."—Keil. Considered as the one who introduced idolatry into Israel, it is significant that Micah appears upon the scene as a thief. His mother—fitting mother to such a son!—curses the theft when she loses the money, but blesses the thief when it is restored! She then as a pious act dedicates it to idolatry, and hands it over to her thief-son to make him an idolater likewise. The next step is the will-worship of ritualism; he "consecrated one of his sons who became his priest;" but apparently not quite at ease in so doing, he tempts a wandering Levite with the bribe of "ten shekels of silver by the year," victuals and apparel, to be unto him "a father and a priest," and then strangely deludes himself with the idea that this tissue of idolatry, self-will, and superstition can be pleasing to the Lord: "Now know I that the Lord will do me good, seeing I have a Levite to my priest."

TUESDAY, JUNE 1.—JUDGES XVIII.

Micah is soon aroused from his delusion that the Lord would do him good, by finding his idol and his priest stolen from him. The thief-idolater is visited with a judgment that recalls his old sin, and he who bribed the Levite to be to him "a father and a priest" is outbidden by a tribe lapsing into idolatry, whose appeal, "Go with us and be to us a father and a priest," is to the father-priest irresistible. This is the first specimen we find in Scripture of the father-priest (for no priest of the Lord is ever so called), and it is not an attractive specimen. The so-called priests of Apostate Christendom have revived the designation, though its use is distinctly forbidden by our Lord (Matt. xxiii. 9), and many of their characteristic features may be seen in this apostate Levite, who may be considered their prototype.

30.—Jonathan, the son of Gershom.—"The Levite, before left unnamed to mark his ignominy, is at the very close named, and the name, taken in connection with his ancestry, takes us by surprise. Jonathan means 'the gift of Jehovah,' yet he proved a curse sent from Jehovah to an apostate people."—Fausset. He is, however, by his very name, a striking type of that gift of God to his Church—ministry—(see Eph. iv. 11, "He gave apostles," &c), which the corruption of the Church has turned into priesthood, and that an idolatrous priesthood. It is not the Lord's gift that has been a curse, but man's perversion of that gift. The gift itself is now, as ever, a blessing.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 2.—JUDGES XIX.

1.—And it came to pass in those days.—"The note of time (xx. 28) shows that the date of this history is in the lifetime of the first settlers in Canaan."—Sp. Com.

2.—His concubine.—"That is, a secondary wife, recognised as such by usage, though against the original marriage law (Matt. xix. 4—9), but not having the same rights as the original and legal wife."—Fausset.

29.—Divided her together with her bones into twelve pieces—"There is something truly terrible in the stern ferocity of grief and indignation which dictated this desperate effort to arouse his countrymen to avenge his wrong (compare 1 Sam. xi. 7). A somewhat similar trait of character may be seen in Absalom's conduct (2 Sam. xiv. 30)."—Sp. Com. "This sad history is prefaced by the significant statement that 'there was no king in Israel.' Joshua, and the elders who survived him, were now dead. The removal of God-fearing rulers is like the breaking down of a dam, which opens the course for sin to deluge a land, sweeping all before it. The innate depravity of our fallen nature accounts for all. Nothing but legal checks and magisterial rule can restrain even its external outbreaks; its inward evil needs even a higher power to control it. Five times the sacred writer notices the absence of civil government and a governor, as accounting for the prevalence of evil (xvii. 6, xviii. 1—7, xix. 1, xxi. 25). If even in well-ordered communities fearful crimes are sometimes perpetrated, what a deluge of evil would overwhelm us if good government were withdrawn. Let us learn to be thankful for the blessings of law and order. It is suggestive that the origination of idol-worship by Micah and his Levite chaplain, and its adoption by the whole tribe of Dan, are narrated immediately before the atrocious sin of Gibeah. Idolatry and immorality are twin sisters."—Fausset.

THURSDAY, JUNE 3.—JUDGES XX.

1.—Mizpeh.—"There is great difficulty in fixing the locality of Mizpeh. Mizpeh in Benjamin (Josh. xviii. 26) is probably the same as that which appears as a place of national assembly in 1 Sam. vii., x. 17, and 2 Kings xxv. 23, and hence we may conclude that it is the Mizpeh here mentioned."—Sp. Com.

11.—So all the men of Israel were gathered against the city, knit together as one man.—"With this remark, which indicates briefly the carrying out of the resolution that was adopted, the account of the meeting of the congregation is brought to a close; but the actual progress of the affair is really anticipated, inasmuch as what is related in vers. 12—21 preceded the expedition in point of time."—Keil.

18.—Went up to the house of God.—"It should be 'to Bethel' as the LXX., Syriac, Chaldee, and Arabic all render it (so R.V.). That Bethel here is a place is evident from vers. 26, 27. We conclude, therefore, that at this time the ark was for some reason at Bethel (see 1 Sam. x. 3), and not at Shiloh."—Sp. Com.

26.—And wept . . . and fasted that day until even.—"The congregation now discovered from this repeated defeat that the Lord had withdrawn his grace, and was punishing them. Their sin, however, did not consist in the fact that they had begun the war itself—for the law in Deut. xxii. 22, to which they themselves had referred (ver. 13), really required this—but rather in the state of mind with which they had entered upon the war, their strong self-consciousness, and great confidence in their own might and power. They had, indeed, inquired of God who should open the conflict, but they had neglected to humble themselves before Jehovah, the covenant God, in the consciousness not only of their own weakness and sinfulness, but also of grief at the moral corruption of their brother tribe. It was not till after the second severe defeat, when the tenth part of the whole army had fallen, that they humbled themselves before the Lord."—Keil. The spiritual lesson seems to be that church discipline against offending brethren may be exercised in a spirit which itself calls for discipline from the Lord. See the right spirit described in 2 Cor. vii. 11.

FRIDAY, JUNE 4.—JUDGES XXI.

3.—O Lord God of Israel.—"The twofold repetition of the name of Israel ('Why is this come to pass in Israel? If there should be to-day one tribe lacking in Israel?') is very striking in connection with the title of Jehovah as 'God of Israel.' It contains a very forcible pleading of the covenant, and memorial of the promises. The very name of Israel, too, comprehends all the twelve tribes; with one of them blotted out the remnant would not be Israel."—Sp. Com.

22.—Be favourable unto them for our sakes.—R.V. reads this, "Grant them graciously unto us," which agrees better with the evident meaning of the whole transaction, which presents the Benjaminites as taking by force that which they afterwards pray may be conceded as a gift. They further plead, with somewhat of casuistry, that as their daughters were taken from them by force, the men of Shiloh did not break their oath that they would not give them in marriage to the men of Benjamin. This is evidently the meaning of the words, "For ye did not give unto them at this time, that ye should be guilty."

25.—In those days there was no king in Israel.—"In this the idea is implied that, under the government of a king, who administered right and justice in the kingdom, such things could not possibly have happened. This not only refers to the conduct of the Israelites towards Benjamin in the war, the severity of which was not to be justified, but also to their conduct towards the inhabitants of Jabesh (xxi. 5). It also applies to the oath that they would not give any of their daughters as wives to the Benjaminites, as well as to the advice given by the elders to the remaining two hundred to carry off virgins from the festival at Shiloh."—Keil.

"So ends this sad history of sin, shame, sorrow, and slaughter. The providence of God alone, working in connection with his everlasting covenant, saved for better times Israel from the utter destruction which Israel's own corruption deserved, and otherwise must have entailed. 'I am Jehovah, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed' (Mal. iii. 6)."—Fausset.

SATURDAY, JUNE 5.—RUTH I.

It is refreshing to turn from the scenes of sin and slaughter, with which the Book of Judges closes, to the calm and peaceful story of the inner life of a pious family of Israel. It is turning from troublous times in the history of "Israel after the flesh," to God's gracious dealings with members of the inner circle of Israel—"the Israel of God." We thus have an important witness that midst all the stormy scenes without, the spiritual people of God were cared for and blessed, while the light thrown by the history of Ruth upon the lineage of David through the whole period of the rule of the Judges, i.e., from Salmon (who fought under Joshua) to Jesse the Bethlehemite (whose history is continued in 1 Sam. xvi.), is most important in its bearing upon our Lord's human ancestry.

14—Orpah kissed her mother-in-law; but Ruth clave unto her.—We have a picture here of the two classes in the professing Church before whom lies the privilege of "forgetting their own country, and their father's house," and "coming to trust" under "the wings of the Lord God of Israel." Orpah represents the mere professor, who is ready, as was Judas, with his profession of affection, but in his heart turns back to the world. Ruth, who clave unto her mother-in-law, represents those who "with purpose of heart cleave unto the Lord" (Acts xi. 23). What Orpah lost may be seen by what Ruth gained.

16.—Whither thou goest I will go.—The effect of Naomi's repeated entreaties to Ruth to leave her was only to bring out more clearly Ruth's steadfast determination to cast in her lot with the people of the Lord. Compare Elisha's steadfastness in not leaving Elijah (2 Kings ii.). In each case the reward of persistence was great. Compare also Matt. xv. 22—28; also Gen. xxxii. 26. And on the other hand weak compliance in opposition to one's own better judgment (1 Kings xiii. 18, 19).

20.—Call me not Naomi, call me Mara.—The meaning of Naomi is "pleasant, sweet." Mara means "bitter." Naomi's sorrow, returning without her husband or her sons, is natural enough, but she spoke unadvisedly when she said, "The Lord hath testified against me, and the Almighty hath afflicted me," and that she was soon to learn.

Judge not the Lord by feeble sense,—
But trust Him for his grace;
Behind a frowning providence
He hides a smiling face.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every fleet.

E. J. MATHER, Director.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN.

President—Right Hon. Earl of Aberdeen.

Over Fifty Thousand of our poorest City Children regularly attend the 180 Ragged School Missions affiliated with the

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

The operations include Sunday and Bible Schools, Day and Infant Free Schools, Week-night Schools for Rough Lads and Girls, Industrial Classes, Gospel Mission Services, Mothers Meetings, Ragged Churches, Bands of Hope, Temperance Meetings, and Crèches. Country Houses provided for the weakly or convalescent. Emigration is also promoted, and numerous other agencies for the benefit of the poor children and their parents. Additional funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully acknowledged by JOHN KIRK, Secretary.

Spiritual Power for Missionary Work.

By REV. GRIFFITH JOHN, Missionary to China.
With Preface by
Rev. HENRY SIMON, of Westminster Chapel.

"If any one wants to have his soul stirred within him for his work at home, let him read 'Spiritual Power for Missionary Work.'"—Lay Preacher.

"This is an eloquent discourse upon the need of the Holy Spirit's influence in work for Christ, and is followed by a powerful plea for increased help to the missionary cause."—The Baptist.

"Let missionary students read this short essay; and let its reasoning be laid to heart by those also who have to work at home. If the Churches were baptized with the missionary spirit, how rapidly the Gospel would now spread in the world!"—Methodist.

The Bible for the World.

A Lecture

By Rev. A. N. SOMERVILLE, D.D.
of Glasgow.

"Would that in the darkness of this world's night we were all awake! The Lord Jesus expects that His people shall form a chain of watchers, extending from Jerusalem, the scene of His triumphs, to the very ends of the earth. He would have them kindle their responsive signal fires amid the gloom, till tidings

"Of that renowned and glorious conquest,
Once achieved on Calvary,"

shall have reached the savage Ethiop, the Makololo, and red Kaffir, on the south; the Laplander and the native of frozen Siberia on the north; till, on the west, the glad tidings shall have coursed through the kingdoms of Europe, bounded across the ocean, and swept over the three Americas, from Greenland's icy mountains to the flaming Andes, and thence to Fuegia's inhospitable shore; and till, on the east, the song of liberty shall have burst from the lips of emancipated India, shall have been caught up by the millions of awakening China, shall have been echoed back in strains of gratitude from the isles of the wide Pacific; and till the tiny Norfolk Isle, with its pines and tree-ferns, and vast Australia, with all her gold, consecrate their service to the Lord."—PAGE 13.

Variety, Unity, Activity.

An Address

By Rev. A. N. SOMERVILLE, D.D.
of Glasgow.

"It is probable that the profuse variety in the development of grace in different individuals is due in part to the diversity of natural constitution with which grace comes in contact. Here we find Abel with his righteousness, and Enoch with his holy walk; Noah, with his stedfastness; Abraham, with his faith; Sarah, with her wifely reverence; Melchisedec, grandest, as I take it, of the sons of Ham; the servant Eliezer, with his conscientiousness; Isaac, with his fear of the Lord; Rebecca, with her alacrity at the call of God; Jacob, with his power in prayer; Joseph, with his filial and fraternal love; Job, the Gentile, with his patience; Moses, the lawgiver, with his meekness; Aaron, with his stillness under the rod of God; Miriam, with her timbrel of praise, and all her 'jubilee singers' by the sea; Joshua, with his courage; Jethro, the Midianite, with his sagacity; Caleb, with his full following of the Lord; Phinehas, with his zeal; Rahab, of Jericho, who received God's messengers with peace."—PAGE 4.

In this remarkable address Mr. Somerville enumerates and gives the characteristics of nearly one hundred Scripture persons.

HOMES OF HOPE,

4, 5, and 6, Regent Square, Gray's Inn Road, London, W.C.

Special efforts are made on behalf of Mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women, before they become mothers, as are unfitted, from their previous good character and position, to mix with others. The applications for admission are painfully urgent.

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S NEW WORK ON CONSUMPTION CHRONIC BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, ASTHMA, AND ALL OTHER CHEST DISEASES.

SIXPENCE (Post Free), or Large Edition (cloth), 1s. 3d. from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E., and Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The Seventeenth Series of Weekly Cases is now publishing, from May to August.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of a LITTLE GIRL of MIDDLESBORO'.

Twelve months ago I was consulted by Mrs. Barker, of Newport-road, Middlesboro', Yorks, on behalf of her daughter, then between seven and eight years old. "Having already lost my eldest daughter at the same age (she writes), I am very anxious. I have great faith that your medicine will cure my child."

Notes on the case: "Family subject to Bronchitis and Consumption. The little patient had suffered from repeated bronchial attacks since nine months old. Sixteen months before I heard of the case she had had inflammation of the lungs, and latterly hooping cough, followed by more severe attacks, which confined her to her bed. The cough had become terribly severe, and the breathing very short."

I forwarded medicine, with letter of advice, at once; and she continued with the same, and finally recovered.

I have received a letter from the father, dated March 15, 1886, in which he says:—"When Mrs. Barker first wrote to you we were very anxious, having lost one daughter in Consumption. At this time we heard of the case of Mrs. R., the wife of one of our local preachers, who had been given up by two doctors, who had begun your treatment and had been fully restored. For six months my daughter had been confined indoors. She took your medicine up to December last, and all the time has been gradually recovering. Friends who saw her last March never expected to see her now. She has been out in the cold weather this winter, a thing she has never done before. We attribute her recovery to the blessing of God upon your medicine.—Yours, &c., J. R. Barker.

Tract Society Facts.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY proclaims the Gospel of the Grace of God in 177 languages. It was founded 87 years ago with the object of spreading the news of God's love at Home and in Foreign Lands.

FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED.

It is supported by, and aids Christians of all Evangelical Denominations. Circulated nearly 82 millions of publications last year.

Does not expend one shilling of its subscriptions or donations on management or other expenses.

Uses all its Missionary Funds for the object for which they are subscribed, but pays all its expenses out of Trade Funds.

Has aided in printing the Pilgrim's Progress in over 70 languages.

Has published its New Testament Commentary in ten languages—Chinese, Arabic, Syriac, Mahrati, Bengali, Canarese, Urdu, Singhalese, Karen.

Made grants of Tracts last year to the extent of 26,000,000, suitable for all classes.

Distributes packets of healthy interesting literature to almost all the Emigrants leaving the ports of the United Kingdom.

Provides for a very large distribution of Books and Tracts for sailors of all nationalities.

Has issued more than 40,000 libraries, varying from 25 to 500 volumes, either at very reduced rates, or for very poor districts free.

Helps all the Missionary Societies in providing Gospel literature in their fields of work, but is only able to do a tithe of what is needed, through want of funds.

Maintains in all its publications a testimony to Evangelical Truth.

A subscription of 10s. 6d. or upwards constitutes membership in the Society; a sum of £10 10s. constitutes Life-membership. All subscribers receive copies of the new tracts and other small publications.

Subscriptions may be sent to the Secretaries, Rev. Lewis Borrett White, D.D.; and Rev. S. G. Green, D.D.; 56, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. Cheques, &c., should be crossed, and made payable in the name of Mr. Joseph Tarn, Cashier.

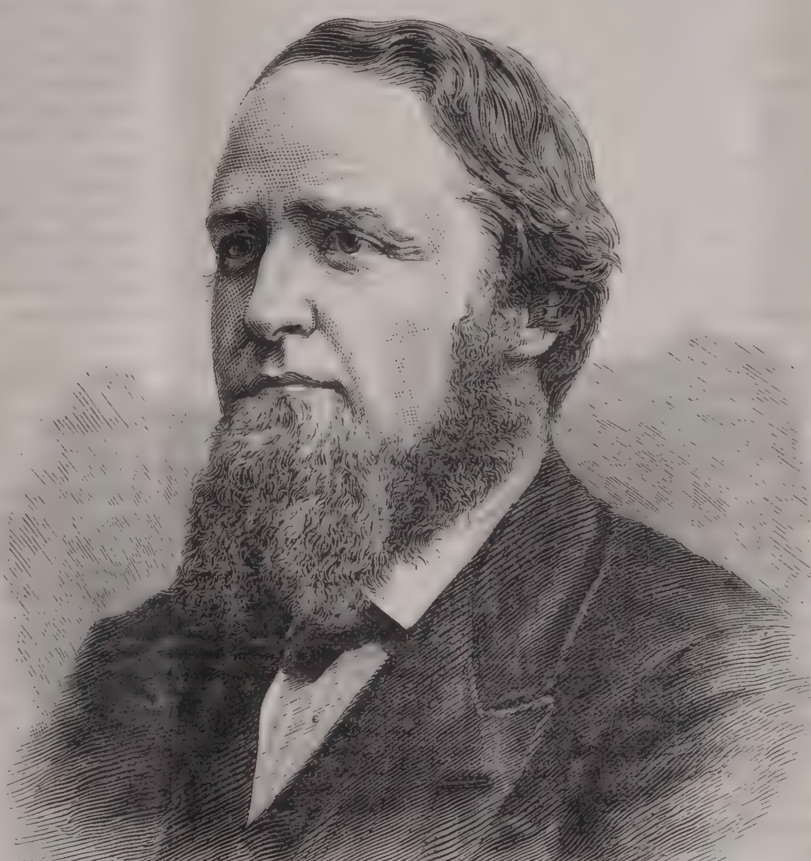
REV. JOSEPH COOK, BOSTON, U.S.

JOSEPH COOK is now a household name in America and England. His lectures have made him famous. Crowds flocked to hear them where they were delivered; and in their printed form they have run through many editions. His praises have been sung by men above the suspicion of stooping to flattery. President McCosh, of Princeton College, a Scotsman who has all the proverbial caution of his race, once wrote in The Catholic Presbyterian:—

> I regard Joseph Cook as a Heaven-ordained man. He has as much power of eloquence as Parker, and vastly more acquaintance with philosophy than the mystic Emerson. He lightens and thunders, throwing a vivid light on a topic by an expression or comparison, or striking a presumptuous error as by a bolt from heaven.

This and other tributes have been accorded him because he has buckled on his armour like a true knight, entered the arena of discussion, and battled bravely with the foes of revealed truth. He is par excellence a defender of the faith. It is mainly in that capacity that we welcome him to a place in our portrait gallery.



Joseph Cook was born in Ticonderoga, in the State of New York, on January 26, 1838. Boyhood is always a crucial period, for the development of character then begins, and the powers that make the man dawn. The influences of schools and schoolmasters, of relatives, friends, and social surroundings, go a long way to mould the future of a life. Fortunately for the subject of our sketch, his early influences were of a favourable nature. His first teacher was Dr. Samuel H. Taylor, who laid the foundations of solid learning in his mind. He passed to Yale College in 1858, but devotion to study so affected his health that he had to leave it in 1861. He returned to College in 1863, and graduated in 1865, carrying off some of the highest honours Harvard had to give. He then took a three years' theological curriculum at Andover, to which he added a fourth year for special examination of advanced religious and philosophical thought. He was licensed to preach, but was never ordained to any pastoral charge. He was destined to make the world his parish. In 1871 he went to Germany, where he attended the lectures of some eminent specialists in different departments of research. The knowledge of books and theories thus gained was broadened by a tour through the Continent, in which a knowledge of men was acquired. These years were crowded with hard work. The student scorned ease, and chose to live laborious days. He reaped his reward in a fund of information and width of culture seldom at the command of a young man.

Mr. Cook's studies were undertaken with a definite end in view. He did not seek knowledge for its own sake, but because of the aid it might render to the cause of truth. His ambition was to become a lecturer on the relations of religion to science and philosophy. That ambition was gratified in 1874, when he made his appearance on the platform of Tremont Temple, Boston. His success was immediate and startling. Boston is a city where brilliant social circles and literary luminaries abound. Bostonians proudly call their city "the hub of the universe." It is by no means an easy task to rouse it to religious enthusiasm; but Joseph Cook did this. He drew audiences of 3000, in which were to be found professors, ministers, lawyers, doctors, authors, and thoughtful men and women of all shades of thinking; he compelled their earnest attention, and sent them away to talk with unusual eagerness of what they heard. The secret of his strength revealed itself on further acquaintance. He felt what he said, so he spoke with power. His lectures were studded with impassioned bursts of eloquence, which now lit up a darkened theme, and anon smote a crying abuse. He had in him all the elements of an orator. His language was fluent and persuasive. His voice, rich in tone and strong in compass, was under perfect control. He knew how to summon "apt alliteration's artful aid," and the charm of imagery. He had the knack of bringing the whole range of his reading to bear on the particular topic before him. And, above all, he had the intense moral force which came from belief in the truths he uttered. He put himself into his words; so they told.

His lectures were reported, in whole or in part, in the leading newspapers, and afterwards published in volume form. They supplied a felt want. They summarised the results of researches in various fields of intellectual effort, and discussed the problems of the day in a manly and impartial spirit. Their chief merit lay in the fact that he led men back to fundamental, self-evident, and axiomatic truths. The changes were rung on the old, yet ever new, facts of God, Freedom, Responsibility, the necessity of the New Birth and of the Atonement, and the duty of immediate repentance. The words spoken in one of the latest of them, "No man, no church, is strong that is fed on guesses," might be taken as the motto of them all. They built up in an age when the tendency is to pull down. Because of this valuable quality they have been helpful in dispelling doubt and confirming faith.

The range of their topics has added to their interest. Philosophical, scientific, and political subjects have come in for discussion; and no unprejudiced reader will deny that they seldom touch a theme without adorning it. This being so, we can scarcely wonder that the lectures on Biology have passed through sixteen editions, those on Transcendentalism through thirteen, and those on Orthodoxy through seven.

The lectures in Tremont Temple represented only part of Mr. Cook's activity. In 1878, for example, he delivered 150 lectures in various States, which necessitated a railway journey of 10,500 miles, and carried three volumes through the press. In the following year he delivered 160 lectures, travelled 12,500 miles, and conducted a New York Thursday evening lectureship as well as that in Boston on Monday. These facts tell a tale of unwearied labour.

By this time his fame had spread far beyond the bounds of his native country. Men in distant lands read his writings, and longed to hear him speak. Numerous invitations to take a lecturing tour round the globe reached him. In 1880 he felt free to listen to these. He set out on a mission which lasted for two years and seventy-seven days, and in the course of which he visited some of the leading cities of the world. Wherever he lectured, large and influential audiences flocked to hear him. His impressive style of oratory, and the ringing emphasis with which he drove a truth home, lent a force to the spoken words absent from the printed page.

He met with a very warm welcome in Great Britain, where he made 135 public appearances. He opened his campaign at the meeting of the Congregational Union in Birmingham. An eye-witness describes his reception thus: "The whole assembly rose and greeted him with loud and repeated cheering, and a storm of applause followed the conclusion of the address." In South Wales, at Sheffield, Bradford, Leeds, and Newcastle, he awoke great enthusiasm. He had in Edinburgh audiences that crowded the largest halls. Within a week he gave no less than five lectures. One on "God in Conscience" is remembered with delight. It was a spiritual tonic as well as an intellectual treat. The writer had the privilege of hearing it, and some of its graphic, telling sentences cling to his memory yet. Its analysis was masterly, and its grasp of the subject was complete. His most memorable service in the city which still calls itself "The Modern Athens" was, however, an address on the New Birth and the Atonement, in the United Presbyterian Hall. Hundreds failed to gain admission. Its faithful and powerful presentation of the doctrine of the Cross did much to lead students back to the old paths, from which modern speculations had tempted them to stray. Glasgow received him with open doors, and listened eagerly to the message he bore. We need not specify further how Mr. Cook fared in our island. Readers know that his success was of a kind rarely experienced by visitors from beyond the sea.

From London he went to Germany and Italy, where he rambled for some months. He then travelled to India by the way of Greece, Palestine and Egypt. In Bombay, Calcutta and Madras he lectured to Europeans and educated Hindoos. The halls in which he spoke were often packed to the door an hour before he began. From India he proceeded to China, Japan, Australia, New Zealand, and the Sandwich Islands. He thus obtained a personal acquaintance with many men and countries, and was more fully equipped for discussing the relations between the various religions of humanity and the one true religion.

Boston was glad to have him back again. He resumed his old work with new vigour. Tremont Temple was crowded once more at noon on the busiest day of the week, and the words there spoken were given the wider circulation of the press. The interest did not die down as the winters rolled on. It is hard to keep a hold of the fickle public during successive seasons, but Joseph Cook has done it. His last course, recently concluded, loses nothing in freshness or fascination when compared with the first. Its subject was "Vital Orthodoxy," and a special feature in it was a symposium of letters from leading American divines on that most important of all queries, "What saves men, and why?"

The man who has done and is doing so much in defence of the faith delivered to the saints must be an object of interest to our readers. We are glad to present them with a lifelike portrait of him; and the following description of his personal appearance, from the pen of the accomplished Washington correspondent of The New York Independent, shows how he strikes an intelligent observer:—

> Joseph Cook is to-day a man in early middle life; a large man, of nervous, sanguine temperament; fatter, it seems, than a man of such restless activity could be; with a round, frank face, a pleasant mouth, a non-aggressive nose; blue, kindly, overtaxed eyes, that persist in shutting themselves; a high, broad brow, burdened by reflective faculties; a large head, covered with a mane of brown hair; and the moon-like roundness of his visage is lengthened by a brown beard. In repose he is a fair, comfortable man, not suggestive of mental sovereignty, but the moment he speaks you are sure of his power.

We have seen Mr. Cook on the platform and in his travels; we may conclude this sketch by giving a glimpse of his home life. "Cliff Seat," his country residence, is situated about two miles south of Ticonderoga, his birthplace. It stands on a fine farm of 180 acres, and is of great size, having forty-five rooms and 300 feet of piazza. Its interior is fitted with taste and elegance. Some of the rooms are specially set apart for the master's use. One of these, built into a tower commanding a magnificent view, is his favourite mental workshop. Its walls are lined with standard treatises on philosophical, theological, scientific, doctrinal, and historical subjects, and the chief encyclopædias. Here, during the summer season, Mr. Cook studies five hours daily. He attends to his correspondence in another room, which is littered with magazines and reviews. When work is over, he loves to have a cheerful chat with friends. He is as brilliant at the fireside as on the platform. In the summer-time he does much of his reading in a bower hid in a beech and maple grove. On the summit of "Roger's Rock," in the immediate neighbourhood, he has erected a double-story, octagonal-shaped house, to which he often retires for meditation. It is perched like an eagle's nest above Lake George, and overlooks a landscape of rare beauty. In it he feels alone with God and nature. It is the birthplace of some of his best thoughts. His family life is full of peace and happiness. It is rooted in religious fervour. After supper all the members of the household and the guests meet for worship. A chapter is read by Mr. Cook's venerable mother, after which each person repeats a verse of Scripture. A psalm or hymn is then sung. It is followed by one of the visitors engaging in prayer, after which devotional exercises are ended by the general recitation of the Lord's Prayer.

This daily devotional life furnishes the key to the secret of Joseph Cook's strength. He seeks fellowship with God, and an insight into his truth, that he may be able to go down to the world to proclaim what he has learned on the mountain-top.

THE "GEORGE HOLLAND DOVECOTE."

On Tuesday, May 18, some hundreds of persons of all classes of society attended at the opening—by H.R.H. Princess Mary, Duchess of Teck—of the third cottage which completes the "Homes for the Weary and the Drooping" which have been erected at Shirley, Croydon, by Lady Ashburton, in connection with the George-yard Mission, Whitechapel, but entirely at her own expense. The cottages are almost large enough to be styled detached villas, and have spacious gardens. The two older cottages are the "Mary Baring Nest," which was opened in 1883, where children of "poorer London" are sent for a fortnight's change of air and scene and food. Many precious little lives, it is believed, have been and will be saved through this timely aid. A second cottage was built for the reception of men and women alternately. This was called the "Louisa Lady Ashburton Rest," and was opened in 1884. The third cottage is intended for poor mothers and their infants, who will be received for three weeks. It contains nine or ten rooms, and is larger than the two previously built, having also other improvements upon them. The "Gordon Hall," an iron building standing in the grounds, side by side with the cottages, was also erected by Lady Ashburton; here, those staying at the Homes meet for hearing God's word and for worship on Sunday evenings; they have also a Sunday-school, Band of Hope, and a library conducted there.

Not only will the children by means of these cottages gain renewed strength, and the adults, the weak and dispirited, the broken in health and bankrupt in pocket, get a lift on life's road, but their spiritual and eternal welfare will be considered. The object of the public opening was that others possessing means may help the poor in like manner.

LEEK, STAFFORDSHIRE.—Messrs. Weaver and Wharton have visited the town with the Bible and Gospel van. Large numbers of the working-classes listened with rapt attention as these brethren spoke of Jesus' love and his claim upon them. Christians also have been aroused to seek after a deeper work of grace, and to consecrate themselves afresh to the Lord.

LETTERS FROM ABROAD.—12.

Among the impressions gathered during these few weeks among missionaries, was the necessity of those who go forth on this Divine errand being intensely devoted to their work; otherwise they will never surmount the difficulties and discouragements in the way. The missionary enterprise is not a last resort for those who have failed at home. The second step in the Christian's progress is peculiarly essential in this case. The missionary, of all men, must add to his faith, courage. Mr. Moody says God cannot use a discouraged man. When Elijah quailed before Jezebel, made intercession against Israel, and complained, "I, even I only, am left, and they seek my life to take it away," it might have seemed that he was the last man who could be spared; but God bade him anoint Elisha to be prophet in his room, and soon took him to heaven in a whirlwind.

Things are never so bad as they sometimes seem to us. God, at that dark period of Israel's history, had seven thousand who had not bowed the knee to Baal. It was not a great deal to say about them: it was only negative virtue at the best. But God knows the possibilities hidden in things of which man takes no account. He values the gleaning grapes when the vintage is done; the four or five olive berries on the outmost fruitful branches. When the land is utterly desolate, yet in it shall be a tenth, and from that holy seed the nation shall revive. God knows the Israel within Israel. When the 22,000 cowardly and unbelieving had gone home, and the 9700 who thought more of quenching their own thirst than fighting the Lord's battle had followed them, by the 300 who lapped and were ready God saved Israel. His eyes behold the widows who cast all their living into his treasury. Out of Cretan liars, evil beasts, and slothful gluttons, He knows that through the laver of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost, shall come saints of the highest order; yea, their very slaves, instead of purloining and answering again, shall adorn the doctrine of God their Saviour in all things. Out of the forgotten stump of Jesse grows the Rod of God. There is much fruit, unto life everlasting, in one Corn of Wheat which falls into the ground and dies. Of Him who said, "I am a worm and no man," Jehovah speaks as "the Man that is my Fellow." Discouragement is the child of unbelief. There is no discouragement to those who believe that God is, and that He is the rewarder of them that diligently seek Him.

SANTANDER.

We were invited to Santander, in the north of Spain, but were unable to visit that town. We heard, however, this touching little story:—A poor little baby of five months old was brought to the wife of the Spanish minister of the Protestant Church there, by a woman who wished to sell it to her. On her offer being refused, she said Señora might have it for nothing. The large, dark, suffering eyes of the babe appealed for pity, and she determined to take the little one for Christ's sake, although very straitened in circumstances herself, and having babes of her own. The child is now twenty months old, an intelligent, promising boy; he is boarded with a woman who nurses him. It is hoped to place him in an Orphanage, where he will be protected from his mother, who is now in prison for theft, and also from the priests. The minister's wife is an Englishwoman, and a member of the Y.W.C.A., and any interested in the Spanish baby may send contributions towards its education, &c., to the Secretary Y.W.C.A., International Union, 1, Harewood-square, London, N.W.

ROME'S VICTIMS.

We heard in Spain, as often before, weird statements as to victims bricked up in niches of convent walls; to which some support is lent by the following paragraph which appeared in some of the London papers a few weeks ago:—

> According to a Paris correspondent, a very strange discovery has just been made at Autun, in the department of Saone et Loire. As some masons were at work on a building, which had formerly been an ecclesiastical college, they found in niches made in the wall of a vault upwards of thirty corpses, some of which still retained their hair. Boots and shoes were on the feet of many of the dead bodies. The authorities at Autun have opened an investigation into this mysterious affair.

The system which could invent and glory in the "Holy Inquisition," with its Satanic ingenuities of torture, is quite equal to walling their victims in living graves.

MARIN, PONTEVEDRA.

We had hoped to visit various mission stations in the north-west, as well as in other parts of Spain. But our time was too short, and the distances too long, to admit of this. We have, however, received the following letter, which will be none the less interesting to our readers because our visitation of this locality is deferred:—

You would find us in a rough state, as we are living in an unfinished house, having been turned out of each of the previous ones by the influence of the priestly party, and landlords intimated that they should let us no other, as well as the fact that there are few houses suitable if even they were not afraid to let them. Thankful enough we were over a year ago to come to this one, which had stood exposed to the weather for sixteen or eighteen years, without plaster on the plank and lath walls, glass in windows, or doors to the rooms, the roof in good condition to let in any amount of water during rainy weather; the landlord very kind (being the British Vice-Consul), but (since they removed the lazaretto from this port to Vigo) not able to finish his house. Of course we put the most needful things in repair, such as the roof, glass in windows, and some doors, &c., and have had the privilege of entertaining in it not a few of God's honoured servants, for all its rough state. Notwithstanding the relentless fury and cruelty of the enemy in persecuting God's children, and even those who are merely inquirers, for over four years, He has called above one hundred and twenty persons who were sitting in Rome's darkness and shadow of death to the saving knowledge of Himself, and given them grace to make a public profession by baptism, and to meet week by week at the Lord's table and show forth his death until He comes. And over three hundred and thirty, old and young, in Marin and San Fomé, a district about one league from this, have enrolled themselves as evangelicals and members of the congregation, thus severing all connection with the Church of Rome.

You may remember having heard how the gift of the first convert in San Fomé of her little house and garden for the work has led to the building of a chapel and mission-house in that place; the Christians, constrained by the same love, gave also of their substance—land, trees, and much labour, and many in England have also helped. Through the cruel treatment of the priest in taking possession of the Protestant cemetery that was made, and the savage behaviour at several deaths, we have been obliged and thankful to make a cemetery at our own expense. For about £80 the chapel would be finished in a short time, as men could be put on at once. The greater part of the cemetery walls are built, and £20 would finish that also. They are worth many times more than they have cost, whether one thinks of the time, thought, or money, for the effect on the work.

As landlords, in general, are so easily worked upon by the priests, they made their boast that they would soon drive us out of the neighbourhood, and did their best to do so, the Archbishop of Santiago even coming on a special mission to this small place when we first came, for the purpose of stirring up the people against us. (He did the same when we first went to Corunna, Pontevedra, &c.) The fact that, notwithstanding all the efforts, threatenings to the very authorities themselves, curses, and excommunications, &c., &c., by God's blessing and help, we have been able to build the house, where meetings have been carried on since January of last year, and now the chapel, and get legal possession of and nearly finish a cemetery of our own, has not done a little to give stability to the work and loosen the hold of the priests and their false teachings upon the people around. We look forward, if it pleases God to supply the funds, to do the same in Marin. Indeed, the believers have begun to give their pence towards it, but times have been bad, and as yet the fund is a tiny one.

We have schools for boys and girls, Bible women, &c., in the winter, night-school every night for adults, and many dozens who, when we came, could neither read nor write, can now read the Word of God for themselves and write. Bible classes, mothers' meetings, women's prayer-meetings, besides the meetings which go on throughout the year—viz., Sunday, preaching the Gospel in two locals, one in the morning and the other at night, also the meeting for the breaking of bread; afternoon, preaching the Gospel at San Fomé, one league from this; Gospel preaching two week nights; general prayer-meeting Saturday night, which is nearly as largely attended as the preaching, and most lively and stirring meetings.

At present we have no English helpers. Thankfully indeed should we welcome a godly couple of proved and experienced Christians, steady and determined, out and out for God and the salvation of souls. Open doors for visiting, village work, cottage meetings. Work abounds. Fields are white to harvest, which inexperienced nominal workers would spoil.

The chief cause of the chapel and mission-house at San Fomé costing so much more, and being so much larger, than we at first thought, was that after we had prepared, with all legal permissions from local and provincial authorities, also the road commissioner, and had blasted rock, and worked for six weeks preparing for the foundation, the road commissioner, bribed by the San Fomé priest, gave us an order to remove the stone within twenty-four hours, under a heavy fine, a thing which appeared impossible, as we possessed not an inch of land besides. They were already rubbing their hands, having, as they thought, stopped the work. We called upon our God, the present help. Another believer offered us a site in every way more central and suitable, and therefore worthy of a larger building, and to it the stone was removed by the believers of Marin and San Fomé banded together. Mr. Blamire at their head, in hand cart (sixteen to twenty Christians harnessing themselves in as horses), in baskets, and on their heads, much to the amazement and disappointment of the enemy (Tobias and Sanballat), and to the joy and thankfulness of God's children who worked night and day, or watched; otherwise the enemy would have cut the ropes of the scaffolding, thrown down, and otherwise tried to injure the work. Sheet after sheet could be written telling of cruel persecution, self-denial, and wondrous deliverances.

Brethren, pray for us and for those He has brought to the knowledge of Himself in this neighbourhood, that we may all be kept with a single eye, walking, following, and looking unto Jesus, and sitting at his feet.

Yours in our risen and coming Saviour,
Rosetta S. Blamire.

Marin, Pontevedra, Spain.

We cannot help thinking that one reason why God sent us on this journey was to impress us with the heathenism of Rome; with compassion for the peoples who are drinking the cup of her fornication; and with determination to lift up our voice lest our own people, once having been delivered, should be again bewitched by her.

Everywhere it is the same story: Rome persecuting the people and hindering the work o God, but God standing by his own.

DUBLIN TRAINING HOME.—The report of the Girls Training Home, 64, Lower Baggot-street, Dublin, read at the meeting held on May 6, since published, show that 80 girls have been admitted during the past year and 164 during the three years the Home has been i existence. The importance and necessity of such rescu work has been abundantly evidenced of late, and it i most encouraging to learn that the results are so good After proper training 52 of these were sent to situations and 12 to their own homes; while the sum of no les than £20 3s. 2d. was repaid by girls during the three year for clothes supplied to enable them to go to service Funds are earnestly invited for the carrying on of th work.

WHAT IS SCHISM?

By CANON WILBERFORCE.

"That there be no SCHISM in the Body"
1 Cor. xii. 25.

Question.—What did the Rector mean when he said, the last time he preached in St. Mary's, that he would like to see all tests abolished from the pulpits of the Church of England except the test of "Jesus only"?

Answer.—He meant that in his opinion the time had arrived when, under certain restrictions and limitations, to be hereafter decided upon, a free interchange of pulpits amongst ministers of different denominations holding the headship of Christ, would help to break down the exclusive and sectarian spirit amongst Christians, and tend towards the realising of the ideal of the Church Catholic, which is unity of spirit amidst diversity of operation, and harmony of action amidst diversity of manifestation.

Q.—But are not ministers of other denominations in schism, and do we not pray in the Litany "from all schism, Good Lord deliver us"? Would it not, therefore, be a paradox thus to pray in the Service, and to listen to a schismatic afterwards?

A.—In reply, I am forced to ask and endeavour to reply to a further question, namely, "What is schism?" Primarily, I opine that it is causing division within, or breaking away from the Body of Christ, and everywhere in Scripture it is deprecated as an evil of no small magnitude. "There is one Lord, one Faith, one Baptism." There was to be "no schism in the body." "Envying, strife, and division" were condemned by St. Paul amongst the Corinthians as a proof of lack of spirituality, and in writing to the Romans he says, "I beseech you mark them which cause divisions, and avoid them." Whatever schism may be, then, it is undoubtedly a sin, for it is contrary to the mind of God, and grieving to the Holy Spirit, and either to encourage it, or to make light of it, would be to become a "partaker of other men's sins." But does schism mean the conscientious separation from any visible church, and if it does, from which church, and what branch of the visible Church at this moment is there that does not consider others not in communion with itself to be in schism, and how am I to know whether I am a schismatic or not? In the article on "The Church," in Dr. Hook's Church Dictionary I am told that there is but one true Church, and that to be out of communion with it is schism.

There is therefore in these questions for a scrupulous conscience an element of paralysing fear which might well afford employment for a lifetime, with the dark shadow of a possible mistake as to which was the true Church hanging ever over the head. Now it seems to me that the true answer to the question, "What is schism?" must be found in the fact that the Holy Catholic Church, or Body of Christ, is in its essence a spiritual and invisible body, existing wholly independent of its external manifestations and methods, which may be national, geographical, almost even climatic; and with regard to which there may be, and ought to be, an almost unlimited divergence of opinion without any rupture of true spiritual unity. The Church Catholic may be said in its essence to resemble the internal fire of the earth, one undivided mass, finding its way into visible manifestation by means of several volcanoes, which in one country are named Hecla, in another Etna, in another Stromboli, in another Vesuvius; and, to carry out St. Paul's analogy, the internal fire is one, and hath many volcanoes, and if Hecla should say, "Because I am not Stromboli I am not of the internal fire," it is not, therefore, not of the internal fire. So also is the Body of Christ, "If the foot should say because I am not the hand I am not of the body, it is not, therefore, not of the body; and if the ear shall say because I am not the eye I am not of the body, it is not, therefore, not of the body" (1 Cor. xii. 15, R.V.).

If the Lord Christ were to-morrow visibly to return and call to Himself his Church, his Body, is there anyone in his senses who believes that in this country it would be only the members of the Church of England that He would call; would it not be that great multitude which no man can number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues and sects, and eras, who are united by faith to the Saviour? Is it not certain that that Church would not be conterminous with any earthly or visible organisation, but "as long as the ages, as wide as the poles, as broad as the charity of God, including all in heaven or earth who hold the Head?" (See "The True Unity of the Church," a sermon by Rev. F. B. Meyer, published by J. Vice, Leicester, price one penny), and if this would be true in the event of the Archangel's trumpet sounding to-morrow, it must be true to-day while He tarries; and in not recognising it, and in considering many of his own to be outside the pale of his Body because they walk not with us, while they cast out devils in his name, it is we who are guilty of the sin of schism and not they.

Is it not certain that hundreds of those who are amongst the most illustrious for learning, piety, and devotedness, and manifestly in Christ by faith, have been and are in Dissenting communities? Do we deny that they are in Christ? If we do, how do we account for the manifold fruits of the Spirit which they exhibit? If we do not, then to be in Christ is to be in the Holy Catholic Church, and to be a member of his Body; and if this is the case, the only severance from the Church is "through the severance of the soul's trust in Christ, and he only is a schismatic who ceases to be Christ's;" and the idea that the sin of schism is separation from the visible communion of the Church of England, when weighed in the balances of the sanctuary, and tested by the Word of God, is found wanting, and may, without loss, be consigned to the limbo of exploded fallacies.

I would not be misunderstood to imply that I see no distinction between the Church of England and the sects around her. I have no hesitation in saying that I know no organisation calling itself a Church to compare with the Church of England. . . . But, nevertheless I am constrained to believe that there is a bond of spiritual union which far overreaches and transcends the boundaries of the Church of England, and that thousands who are descended from those who in days gone by, conscientiously separated from the Church of England, though they are not in communion externally with us, are yet built into that spiritual fabric of which Christ is the chief corner stone, which is the Holy Catholic Church, and cannot therefore be stigmatised as schismatics.

I would therefore plead with my fellow-Churchmen to believe that rigidity is never a sign of life; bigotry is never effective spiritual force; and as to the mingling together in the Lord's name of Churchmen and Dissenters, and the interchange of pulpits between them, it is not spiritually healthy any more than it is ecclesiastically expedient for us Churchmen to busy ourselves in needlessly defining the limits of orthodoxy. I am convinced in the depths of my soul that the direction in which the Holy Ghost is working in this our day is against exclusiveness, and in the direction of the freest spiritual communion between those who differ as to methods, creeds, and definitions of the faith; and no English Churchman does credit to himself, or honour to his Church, by speaking superciliously of godly Dissenters, by calling them heretics and schismatics, and refusing to receive the word of God from their lips, when it is manifest they are doing, and doing well, nearly half the Christian work of this country.

Lastly, if schism did mean separation from the Church of England, one would hardly expect to find thoughtful men and staunch Churchmen seeking opportunities for spiritual communion and fellowship in Christian activity with them. The late Archbishop of Canterbury (page 14 of his last charge) says, "It is our duty when we can to cultivate friendly relations with Dissenters while we look for occasions in which, notwithstanding our differences, we may act together."

The British and Foreign Bible Society, which may be termed almost a Dissenting Society, contains amongst its Vice-Presidents nearly every Bishop of the Church of England. When the Church Congress met in Leicester, the Nonconformist ministers sent a deputation to the assembled clergy welcoming them in the name of the Lord, and they were cordially met and addressed in terms of brotherly kindness by the Bishop of Peterborough; and the same amenities took place at the Church Congress last autumn at Portsmouth. Quite recently, when the Congregational Union met at Bristol, the leading clergy waited upon them while in conference, with greetings and congratulations; and we all know that the Revised Version of the New Testament is the joint work of Churchmen and Dissenters.

What then is schism? Schism, true schism, Godward, is the severance of the soul's trust in Christ; he therefore is a schismatic who cuts himself off from Christ. Manward it is the want of soul love between members of the same external body, and also the absence of charity between spiritual members of the one Body of Christ, even though not in the same external community. When we pray in the Church of England Litany against schism we are obviously referring not to Dissenters, but to the separating cancers of our own Church, to the malicious religious partisanship so common amongst ourselves, our being divided up into parties, factions (Gal. v. 20), under party names, with representative newspapers ever stirring up internecine warfare by reviling each other and heaping contempt upon each other's beliefs. I have no reason from shrinking from the admission that when first I came to this town the bitterest misrepresentations and the severest judgments came upon me, not from Nonconformists but from those of my own communion. This is "schism in the body;" this is wounding to the heart of Christ. Stillingfleet, speaking of the evils of division, and of bitter party strife in the same fold, says, "Let us not rend the seamless robe of the Lord Jesus by our undutiful and unseemly divisions."

Whilst, therefore, I plead for an interchange of pulpits and a greater latitude for prayer and spiritual communion with Dissenters, believing that the Holy Catholic Church, which is his Body, transcends all human sects, systems, and denominations, I consider that I am guilty of no paradox when, remembering the urgent need for a truer spirit of unity within the Church of England herself, I am able to throw my whole heart into the supplication in the Litany, "from all schism, Good Lord deliver us."

THE SECRET of JOY and POWER.

By Dr. THEODORE CUYLER.

The late Dr. William Arnot, of Edinburgh, used to tell of his being at a railway station where he grew weary of waiting for the train to move. He inquired if the trouble was want of water. "Plenty of water," was the quick reply, "but it's no' bilin'."

We have no lack of religious machinery in Church and Sabbath-schools and benevolent societies. The engines are on the track, and the trainmen are in their places. If there is little or no progress, may it not be that the water is "no bilin'"? The motive power that propels a church and keeps it in steady, effective motion must be generated in the hearts of God's people. External pushes in the way of eloquent appeals, special services, conventions, &c., soon spend their force. It is the living Christ in the souls of his people, and nothing else but this which can supply the needed power. To as many as receive Him He gives this power; and just in the same degree that we possess Him, do we possess joy and vigour, and conquest of sin, and converting power A lack of conversions in our congregation and Sunday-schools commonly proves that the "water's no bilin'" in the hearts and the lives of Christians.

There is a wonderful, penetrating, and permeating power in Christ when he enters our hearts, and is permitted to reach every faculty and affection. Because He lives, we live. The measure of our strength is the exact measure of our possessing his strength; and when the "steam gauge" marks high, it is because his love is shed abroad plentifully in our hearts.

Nothing is so actually ours as that which we contain within us . . . Sermons, sacraments, and services are only profitable according to the amount of Jesus Christ that we take in and carry away with us . . .

Here, too, we discover the secret of the darkness and the despondency that so many complain of. This morning, when I awoke, a few rays of light were stealing in through the shutters of my chamber. There was a glorious sun up in the eastern sky, but I got just as much of it as could creep through the blinds, and no more. I flung them wide open; in poure the radiance, and filled the room. As it depended entirely on me how much sunshin I received so, I verily believe, it depends on themselves whether Christians shall have full inflowings of Christ's Spirit, and large measures of joy, and shall walk in the light as children of the light. If selfishness begrudges only a small crevice for the Sun of Righteousness, or if unbelief bars up the windows, then the owner of that heart is accountable for being a cold, gloomy, and well-nigh useless specimen of the Christian.

Lest any of us should throw the blame on Christ for our coldness, our weakness, or our lack of spiritual peace and power, He distinctly says to us, "Behold, I stand at the door and knock; if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him." This amazing offer of the King of Heaven to come and lodge in such huts as we are is usually applied to the unconverted. But it is addressed in the Bible to a church—to a backsliding, lukewarm church, whose water was "no' bilin'." The strenuous appeal from the Master to those worldly, and almost worthless, professors at Laodicea, was to repent, and to open their hearts to Him. That same voice comes ringing down to all of our churches, and to all of us ministers and teachers, and parents: if we want light, heat, joy, power, we must fling open our hearts to Jesus. When we get a whole Christ into the whole heart—when we open room after room and let Jesus own us, and train us, and cleanse us, and have full sway, then we shall get a tide from heaven's ocean of love; then our joy will be full; then converting power will kindle our lips and clothe our lives; then comes a revival that lasts; and then we shall realise what Paul meant when he said: "Christ in you, the hope of glory."—The Pulpit Treasury.

THE BELOVED DISCIPLE.

By Rev. A. C. DIXON, Baltimore.

"That disciple whom Jesus loved."—John xxi. 7.

"That disciple who loves Jesus" would have been the truth; but John chooses the better part of dwelling upon what Christ is to him, rather than upon what he is to Christ. Speaking of our love may engender spiritual pride; thinking of his fosters humility. And there is little comfort in meditating upon our love. A spark, when it ought to be a flame; mixed with selfish earthiness, when it ought to be as pure as the water from beneath the throne. It is hardly worth mentioning, but the love of Jesus needs more than angel's tongue to tell it. We cannot comprehend, much less tell, its fulness. Neither can the fish comprehend the ocean's vastness, but it swims in it and enjoys it just the same.

This conciseness of Christ's love enables us to accept, without murmuring, God's refusals. John prayed for fire upon the Samaritan village, and got a rebuke for an answer. Prompted by an ambitious mother, he asked for a place of honour in the new kingdom. Flatly refused again. But he did not complain. Why should a man complain when he knows that it is love which refuses? It is easy to accept God's bestowals. None but those who know that Jesus loves them too well to answer selfish or vindictive prayers can be contented with his refusals. Israel in their lust would not be refused. "God gave them their request, and sent leanness into their souls." How much better for Israel if they had accepted and rejoiced in what love refused.

Such a spirit of acceptance is an antidote for all trouble. See that weeping mother beside a new-made grave. She prayed that the child might live, and it died. Why is it? "Love," her heart answers. To weep is her privilege, and Jesus weeps with her, but upon the tears which fall from this cloud of sorrow there shines the light of love, and makes a bow of promise. She is not a Rachel refusing to be comforted, for she knows that the love which gives may also take away.

That Christian man, rich a few months ago, is now poor. Why should he complain, if he knows that love often takes away money, that it may give riches of grace? Of course he is under a cloud, but it has become "a bright cloud overshadowing." To such a man all clouds are bright, and every voice from them has in it love's tenderest tones. As he listens and gazes, the voice grows sweeter, and the cloud brighter, until at last he realises that he is indeed with his Lord on the Mount of Transfiguration: but the change is taking place in his own character, and the light is shining upon others through his own raiment.

John's life was not free from trouble. He was led into more than one Gethsemane, as all to whom Christ reveals his glory may expect. And yet, he lived to a ripe old age. Trouble did not shorten his days. Chafing and fretting kills more men than small-pox. He who believes, as he may, in Christ's love, does not chafe and fret. He has found the place of quiet at the cyclone's centre, and then he rests.

Such love is our assurance of safety. God's power alone does not assure us. Power provoked may destroy, and our sins are very provoking. In Christ love rejoices against power. Love for us held back the arm of power while the mob took and the soldiers crowned Him. Love restrained power while the nails pierced hands and feet, and a jeering crowd mocked his dying agonies. "Having loved his own, he loved them unto the end." The consciousness of this love is the angel which comes through any storm, and stands upon our rocking, leaking vessel, to assure us of safety.

John always had easy access to Jesus; and he came to Him, not with the stately formality of a courtier, but the easy familiarity of an intimate friend. At the supper he leaned upon his bosom, and Peter whispered to him across the table, "Ask Him who it is that will betray Him." For once Peter is backward. Why didn't he ask Jesus for himself? Simply because he felt instinctively that the man leaning upon his bosom was in a better position to ask a delicate question. And rough-and-ready Peters still whisper to loved and loving Johns to make known their wants to the Master. Let others perceive that you have the ear of the King, and you will no lack for petitions to present in their behalf Better still; Jesus delights to trust those wh prize his love. To John He entrusted th care of his mother; to John He revealed th richest of his truth and the brightest of hi glory. On the Mount, the door of heaver was put ajar but a little, lest its glories shoul blind Peter and James; but to John, on th Isle of Patmos, the door was thrown wid open, and he was permitted to gaze upon th throne itself.

The consciousness of Christ's love is ou purest joy. To please Him is our pleasure to be with Him is our delight; to be lik Him is our heaven, and "we shall be lik Him, for we shall see Him as He is."

OBITUARY.

MRS. CHARLES COOK.

We deeply regret to record the death of the wi and helpmeet in Christian work of Mr. Charl Cook, of Hyde Park Hall. She died on Sunda evening, May 23, after a nine days' illness. Sinc her marriage with Mr. Cook in 1871 she has bee identified with the gatherings at Hyde Park Ha and the Metropolitan Music Hall. She was singu larly quiet and gentle, without any gift of publ address. All who knew her testified to her dee spirituality of mind. Her Bible shows how we she used it.

She walked with God!
A score of years and more
Her gentle gracious spirit
Beckoned us onward, and we felt
How bright was the example
Of Christ-like self-denial which she set
Before her friends who knew her here below,
And long to meet her in that home above,
Where now she gazes on her blessed Lord, [bloo
Who, having loved and washed her in his preciou
Hath taken her to be e'en with Himself.

JOSIAH REDBUSH'S MORTGAGE.

Josiah Redbush was not a bad man, as men go. He had many admirable qualities, and he never suspected himself that he was not a pattern member of society. He had been brought up in a hard school, that New England university of adversity which has graduated such sturdy scholars. His mother, early left a widow with a large family, he was "bound out" at nine years of age, and had the usual experience, perhaps, of his class; at least, it was severe enough—it toughened his fibre, and he early learned what a hard thing is life to the poor.

A New England town ten miles from the railroad, entirely rural in its surroundings, has not many suggestions to fire the ambitions of a poor boy engaged in the dull round of the farm. David Lawton, Josiah's employer, was a good farmer. He mixed his soil with his brains, and the result was a surprise to his neighbours. With his Yankee faculty he joined a keen sagacity that was ready to improve every hint of modern suggestion. Agricultural chemistry became more than a theory to him, and while his neighbours turned up their noses at "book farming," he harvested double their crops, and smiled at their ignorance.

Thus Josiah had a chance to learn something every day. Most boys would never have cared, but Redbush secretly determined to know as much about farming as David Lawton, and what little he said was questioning as to the why and wherefore of every process of farm life. He had a slow mind. His mother had thought him a trifle dull. He certainly was not quick-witted, but when he saw through a subject, no boy of his age could surpass him in resource or ability.

Thus, although Josiah started in life hampered by circumstances—for a "bound boy" must exercise many self-denials—yet at twenty-one he was as well able to grapple with life as any boy of his region. He had been at it for years, and he had got the under hold more than once.

At the time of our sketch, Josiah was forty years old; nineteen years had made him a rich man, the richest in all that region. He was strictly honest, as he understood honesty, always did as he agreed, but was particularly careful how he accepted of terms, usually dictating them himself; his terms were always profitable to himself; those dealing with him must look out for themselves. People said Josiah Redbush was a hard man; that he had little mercy; that he always had his pound of flesh, if it was in the bond. He never went to church; he was not religious; he laid up his treasures here, where they paid good interest, as he believed; he pulled down his barns and built greater, not once thinking that his soul would be required of him some day. He paid a little toward the minister's salary, and thought his duty done; he was a moral man.

Yet Josiah Redbush was a heathen; the Gospel of gracious living he knew nothing about; his name was good for a hundred thousand at any bank; he carried weight with him into business circles; he was sharp, sagacious, keen; his judgment was esteemed above others, but he was not wise in heavenly things; he was a fool after all; he had no acquaintance with Christ, no treasure in heaven. Like many another, his calculations had concerned but one world; he had never lent to the Lord by giving to the poor.

It came about that among Josiah Redbush's debtors was a poor widow, poor from the fact that she had lost a most excellent husband, but having a fine farm. Josiah held the mortgage; he had looked with envious eye on the goodly acres for some years; indeed, he had proffered money when Hanson was sick, with the hope that some time he might add this valuable property to his scores of homesteads acquired in a similar way. His offer had been accepted, with the expectation that health would return and the claim might be met. But alas! death came, and Alice Hanson found herself at the mercy of a rich land-holder.

But there was one element in this problem that even Josiah Redbush had not regarded with his sharp vision, the Divine. There is a God in heaven! Alice Hanson was "acquainted" with Him. She knew there was mercy with Him; and often she cried for deliverance, asking that He who turneth the heart of man, as the rivers of water are turned, would move the heart of an obdurate soul.

One summer evening in the early harvest, Josiah was wending his way toward Alice Hanson's home. He had been thinking of his past life; how he left his mother's roof at nine years of age to battle with fate, and the success he had; the hard blows he received, and the lessons he had taught fate. His heart swelled with pride as his bank account, his real estate, his influence, were presented to his mind. But his errand to-night did not please him altogether. The widow's face as he last saw it haunted him, and her words: "Josiah Redbush, your mother was a widow; have you no mercy on us who are left, like her, alone?" He remembered it to-night, and he wished the business settled. The farm was just what he wanted; he had a customer for it; he could make a number of thousands on the operation.

As he approached the house—having fastened his horse to the post beyond the white gate—passing up the trimly kept path, he heard a voice; and as he listened he heard the words of prayer. It was a long time since he had heard anyone pray. Away back in his boyhood, his mother—and she a widow—had taken him with the other children into the bedroom, before he left home, and prayed. It was strange, but he remembered some of the words, and it was thirty-one years ago: "Oh, Father, keep my boy as he goes forth into the great world to-day. Make him successful; but, above all, make him thy child." The years of struggle, success, accomplishment, faded, and he was a little boy again, with his mother's hand on his head. She was under the grasses now. But he raised his hand to knock, when the words came to his ear, and his arm dropped again: "Oh, Father, thou hast brought me into sore straits. Thou didst take my husband, and now my home is threatened. I appeal to Thee, the widow's God, and the orphan's Father." Josiah started; strange emotions tugged at his heart-strings. "Wilt Thou deliver us now; wilt Thou save; wilt Thou show to our oppressor what he owes to the God of the widow and the orphan?" Josiah could catch the sobs behind the words; his own eyes were wet, and he looked about to see if anyone was in sight. But the words were growing calmer, and thanksgiving was succeeding petition. "'Even before they call I will answer.' Verify to us thy promise," cried Widow Hanson.

Redbush waited to hear no more. He found his horse, but he was a long time unhitching him, and he allowed him to walk all the way home. The Lord had appeared in his life, and he was before the judgment-seat. He slept little: his life faced him, and he was speechless. Scores of people seemed to pass by him: the widow and the fatherless he had robbed; and the Judge put down the items until the page was covered. No one appeared for him, until a woman, fair, but careworn, approached the Justice. It was Widow Hanson. "Give him one more chance," she cried; "he had a praying mother." But as the Judge was about to speak, he awoke. The sun was pouring its rays into his window; another day had begun.

It is probable Josiah Redbush never spent a more profitable day, although his bank account was not increased. It had been said Josiah could make more rubbing his nose, a habit he had when working out some financial problem, than other men in exhausting toil. But to-day he was puzzled with the hardest sum of all his life. The Almighty called for his soul. He found there was little of it. All that day he sat alone and thought, and the hosts of eternity seemed watching him. But at sunset he could endure it no longer, and he fell on his knees and cried, "God be merciful unto me, a sinner!" But mercy seemed denied him for many days, until in his agony he said, "Pardon me, and I will pay Thee all."

And then the change came. He began to make restitution. He became a poorer man, but he was rich toward God. The treasure increased beyond. Alice Hanson's prayer was heard, the mortgage cancelled, the heart of stone melted. The mother's petition had been kept in one of the "golden vials," and now its fragrance blessed many lives.—New York Observer.

NEWS FROM THE EQUATOR.

Dear Sir,—I am now at our Equator station of the Livingston Inland Mission, which is 757 miles from the coast and about 640 miles from Palabala, where I wrote to you some months ago. I know that the readers of The Christian will unite with me in praising God for journeying mercies and preservation from fever. Two white men (one a Baptist Missionary Society missionary), who came into the country after me, have been called away by fever. The Lord sustains me, so that I am not in the least apprehensive or fearful. I and my brethren have learned that heaven is just as near to Congo as to our homes in dear old England.

On my way up country, I stayed several days at Ngombi, a station of the Baptist Missionary Society, occupied by Rev. T. J. Comber and his brother, Rev. Percy Comber. While there I visited the graves of three young missionaries, who within a short time of each other, were called away from earthly service. Standing by the graves, with one whose name I have mentioned, he said—his eyes filled with tears, for a beloved brother lay beneath the sod—"If the young men of England could but see these graves ——." He did not finish the sentence, but as I looked on the fresh mounds I could not but pray that the example of those who have early fought their fight, and finished their course, might fire the hearts of the young men of England with holy enthusiasm to spend and be spent in the service of the Lord.

Undoubtedly this climate is unfavourable to white men, though there are many exaggerated reports. But, be that as it may, there are millions of people here for whom Christ died, and where there are people, the heralds of the Cross should be found.

During the journey up country one has to climb precipitous hills, march through tall grass and dense jungle, wade through rivers, sometimes be carried on the shoulders of our men, or rowed across in a canoe. One night the rain and the winds beat upon my tent, and it fell, giving me a thorough drenching. On Dec. 15 I arrived at Stanley Pool, and, after a stay of twenty-two days, and many a refreshing season with our own brethren, and those of the Baptist Missionary Society, I started for the Equator in our Mission steamer, Henry Reed, which is in charge of Messrs. Billington and Glenesk. The little steamer has made several very successful voyages, though by no means unattended by danger, as she has had more than one narrow escape. Will your readers pray that she may be kept from rocks and storms, and evil men, and that she may carry light where darkness now reigns.

What traders these people who live on the banks of the Congo are! With what skill they will drive a bargain! I have wandered among the American Indians of Wyoming and Montana; I have visited them in their "teepees" and "wigwams." That the Sioux Indians are cunning, the pale-faced American knows too well; but for skill, and cunning, and artfulness in buying and selling, the Congo trader surpasses the dusky skins of the Far West.

On January 18 we arrived at Equator, and found our brother missionary, Mr. Eddie, busily engaged with the Nkundu language, and other duties.—Yours in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ,

Herbert Probert, Late of Cardiff.

HOME MISSIONS.

By Rev. JAMES WELLS, Glasgow.

[We are glad to reproduce some extracts from the statement made by Mr. Wells in the Free Church Assembly, on Monday, May 24, when submitting the Report of the Home Mission Committee, of which he is Joint-Convener]:—

The evangelisation of the people is one part of the work of your Home Mission Committee. We thank God that during the past winter we have had a promising work of grace among the youthful members of the middle classes. The young ladies' meetings with us were preceded by a fortnight of daily prayer meetings, and about 600 invitation cards were sent by post to the young ladies around. Many heartily gave themselves to the effort, and care was gladly lavished on all the obscurest details of the arrangement. The newness of the scheme lifted it at once above the hackneyed and the conventional. The teeming mind and heart of the nineteenth century should be as inventive in spiritual matters as the Exhibition proves it to be in secular affairs. That wealth of resource and skill in adaptation, which is the boast of our age, should all be applied to the work of Christ amid the varied life of our day. The greatest impression was made when educated young men were addressed by young men of their own standing, whose words had the added power of personal testimony. The speaker had thus all the peculiar advantages of a spiritual expert and specialist. The interest awakened has certainly not been due to any new theology. We heard only the solid old Gospel-truths, but they were stated in a very business-like fashion, by men who meant business, and in the phrases of everyday life.

The revival in Glasgow proves on a large scale that, by certain methods, young ladies and young men (and in our quarter young men especially), who seem far removed from earnest Christianity, are easily interested in the Gospel. No other cause in our city has shown the same power of interesting them. Science certainly has not drawn such audiences night after night and week after week, nor has literature, nor politics, nor music. I am not sure that an exception can be made even in favour of the theatres. Such facts surely summon us to thank God and take courage. This discovery should be placed among our best treasures, and should inspire and mould effort in days to come. We should look with hope, as well as with affectionate desire, upon the youthful who are most fascinated by an earthly life, persuaded that their experience of its hollowness prepares them for the message of mercy. What a welcome sense of strength and hope it gives one to see a phalanx of 150, 200, 250, or 300 men at a second meeting, or to see a capacious church on a week night crowded to the door with those who have met for praise and thanksgiving. One Monday evening all the young men who had been benefited by two series of meetings were asked to meet on the following Friday: 144 came.

Further, this work is discovering and developing fine powers of Christian service, both in speech and social influence. The gatherings in our suburb were conducted almost entirely by Glasgow ladies and gentlemen, and chiefly by one merchant. Many who have decided for Christ are already carrying the sacred fire to other localities, and we expect every good cause to be enriched by their adherence and co-operation. The benign influence has overflowed upon some mission districts, and fresh volunteers are putting their hand to Home Mission work.

In times of blessing the question forces itself upon us whether we ministers should not in our stated services give more heed to the first part of Paul's exhortation to Timothy, "Do the work of an evangelist; make full proof of thy ministry." We find that some of the most regular and attentive worshippers have had for years unconfessed difficulties about saving faith, and that many are earnest inquirers in secret. One then perceives the justice of the old advice to have in every service a plain statement of the way of life, to meet the need of any seeker who may be present. Some of our methods may incline us to preach as if we were chaplains and teachers rather than ambassadors and gospellers. We may also easily seem sometimes to have a greater desire to save propositions than to save persons. Our after meetings convince us that we can scarcely too often discuss spiritual difficulties or urge men too earnestly to instant decision for Christ. We are anew impressed with the power of a daring, massive, hopeful, exulting evangelism. It grows plainer than ever that the Gospel is essentially a message and offer from God to which each hearer must say Yes or No. We are effectually reminded that we must strive by God's help to make radiantly plain the act of personal faith, the deed of consent and self-surrender by which a soul embraces and rests upon Christ alone for salvation. We feel afresh that we must strive to do more justice to the Divine simplicity of the Gospel. We rightly call this a "work of grace," for the grace of God is the one creative energy in it. Grace in the Greek, as we know, means gladness; and it is the gladness in the good news and in the Christian life that has the mightiest attractive power over the hearts of men.

PRESBYTERIAN FOREIGN MISSIONS.

The report presented to the recent London Synod of the English Presbyterian Church contains an admirable description of the way in which—during the past forty years—China has been opened up to Gospel effort. The first missionary (Rev. W. C. Burns) was for some time confined almost exclusively to Hong Kong and one or two open ports. Then penetrating inland, and working amongst the country people, here and there a few were gathered out, and native churches formed, with schools in connection. Then came the addition in 1849 of medical mission agency, the results of which have been really marvellous. "It was speedily seen that a lever of immense force was in the hands of the Mission. This kind of practical benevolence broke down the prejudices of these exclusive people, thawed their frozen hearts."

The measure of the force exerted in this way may be estimated by the fact that now there are five fully equipped hospitals under the charge of the Mission, and that about twenty thousand patients are attended to in these every year. Thus the Gospel message is carried into far away parts, and the area under evangelistic cultivation is continually extending, covering now a tract of country 500 miles in length by 100 to 150 in breadth. Occupying this ground there are eighty native preachers and fifty students of theology, besides sixteen ordained and seven medical missionaries with two missionary teachers, in addition to seven agents of the Women's Missionary Association. Last year, 200 adults were added to the membership, the actual total of which is 5268, the number of communicants being 3312.

We are glad to note also that the testimony of the missionaries is that the prospects were never brighter than they are now. All communications should be made to Mr. John Leggatt, offices of the Presbyterian Church of England, 7, East India-avenue, E.C.

A week's Gospel Temperance Mission has been held at the institute, New Cross-road, S.E. The meetings have been largely attended, and the work vigorously carried on by Rev. Llewellyn Caley, assisted by a good staff of workers. Nearly one hundred and forty pledges were taken.

LAUNCH OUT TO THE SEA.

Now soft winds are blowing,
Blue skies are above,
In full tide is flowing,
The ocean of love;
The cry of the Captain
Rings clear on the lee—
"Let go the last cable,
Launch out to the sea!"

In vain every effort
And wish to be gone,
The wind and the tide,
While a hawser holds on;
Bright bird of the waters,
Caged spirit, be free!
Let go the last cable,
Launch out to the sea!

No wreck for the vessel
With Jesus to guide;
Your Captain is ruler
Of wind and of tide.
Care not where He steers you,
Or how it may be—
Let go the last cable,
Launch out to the sea!

To sail in the sunshine
And breath from above,
To float on the ocean
Of limitless love;
For ever and ever,
For ever have we
Let go the last cable,
Launched out to the sea!

BIBLE STUDIES.—17.

USES OF SORROW.

(1) Leading to God. "In their affliction they will seek Me early" (Hosea v. 15). "When Manasseh was in affliction, he besought the Lord his God, and humbled himself greatly before the God of his fathers, and prayed unto Him: and He was entreated of him . . . Then Manasseh knew that the Lord He was God" (2 Chron. xxxiii. 12, 13).

(2) Drawing his children closer to Himself. "Before I was afflicted I went astray: but now have I kept thy word. It is good for me that I have been afflicted; that I might learn thy statutes" (Ps. cxix. 67, 71). "I see four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and they have no hurt; and the form of the fourth is like a son of the gods" (Dan. iii. 25). "All men forsook me: . . . Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me" (2 Tim. iv. 16, 17). "He said unto me, My grace is sufficient for thee: for my strength is made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will I rather glory in my infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon me" (2 Cor. xii. 7—10). "The fellowship of his sufferings" (Phil. iii. 10).

(3) Perfecting the Saints. "He shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver" (Mal. iii. 3). "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby" (Heb. xii. 11).

"The Captain of their salvation perfect through sufferings" (Heb. ii. 10). "The God of all grace . . . after that ye have suffered awhile, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you" (1 Pet. v. 10). "We glory in tribulations also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience; and patience, experience; and experience, hope; and hope maketh not ashamed" (Rom. v. 3—5).

(4) Preparing for nobler ministry. "The God of all comfort; who comforteth us in all our tribulation, that we may be able to comfort them which are in any trouble, by the comfort wherewith we ourselves are comforted of God" (2 Cor. i. 3, 4).

(5) Enriching eternity. "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" (2 Cor. iv. 17). "Now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known" (1 Cor. xiii. 12).

"God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away" (Rev. xxi. 4).

VILLAGE SECTS.

By Rev. EDWARD WHITE.

(From Address at a Meeting of the Baptist Union.)

Between fifteen and twenty years ago, you [Rev. C. Williams, Chairman of the Union] and I made a voyage through the New Forest for the service of the Baptist Missionary Society. We were going to make speeches at Lymington, and we chartered a pony chase, and Mr. Williams drove. In order to beguile the otherwise possible tediousness of the journey, we sometimes alighted and walked beside the horse, and at one passage in the journey Mr. Williams stopped and asked me whether I saw a hill in the distance. "Yes." "Well," he said, "I will tell you a religious story concerning that hill. Old Mr. Mursell, the grandfather of our friend, Mr. Arthur Mursell, in ancient times was a godly tradesman in Bristol, and being full of zeal for the spread of the Gospel, he made weekly journeys to the village on that hill to preach the Gospel of Christ.

"It was a small village, comprising about two hundred people. He was so much blessed in his labours that he gathered out from amongst the Gentiles there a small company of believers who were baptized. Then it became necessary to build for them a small tabernacle to worship in. As soon as that was accomplished there passed by some Methodists through the New Forest, and, lifting up their eyes, as Lot did on another occasion, they thought it a lamentable pity that the inhabitants of that village should be receiving the news of Christianity from persons so perverse in their notions as Mr. Mursell on the question of predestination and baptism. Accordingly they determined to evangelise that population of two hundred on better principles, and sent their agent and began to preach the Gospel with great faithfulness, and succeeded so far as to convert some of the inhabitants, and gathered them into a community belonging to the Methodist body, and built for them at length a chapel to hold the two hundred people of the village. When that was done, the Independents, passing through the New Forest, pitying the condition of these poor villagers, and most anxious for their present and everlasting salvation, visited the place, began to preach the Gospel. They said they were greatly blessed in the preaching of infant baptism, and other parts of their faith, and the result was they gathered a small community together, and built for them a tabernacle to hold the two hundred inhabitants.

"When these things had gone forward, the Church of England, always on the look-out for the evangelisation of the country districts, and for the planting a gentleman and a priest in every parish, thought that it was high time to bestir themselves to deliver this population from the fanatics who had already occupied the ground. They, therefore, laid the foundation of a little church to hold the 200 people, and there its spire still rises to the sky, pointing to the world of eternal unity. When success had so far attended the labours of these Christian brethren, in the course of years the Plymouth Brethren happened also to be passing through the New Forest, and, lifting up their eyes, again pitied the condition of that village so divided, and determined on opening a bond of unity, and, therefore, they went and built a room and preached the Gospel to the people; and there," Mr. Williams told me, for I am repeating you the story as far as I can remember, "you have five distinct means of grace for passing out of that village into the everlasting world."

That is very much a type of what is taking place all over England, and, therefore, when you speak in this resolution of showing compassion to the villages, and of being impressed with the importance of evangelising the country and the special needs of the village churches, I hope you will be first in the field always, and when you get hold of a village I most sincerely hope that the Methodists will not be passing that way, and that the Independents will not be passing that way, and that the Church of England will not be passing that way, and, last of all, that the Plymouth Brethren will not be passing that way, so that if you do succeed in setting up the standard of the Gospel in any English village I hope you will have command of the whole field. What is injuring the cause of free Christianity throughout this country is this most detestable and unnecessary rivalry that is setting up so many distinct little causes with remarkably few effects. There is a power in local Christianity, when all Christians can be brought to combine, that never can be found when it is broken up into fragments, and it is more important that all the real Christians of a neighbourhood should work and worship together, notwithstanding all their differences and mistakes, than that the people who are quite right should be scattered all over the country, and be reduced to a handful in each locality.

FAITH-HEALING.

The following from the Chicago Christian Standard is sent to us by our old friend, Mr. Charles Owen, dated Baptist Parsonage, Vernon, Michigan, U.S.A. We should not wish it to be supposed that we disbelieve that there are cases in which God heals diseases in answer to the prayer of faith. We do not understand that the writer pledges himself to any such position. But we agree with him that there is a fanaticism on this subject which is very prejudicial, and we know that it works disastrously in other ways besides that which his letter indicates:—

In October last an evangelist of some note, now labouring in the west, was invited by the writer to come and assist him in special evangelistic services. After the meetings had been in progress about a week, the brother introduced and greatly magnified the doctrine of faith-healing. His attention was immediately directed to the case of a young lady, a member of the church, who for three years had been an invalid, sorely afflicted with spinal disease. In regard to the case, he publicly declared that if there were two or three persons in the church who had faith to pray with him for her healing we might see her praising God with us in the sanctuary in less than two days. The persons were found, a meeting was appointed, and the young lady was prayed for and anointed with oil, according to James v. 14, the evangelist conducting the services. The same evening the young lady arose from her bed and sat up in a chair, a thing she had not been able to do for weeks. Two days later, on Sunday, she rode to church in a carriage, and sat during a service of two hours in length, and for some time afterward continued to show signs of gradual improvement. Immediately the daily papers, one and all, gave a sensational account of the great miracle that had been performed; letters of inquiry as to the facts began to pour in upon the pastor from all quarters; and the sick, the lame, the blind, and the halt, came to our meetings from all parts of the city and vicinity. Afternoon meetings were appointed to which those afflicted with incurable diseases were invited by the evangelist to come and be prayed for. Many responded and received the anointing, some also testifying that they had become entirely "healed" of various distressing maladies. One old gentleman, over seventy years of age, who had for many years been badly crippled with rheumatism, declared that every vestige of his ailment had suddenly disappeared, and to prove his assertion, swung his arms and moved his legs, and walked about the room as nimbly as a youth of seventeen. Others declared, according to the prescribed formula, that they were "healed," but that none of their old symptoms had yet been taken away.

The effect upon our religious meetings was that anxiety for soul-healing was soon lost sight of amid the anxiety for healing of the body, and in the opinion of the pastor and others, it was deemed advisable to bring the meetings to a close. By this time a gentleman in Newark, O., hearing through a Pittsburg friend of the marvellous cures that were here being performed, wrote to have his friend bring on the evangelist, regardless of expense, to pray for a beloved young daughter, who was dying of consumption. Newark was visited, the young lady was prayed for and anointed, the result being the same as in the case already mentioned. She also left her bed, went to church on the following Sabbath, resumed her class in Sunday-school, and was reported "healed," the incident creating great excitement in Newark, and, like the other, being published far and wide by the daily journals.

Following this, a faith-healing convention, continuing three days, was held in our city, at which the evangelist above referred to, and other noted advocates of the doctrine, from New York and other places, participated in the exercises. During these three days about sixty afflicted persons, according to the papers, received the anointing, and faith-healing was also the principal topic of discussion in all circles. During the few weeks that followed, it became the Sabbath theme of at least one or more discourses in nearly every pulpit in the city, none, however, of the ministers declaring themselves in sympathy with the doctrine as presented.

You can see, therefore, that our experience on on this subject entitles us to at least a respectful hearing. But now as to results. What at the present writing can be pointed to as the outcome of what has been related? In regard, first, to the miraculous cures performed, to my knowledge there is not an authentic case to mention. Scarcely a week had passed after his anointing before the aged brother who had been so thoroughly divested of his rheumatism, was lying almost at death's door with rheumatic affection of the heart, and from then till now has scarcely been able to cross the threshold of his own home. Miss Maria Morgan, of my own church, and Miss Jennie Brown, of Newark, O., the young ladies above referred to, have both for weeks been laid away in their graves; and among all the cases of lesser note developed either during the meetings at my church or at the convention in another part of the city, I have yet to learn of a genuine cure.

The moral results, however, are more difficult to summarise. The disappointment which so quickly succeeded the bright expectations of the afflicted ones has been keen; faith in the promises of God's Word, in the minds of many Christians, has been rudely shaken; the scoffers and infidels have been multiplied; many who do not discriminate between the teachings of the Bible and the interpretation given to its truths by well-meaning but misguided persons, are ready to pronounce the Word as false. Many intelligent and earnest Christians are sad, because they feel Christianity has been misrepresented, God's name dishonoured, and the Saviour wounded in the house of his friends.

GOSPEL WORK IN RUSSIA.

By Rev. GIDEON DRAPER, D.D.

Having returned recently from St. Petersburg, a brief mention of Christian effort may interest your readers. The writer had temporary charge of the "British and American Church." Upon the first Sabbath there were tokens of the manifest presence and power of God. Many of the people were soul-hungry. The interest deepened during the laborious, happy six weeks. There were multiplied instances of tarrying to "give thanks" for special spiritual blessing, both on the part of Russians and of the English-speaking population. A "Woman's Meeting" was organised. Many lips were opened for the first time to testify of God's goodness. Several publicly expressed a desire to "find the Lord."

On the sixth and last Sabbath a glad company of young converts occupied the front pews, to "sit at the Master's table." It was a blessed and never-to-be-forgotten "Communion." In the after-meeting at night four additional penitents sued for pardon, the most or all of whom were set at liberty. A permanent meeting for young converts and seekers was organised.

Still the work continues. A most cordial welcome was given to the writer and his life-companion on every side, and hearty co-operation. This church is a centre of light in a dark place. Fervent thanksgiving is rendered for the presence of the Master, and earnest prayer for further blessing is invoked. Visitors to St. Petersburg should not forget No. 16, New Isaac-street.

Mr. J. McVittie, of the Scottish Temperance League, recently had an arduous but encouraging tour in the far North of Scotland.

At Louth, on the Great Northern Railway, there is a Temperance Hall which will hold 200 persons; it has been built by the railway temperance men in their spare time and without charge.

NOTES from the SCOTCH ASSEMBLIES.

(BY A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.)

THE Established Church Assembly opened with the usual glitter and show of the Commissioner's procession from Holyrood Palace to Tolbooth Church. Its glory was somewhat dimmed this year by an incessant fall of rain. A crowd of people, wrapped in waterproofs and sheltered by umbrellas, turned out to see Lord Thurlow pass, but all they got for their pains was a glimpse of closed carriages. Lord Thurlow has so far discharged the duties of his office well, though he cannot bear comparison with his predecessor, Lord Aberdeen, and his views on the Sabbath question do not meet with approval on this side of the Border.

Dr. Cunningham, of Crieff, was elected Moderator. He is a scholarly and eloquent preacher, but rather broad in his theological views. The deliberations of the Ecclesiastical Parliament have been as yet confined to matters of routine. The report on Christian liberality spoke of an encouraging increase in giving, and this increase was pointed to as an additional proof of the hold of the Church on the affections of the people. Emphasis was laid on the training of the young. Statistics showed there are 234,254 scholars and 19,266 teachers in the Sabbath-schools. This was cheering, but the deplorable fact had to be faced that thirty parishes have no Sabbath-schools. It was announced that a generous lady had left the residue of her estate, amounting to about £30,000, for the relief of aged and infirm ministers, and to form capital for a fund which should enable ministers in weak health to take a holiday.

A welcome sign of growing charity and brotherliness was seen in the reception given to a deputation from the Irish Presbyterian Church. No deputation has been received since the Disruption, and this renewal of old ties caused general delight. The Disestablishment agitation naturally came in for a good deal of attention, but the Fathers and Brethren did not seem much put about by the efforts of their opponents. They think their position was never stronger than now, and, if increase in membership and funds be regarded as a test of their position, they are not far wrong. The prosperity of the Church during the past year might well excuse their jubilant manner, and the somewhat defiant way in which they snapped their fingers at Disestablishment threats. The Foreign Mission report was not satisfactory from a financial point of view, as the expenditure exceeded the receipts by £2000. Gloomy hints of being compelled to narrow missionary operations, unless more money was forthcoming, were thrown out by the convener of the committee; but we hope, for the credit of the Church, that last resort will be avoided. Good work is being done by the missionaries in India, China, and Africa.

While the religious condition of the Highlands was under discussion, the Crofter agitation was alluded to. Ministers were advised to show heartfelt sympathy towards the Crofters, but to impress on them the Christian doctrine of obedience to law. A straw sometimes points out the direction of the wind; and a letter from a Free Church elder to Dr. Story may prove an index to the intentions of the so-called Constitutionalist party. The elder said that, as the majority in his church had proved false to Disruption principles, he and those of his way of thinking were ready to join the National Church. As a proof of his sincerity he had instructed his lawyers to devote £20,000 to the endowment of territorial work in a large city, not in connection with his own denomination as he had originally intended, but in connection with the Established Church. His handsome donation will be as real a loss to the one church as it will be a gain to the other. I must add my opinion that the methods of Home Mission work in the Free Church warrant the belief that the money would be better spent in it than in the Established Church.

The Free Church Assembly opened without pomp or outward display. The retiring Moderator, Principal Brown, of Aberdeen, alluded with regret in his sermon to the growing preponderance of intellectual rather than spiritual preaching in their pulpits. He fervently hoped that this tendency might be stopped, and his wish found an echo in the applause of his audience. Your readers have had an opportunity of tasting a sample of Dr. Somerville's opening address, but they can form no idea of the vigour with which it was delivered or the enthusiasm it evoked. His burning advocacy of evangelistic work touched the members deeply, and led their thoughts away from the controversies of the day to the great aim of the Gospel ministry. That impression deepens day by day, for the Moderator prays each morning for some special part of the world, and so keeps the memory of his appeal fresh in the minds of his hearers. Grateful reference has been made more than once, in speeches, to the wave of blessing which has passed over Glasgow. In the poorer quarters of the city a magnificent work is being done in gathering in the lapsed and outcast; and in the West-end, fashionable young men and women have turned their backs on the gaieties which formerly engrossed their attention, and banded themselves together in an effort to do good.

The Home Mission report was very cheering. This agency has been for some time handicapped by the want of funds, but all embarassment on that score has now passed away. Its operations extend to fishing stations, mining districts, and neglected streets of the large cities. It is increasingly a force that makes for righteousness throughout the land. A minister, in supporting the adoption of the report, said that Home Missions were the work for which the Free Church existed. Dr. Wilson had an encouraging tale to tell about the conversion of the Jews. A more hopeful report, he declared, had never been submitted to the Assembly.

The case of Dr. Stuart Muir, of Leith, who was accused of Popish practices, occupied considerable attention. He was found guilty, and suspended. The Disestablishment overtures led to a skirmish between Dr. Rainy and his followers who seek Disestablishment, and the "Constitutional" party, who maintain that the recognition of the Church by the State is a principle of the Free Church. The debate was long and keen; it ended in the victory of Dr. Rainy by a sweeping majority.

In spite of hard times and the general depression of trade, the Sustentation Fund stands well. Its prosperity, as was more than once pointed out, is a convincing proof of the continued love the people bear to the Church. The Sabbath-school report showed that there are 3171 schools, 209,326 scholars, and 18,104 teachers. The venerable Convener, who has done much for the success of this valuable agency during the past thirty years, tabled his resignation amidst general regret. He is to receive a substantial present in recognition of his services. The temperance movement met with warm support, and several interesting speeches told what was being done to promote sobriety and reclaim drunkards.

Edinburgh, May 28.

POOR FRENCH IN LONDON.—Readers of THE CHRISTIAN scarcely need to be reminded of the good work that is being done amongst this class through the instrumentality of Mons. S. Barbier, the French missionary. But many, we think, would be surprised to know of the extent and variety of this work, and the wonderfully small cost at which it is carried on. The total expenditure, as detailed in the nineteenth annual report, is just £185 10s., inclusive of an amount the modesty of which is almost inexplicable, namely, "my own maintenance, £12 4s. 10d.!" Yet there are three services weekly at the Chapelle Evangelique, 11, Portland-street, Wardour-street, Soho; a day-school with twenty-five scholars at the same place, and also a Sunday-school; open-air preaching in Hyde-park; a Home for governesses, nursery-maids, and ladies'-maids, besides Sunday services in the Mission, College-street, Pentonville-road; an agency for women, a Depôt Biblique, and a reading-room and literary institution. Those desirous of understanding how all this work is carried on for the surprisingly small sum named, would do well to pay a visit to 11, Wardour-street, or to communicate with Mr. J. Weatherley, 51, Gordon-square, W.C.

NOTES BY MR. SPURGEON.

(From the June "Sword and Trowel.")

WE do not consider it to be our duty to discuss politics in The Sword and The Trowel, but, in answer to many friends, we feel bound to express our regret that the great Liberal leader should have introduced his Irish Bills. We cannot see what our Ulster brethren have done that they should be cast off. They are in great dismay at the prospect of legislative separation from England; and we do not wonder. They have been ever our loyal friends, and ought not to be sacrificed. Surely something can be done for Ireland less ruinous than that proposed. The method of pacification now put forward seems to us to be full of difficulties, absurdities, and unworkable proposals. It is well meant; but even the best and greatest may err. Is it not possible for those who desire the welfare of Ireland, and the unity of the Empire, to devise a more acceptable scheme? We cannot look forward with any complacency to Ulster Loyalists abandoned and an Established Irish Catholic Church; and yet these are by no means the greatest evils which we foresee in the near future, should the suggested policy ever become fact.

Once more the Editor has been called to pass through the fiery furnace of pain. This sad state of affairs has largely resulted from the extra services which he has been induced to undertake lately. Nearly every day requests have come in, begging for sermons, addresses, &c., on behalf of all sorts of objects at home and abroad. Many of these have been refused with regret, but there was some to which a denial could not be given, and this is the consequence.

Among our chief deprivations, through illness, has been our inability to speak for the London City Mission, at the meeting convened by the Duke of Westminster. Our obligations to Canon Fleming for frequent and most generous help are very great, and we hoped to have expressed our gratitude to him by speaking at that gathering. Still more do we feel that the City Mission is one of God's chief instruments for the salvation of London. It ought never to run short of funds. Seething with vice, poverty, and infidelity, our city is an incalculable danger: as well feel comfortable on the sides of Vesuvius as in the neighbourhood of such a population. The Gospel carried from house to house can alone give this vast Metropolis safety, to say nothing of purity and happiness.

The annual fête of the Orphanage will be held on Wednesday, June 23, the nearest convenient day to the President's birthday. We hope to see a large company of friends from the country, while our London helpers will, doubtless, as usual, come in their thousands. The trustees are making arrangements for several novel features, which will give additional interest to this year's festival. There is to be an Old English Market, with a number of stalls for the sale of useful and ornamental articles. Any contributions of goods will be heartily welcomed. All parcels should be sent to the Stockwell Orphanage, Clapham-road, London. The Baptist Church at West Croydon, under the pastoral charge of the Vice-President, has undertaken to furnish one stall, in the hope that London and provincial churches will follow the example. Time is very short, but willing friends can do much in three weeks. A special novelty will be the athletic exercise of the boys who have been recently undergoing instruction in gymnastics. If the Lord will send us fine weather, restore the President to health, and bring together the generous helpers of the Orphanage as in former years, we shall have fresh cause to praise and magnify his holy name.

MR. J. M. COOK, tourists' agent, recently returned from a journey of 21,000 miles in 21 weeks. He had felt the cold of the Himalayas, and the heat of the Red Sea, the Soudan, and India, and his beverage all through had been tea or water. Except one day's slight headache, he had perfect health the entire time.

THE McALL MISSION IN FRANCE.

While the nations of the earth, taken as a whole, are like the troubled sea when it cannot rest, it is sufficient to make the heart of the believer rejoice in turning over the pages of reports that speak of Christian work in foreign lands; to know that the Gospel, simply and faithfully proclaimed, even in the most unlikely soil, taking deep root and spreading forth beautiful branches; so that even now its leaves are seen to be for the healing of the nations, and its fruits, love, joy, peace, righteousness.

This thought is suggested with marvellous power as we peruse the fourteenth report of the McAll Mission in France. It is hard to open the eyes of the heathen, so that they may see the Light of the World as revealed in the Scriptures; it is harder far to deal with those who are in angry revolt against all religion, who have taken an oath that they will bend the knee only to reason. Yet this is the people to whom Mr. McAll, his heart fired with love and zeal for the Master, went at a critical period of their history. Some of the results are before us in this report—just a few of them, visible to the human eye—and these bearing about the same resemblance to those yet unrevealed, that the sparks which fly from the anvil do to the fire in which the iron was heated.

Shall we speak, first, of some of the "testimonies" that tell how gladly "the common people" have heard the word, and with what comfort and peace it has, when embraced in simple faith, filled their hearts, and how the grace of the Lord Jesus Christ has abounded in their daily lives and conversation? These testimonies are from every part of France. If a Christian be sad or weak, let him read such evidences of the power of the Gospel to soothe and strengthen, and it cannot be but that his eyes will kindle and his heart swell with joy as he thinks on the mighty working of God in the hearts of the people. One is from a mother, telling how the whole family had been brought to Christ, how they live on the Word, and every night have such joy together as they read the Bible and sing hymns to the praise of the Saviour who died for them. Another is from a Chasseur d'Afrique, who away in Algeria is witnessing for Christ and to his comrades. Another is from a member of a fire brigade, whose whole family are rejoicing in the Divine light. Another is from a head-mistress in a Government school. Then a poor woman, unable to leave her bed, and on the brink of starvation, said of those three dreadful days and nights, "I had nothing to fear; my Saviour was there." We have the story of the conversion of a Deist, besides numberless other cases in which the word was with power.

Preceding these there are reports from all parts of France, and these of the most encouraging character. From a brief summary contained in a letter written by Pastor Lorriaux, who recently has joined the work in the capacity of secretary to the direction, we quote the following: "That solitary hall, so modest, located in the depth of Belleville, has become in Paris and suburbs thirty-six. It has radiated through the provinces, has even overleapt the Mediterranean. The Mission has 100 stations, with a budget of 340,000 francs, and a personnel of at least 150 collaborateurs to direct. Of one of these salles, where for eight years, with scarcely the interruption of a single day, the Gospel had been preached, we learn, also, that between 600,000 and 700,000 persons had heard the Gospel, and 300 friendly faces were seen there every night, while at the same time another crowded meeting was being held under the auspices of the same Mission, at a distance of only ten minutes' walk.

Mr. McAll sounds a note of thanksgiving, and we may refer lastly to a deeply-interesting letter by M. St. Hilaire, Member of the Institute of France, in which he bids Mr. McAll to persevere in the good work which God has so visibly blessed, and congratulates him upon having with him the popular masses, whence alone durable success can be derived. The McAll Mission has indeed brought untold good to France—good for which future generations will bless and praise God.

HOME FOR ART STUDENTS IN ROME.

(Affiliated with the Y.M.C.A.)

This interesting work was commenced nine years ago by Miss Mayor. An Art College was opened, where the students could have the comforts and safety of an English home, and thus be protected from the fearful dangers which beset their path, and which ruin so many of our countrywomen resorting to Rome.

It has now become a centre, not only for Art students, but also for mission work in general. Canon Wilberforce, Lord Radstock, and others, having given addresses in it, as well as Count Campello (formerly Canon of St. Peter's), who has sacrificed all for the Lord's sake. His fervent addresses on such texts as "God is love" so impressed the students that they themselves hired the first public room where he held his services.

Miss Mayor says: "The first student who came to me was a young Scotch girl. She had gone through such troubles she thankfully took refuge with me. On her death-bed she wrote to me, 'To cheer you on your way, let me tell you, if the valley is bright and not dark, it is owing to the lessons I learnt when with you.' Her last words were words of prayer for the Art College in which 'she had learnt to love Jesus.' Six years ago, night-schools and Sunday-schools were opened in the Art College, 38, Via Degli Artisti, the ladies in the house teaching.

"It was at the suggestion of a model that the school was opened. I had taken him up to the roof of the house to show him the superb view of Rome from thence. 'This is paradise,' he exclaimed. When I replied, 'Paradise will be infinitely more beautiful,' he said, 'That makes no difference, I shall never see it; the priests tell me I must do so many good works. I can never do them, so there is nothing but l' Inferno for me;' adding with a shudder, 'Ho tanta paura dell' Inferno.' I repeated the text 'God so loved the world,' &c. He listened with surprise to those wondrous words, and, with tears running down his face, asked 'Could they be true? How did I know they were true?' When I told him they were Christ's own words, and to be found in the Bible, he would not rest till I had fetched a Bible and shown them to him. He begged he might come every day to hear some verses read. He was my first pupil. Since then we have had as many as fifty under instruction.

"The boys and girls are intelligent and eager to learn. They are taught reading, writing, singing, and needlework. On Sunday there is a Bible-class. It is delightful to hear them sing in their own sweet language many of our favourite hymns."

Miss Mayor has given her life and her fortune to this work. Her health has failed, and her resources have come to an end. Can we stand aside, and carelessly see what God has so owned fall to the ground for lack of a helping hand? Yet even this week in the Home a notice is put up, "To be Let," because the rent, £400, is not forthcoming. The purchase of the house would only be £12,000, and it would soon become self-supporting. If only £1000 of this sum could be given at once the Home need not be closed. Miss Mayor is also asking the Lord to send the right person to take her place in the management of the Home, as well as Christian ladies, who would pay a small board, live in the house, and help in mothers' meetings, classes, &c. Communications may be sent to Mrs. H. Gardner James, Y.W.C.A. Foreign Office, 1, Harewood-square, London, N.W.

Miss Mayor (who is a cousin of Dr. Bickersteth) writes:—

"If only a thousand pounds could be given at once to carry on the work at this moment the rest will come, I am sure, when people hear Count Campello's story, how the whole of the reform movement began in the Art College in the night-school which we have in it for the poor models. I have always believed God gave me strength to hold on till his time for purchase came; but I ought to telegraph to Rome if we can hold on for another year, for at this moment the order has gone forth from my brother to sell the furniture and give up the house. He would rejoice to know that the ardent desire of many hearts should be indeed granted of our God.

[We have an offer of £25 towards the £1000, if it can be raised at once.]

WORK IS THE BEST CHARITY.

Sir,—Many months ago you inserted in your columns a letter I had written to The Times, advocating for the actual poor systematic labour depôts. In 1846 I advocated the same in a letter to Sir Robert Peel, then Prime Minister. Travelling afterwards in Holland, I was rejoiced almost beyond measure to find in Amsterdam just what I had urged on Sir Robert Peel.

I observe the alarm in London this month of February. Most terrible consequences—far more terrible than most of your readers can imagine—might have resulted. Will London be warned? That is the question. She has a mine under her. Will she remove the mine, or will she not? God has a controversy with London Christians about the suffering poor. They cry for work; will they be refused? London will pay a terrible penalty some day. I dare not speak more strongly.

Amsterdam has acted in a way to make such a riot almost impossible. Every idle man gets employment daily, and a very small wage—enough to buy food in certain appointed Government stores. Tailors, shoemakers, cabinet-makers, and a dozen other common trades are represented in the labour depôts.

Consider the mercies: money wage, although small; actual work encouraged; idleness crushed out in the town; Government boots and shoes and soldiers' clothes all made; taxes lessened; dangerous men seen idle, and known; good hungry men blessed; poor wives and families blessed; lowest degradation never reached; desperation unknown; mob orators get no strong points to debate upon.

No doubt the expense is great, but robbery and theft are worse still. Riots are ten times more expensive. Murder and robbery are most unlikely. Constables are not much needed; police expenses are greatly reduced. Property is more valuable, because safe. Worthy poor are always assisted; all poor are helped before they come to desperation. It would be an expensive step to begin such depôts, but they are insurances against riot, robbery, murder, idleness, and desperation. Christians! rest not; pray for it. God's poor are now cruelly used.—Your obedient servant, Gordon Forlong.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—Some deeply-interesting evening and midnight meetings have been held in the neighbourhood of Mile-end-road and Whitechapel, attended by a large number of women. Some were in a very deplorable condition, apparently almost starving. They ate ravenously, and were sensibly affected under the affectionate yet truthful addresses of the friends assisting. There were many signs of real good. Mr. John H. L. Christien invited all who desired help to acknowledge their wishes after the meetings, or to apply personally at 8a, Red Lion-square, W.C.

"A WEEK'S WORK AMONG THE ROMAN POOR" is a very interesting account by Mrs. J. Wall of Christian effort in the Italian capital. Two days are occupied at the Medical Missions at Trastevere and in the Via della Consolazione. The attendances at the first during the year have been 3080, and at the second 1624. The comfort and blessing thus imparted are incalculable, and productive of the happiest results, many instances being given of persons whose lives have been entirely changed in consequence. Other phases of the work are of the character well known in Christian evangelisation, such as mothers' meetings, &c. This simple effort to introduce the Gospel amongst the poor in Rome is of the most promising kind. It is sufficient to add that the headquarters are at 34, Piazza in Lucina, Rome.

"Be ye followers (R V., imitators) of Me, even as I also am of Christ."—1 Cor. xi. 1.

No one needs to tell you what it is to follow a person; it is to go where he is going, in the same direction, after him, isn't it? But of course we sometimes mean more than that by the word, for when we imitate someone and learn his ways, we say we are "following" him. If I were to tell you of a boy who was following bad company and following an evil example, you would know quite well what I meant; and if I told you of some one who was following the Lord, you would also understand that.

But here is a man who asks us to be followers of him. You know this man well—the Apostle Paul. Was it right to ask us to become like him, or to do as he did, to take him for our example? Well, if he had just said, "Be ye followers of me," I would have felt bound to ask him first to tell me where he was going, and to show me that he knew the way, and prove that he was on the right road, and that he would not lead me astray. If he could not do that, I would have been obliged to say, "No; it does not matter how great you are, or how wise, I am not going to follow you if you do not yourself know where you are going!" Yes; but Paul knew that, and it was not himself exactly he asked us to follow. He asked us to follow him because he also was following Jesus. He knew where he was going, he knew the way, and so could quite well ask us to follow him so long as he was following Jesus.

And that is what you have got to do with your companions. You "take to" a boy, or "take to" a girl, and like to be with them, and do what they do, and say what they say, and follow them. You can't help that, perhaps, but should you not sometimes ask yourself, who is my companion following? Is it Jesus? or is it Satan? Is he on the right road? for if he is on the wrong road, and I am following him, I shall go wrong too.

I once read of a farmer who went out in the deep winter, when the snow was thick on the ground, and he took his little boy with him. By and by they came to a very steep hill, and it was dangerous climbing, for the snow concealed a great many ugly gaps into which they might fall, so the father went ahead, and his little boy climbed after him. When they had gone this way some distance, the little fellow called out, "Father, be sure you take the right road, for I am stepping in your footprints!" "My son stepping in my footprints!" thought the father, and the thought troubled him, and made him think, and at last made him pray and become a good man; for he thought, "If my son is following me, surely I should be following Christ."

Think you the same thought. You have some companions who are fond of you, and who do as you do, and say what you say—they are following you; but are you following Christ? If you are on the wrong road, you will lead them on the wrong road too!

Dear children, make companions only of those who are following Christ. And the best way to do that is by following Christ yourself. No one was ever lost on a straight road, and Jesus never leads us along crooked ways. His way is straight, for it is the way of salvation. When others would tempt you to turn from that way, and do what is wrong and say what is sinful, say to them, "No; the Lord's my Shepherd, and I will follow Him; and I will go only after those who are going after Him!"

Pray to Jesus now, saying, "Lord, I want to love Thee and follow Thee wherever Thou goest; teach me, and guide me, and lead me, and never let me go astray. Amen."

CHILDREN'S MISSIONARY HYMN.

There are dying souls, we know,
  In heathen lands that dwell,
Who never heard the story
  We know and love so well;
The sweet and blessèd story
  Of Him who came to die
That we, poor sinful children,
  May have a home on high.

There are many children, too,
  In our own land, who dwell,
Who know not Christ our Saviour,
  Can we not help to tell
The glorious news to some one
  Who ne'er has heard of Christ,
And knows not the glad story
  Of his great love unpriced?

And cannot we give something,
  Though tiny be our store,
To help to send the Gospel
  To some far-distant shore?
Though small may be our off'ring,
  E'en as the widow's mite,
If for Christ's sake we give it,
  "'Tis precious in his sight."

We'll pray for those who carry
  Abroad the glorious news,
And to our prayers to hearken,
  The Lord will not refuse,
If in Christ's name we ask Him
  To speed the promised time,
When men shall know his Gospel
  In ev'ry land and clime.

SAILORS AT MADEIRA.

Dear Sir,—A good work is going on at Madeira amongst the sailors calling at the port of Funchal. It is in connection with Miss Weston's Rests at Devonport and Portsmouth, and is superintended by Mr. W. Smart, who first originated it. On shore there is a Sailors' Rest, where the men can read, or write letters to their friends, and where temperance teas, followed by Gospel addresses, are given, when practicable. Large numbers of tracts in various languages are also given away. When blue-jackets, marines, and merchant sailors come ashore they are warned against a vicious set of Portuguese guides who speak English. The sailors are often rescued from the clutches of these bad men (who drug and rob them), and are cared for at the Rest until they can be sent on board ship.

The Consuls testify that far fewer imprisonments for drunkenness have taken place since the Rest was established. Mr. Smart also visits all the large steamers which call at this Port, and speaks to the crews and emigrants who may happen to be on board. This, as a rule, keeps him very fully employed, for steamers to and from West Africa, Cape of Good Hope, Brazil, the Argentine Republic, and the New Zealand Shipping Company's mail steamers, call here regularly, besides a great many men-of-war; and, no matter what time of day or night, Mr. Smart generally manages to visit all.

I spent some short time in Madeira in February, and became very much interested in the work, but was sorry to find that, like many other good works, it was suffering persecution. What most grieved me was to find that a number of the Protestant community, led by the British chaplain (who, by way, is the patron of a school under the care of the Jesuit sisters of St. Vincent de Paul), were doing all they could to hinder it, declaring they would stamp out the whole affair, and trying to dissuade visitors from subscribing to the funds, Mr. Smart's great offence being that he preaches the Gospel, and advocates temperance. The Jesuits are trying to get the Government to interfere and shut up both the schools and the Bible and Tract Depôt. Under these circumstances, I earnestly appeal to all Christians to aid this good work. I may say that there is a small committee in Funchal, consisting of Henry Brooks (a retired Natal merchant), President; J. Hutchinson, United States Vice and Deputy-Consul, and J. Hastings Toon, Major late H. M. Indian Army, Treasurer.

Jer. Garnett.

[We have known Mr. Smart for many years, and his father before him, and heartily endorse Mr. Garnet's testimony to their good work with Romish adversaries.—Ed.]

MR. HENRY THORNE AT MARGATE.

We have had a most blessed course of evangelistic services here, conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne. They commenced on Saturday, May 15, when a meeting for workers was impressively addressed by Mr. Thorne, in Shaftesbury House. The services ended with a praise-meeting on May 26, at the Theatre Royal. On the two Sabbaths during that interval Mr. Thorne held a morning prayer-meeting in Shaftesbury House; a Gospel-meeting at 3 p.m., and another at 8, both in the Theatre Royal. On the week-days there was a prayer-meeting daily at noon in the Y.M.C.A., Gordon House, Churchfields; a Bible-reading at 3 p.m. in Shaftesbury House, and a Gospel meeting at 8 in the theatre.

These meetings, which were open to all, and freely made known throughout the town and district, were well attended; the Bible-readings in the afternoons, and the Gospel meetings at night, especially so; a spirit of earnest desire and seeking after God seemed to pervade the assembled multitudes. The large theatre was well filled night after night by an orderly and attentive audience. The glorious Gospel messages, so faithfully and powerfully delivered by Mr. Thorne, were gladly received by many present. Inquiry-meetings were held each evening in a room at the back of the boxes, after the rest of the audience had departed. Here Mr. Thorne and other workers dealt with the anxious, convicted, and doubting, in such a manner as that most of them, by God's grace, night after night were enabled to trust in the Saviour, and go home rejoicing. The evangelist was assisted by a large united mission choir in the singing.

So large on several occasions was the number of inquirers that the room set apart for them proved too small, and they in consequence had to be put into the dress circle. Some of the cases of conversion were interesting, notably that of one young man who had been three years employed at the theatre, and who said God had given him up; another who, with his two sisters, found the Saviour on the same night; also a man, who had been discharged from his situation for drunkenness, and who accepted Christ, testified for Him openly before the assembled inquirers, and signed the pledge; four young girls belonging to a Bible-class in the town; two brothers and two sisters; and many other striking cases which time and space forbid us to mention.

Altogether it has been a most blessed time for Margate and its neighbourhood. Some from Birchington, Westgate, St. Peter's, Ramsgate, Broadstairs, Northdown, and other places round, have attended these mission services; seven young people from Birchington, after receiving the blessing of salvation, walked home there one night singing with joy, and praising God all the way.

Mr. Thorne, it may be stated, was in his early days, twenty-six years ago, connected with the Margate Theatre, his father having been the lessee thereof. The theatre is still in the hands of a member of his family, and was granted as a special favour to him for the purposes of the mission. These facts doubtless assisted to a great extent in creating the widespread interest that has been awakened, which God has graciously owned so richly to the conversion of sinners and to the strengthening of believers. A band of earnest workers from the different places of worship assisted heartily in the meetings, some as stewards, and others as helpers in the inquiry meetings, and the hearts of all are full of joy and thanksgiving for the abundant blessing bestowed.

The evangelist bade farewell to all the professing converts and inquirers at a meeting held in Shaftesbury House on Wednesday, May 26, when a tea was provided, during which he gave some earnest and valuable counsel to the young Christians. We heartily wish Mr. Thorne "God-speed" in his work and labour of love, and hope, by the favour of God, we may have him back amongst us for a longer time next year.

NEWPORT, MON.—The new chapel of our friend, Rev. A. T. Jones, at Maindee, Newport, was opened in April last, and since then the congregation has more than doubled. Not a week has passed without souls coming to Christ. He baptized twenty-seven last month and twelve last week, and last Sunday thirty-two more were received into the Church. The Lord is giving great blessing with the Word spoken, and thus encouraging to look for great results. £200 has to be paid by the end of June, and this will be the last instalment for the building.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we shall give a portrait and sketch of the late Bishop Hannington.

The Daily News devotes a leading article to a new Biography of Cardinal Manning, and speaks of him as the good Cardinal Archbishop. It adds :—

> A number of most interesting portraits illustrate the Cardinal's life in almost all its periods and phases. It is a pity we have no Titian or Tintoret to make immortal the winning grace and charm of this typical head. Cardinal Manning, in all the portraits save that which represents him as a child, has the head of an ecclesiastic of the gentle type. Cardinal Newman, as far as pictures show, has never acquired this air ; Cardinal Manning has never lacked it. There is a combination of almost feminine sweetness, with ardour, dignity, and resolution, such as we not uncommonly find in eminent Jesuits.

Thus are we being gently and jesuitically educated into a sentimental regard for our eminent visitors, who, driven as a nuisance out of other countries, are establishing themselves in England, to fascinate our women with their feminine sweetness (or feline sleekness), and with "their ardour, dignity, and resolution" to carry out the good Cardinal Archbishop's programme—"to subjugate and to subdue, to bend and to break, the will of an imperial race," and the secret oath of the Jesuits—"to extirpate the heretical Protestants' doctrine, and to destroy all their pretended powers, regal or otherwise."

The Fourth Triennial Congress of the British, Continental and General Federation against vicious legislation will be held in Exeter Hall, June 28 to July 2, inclusive. Members' cards and programmes may be obtained of Mrs. Butler, 9, The Close, Winchester, or Mr. F. C. Banks, 2, Westminster Chambers, Victoria-street, London. Membership consists in adherence to the principles of the Federation and the payment of ten francs.

The desire of the promoters of these meetings is that they should give a mighty impulse to the great work of purifying, and to the destruction of Satanic institutions ; and that they should gather together in a spirit of Christian harmony, and thankfulness for past victory.

A preliminary meeting will be held on Sunday evening, June 27, the eve of the Congress, for praise and prayer, and consecration to the future work. Mrs. Butler will preside, and many foreign friends are expected to be present. The place of this meeting is not yet fixed.

The official meetings will begin each morning at 10.30, but Mrs. Butler will be present at the Lower Exeter Hall an hour previously every morning for a voluntary meeting of a devotional character, to which everyone who is inclined is invited to come.

A few weeks ago a well-known clergyman of the Church of Ireland, Rev. Dr. Berry, presided at a missionary meeting, held in the Wesleyan chapel at Parsonstown. However unusual a circumstance this might be in ordinary times, and, unfortunately, it would be only too remarkable in Ireland, one would naturally think that, in the presence of the common danger which of late has seemed to threaten Protestantism in the sister island, there might be some manifestation of that union which ought to exist between the various divisions of the Church of Christ; and Dr. Berry's presidency would be regarded simply as a sign of friendliness between persons who agreed to differ in non-essentials. One of our Irish contemporaries, however, contains a very warm protest on the subject, headed, "From schism, Good Lord deliver us," in which it is asked, "Are not Wesleyans schismatics ?" The question is raised, "Is a clergyman justified in presiding at a Wesleyan missionary meeting in a Wesleyan chapel ?" and, if so, how can he have the face to say before God and the congregation, "From schism, Good Lord deliver us," he having lately countenanced schism by presiding at its meeting in its chapel ?

At any other time this would be little more than amusing, but in the present day it is simply pitiable. The Church of Christ is one flock, but it has many folds, and Dr. Berry has not done any dishonour to his Scriptural knowledge in recognising the fact. When the Canon and Vicar-General of Kildare asserts that "there cannot, according to Ussher, be another Church of God in Ireland besides ours," we have no doubt Dr. Berry will not dissent, but will simply, according to the spirit of Christ, give a somewhat wider application to the possessive pronoun than Canon Crosthwaite seems prepared to do.

In the deeply interesting paper on missionary experiences, in last month's Good Words, by Miss Gordon Cumming, she calls attention to the painful fact that the progress of Christianity is retarded by the puerile divisions among, and the wrangling of, Christian sects. In illustration, she mentions that in China the Christian camp is divided into three parties, "who cannot agree on the best Chinese word to adopt as the equivalent of the Most Holy Name." The loss of power by reason of our divisions at home is deplorable enough, but it is infinitely more so in the mission field ; for it gives an idea of confusion where all ought to be peace. It behoves each Christian to pray that there may soon be one spirit and one mind in all those who are privileged to labour abroad in the noble work of extending the boundaries of the kingdom of Christ.

We ask attention to the outspoken and large-hearted utterance of Canon Wilberforce, in reply to the question, "What is Schism ?" which we have reprinted (p. 4) from the St. Mary (Southampton) Parish Magazine.

The Independents have lost one of their best ministers, Mr. W. F. Callaway (for he refused to be called "Reverend"), of Soho Hill Chapel, Birmingham. With an impressive presence, and a high order of intellect, Mr. Callaway, through the grace of God which was upon him, was a man of singular uprightness, and possessed in a remarkable degree the disinterestedness which is the strength of a minister of Christianity. Eschewing attempts at the arts of popularity, and craving no public place, he drew around him a most intelligent congregation, and there might be seen, in the large and handsome chapel which was built for his ministry, among traders and merchants, hundreds of Birmingham artisans and their wives. His eminence and bright and gentle unselfishness were universally recognised and honoured in Birmingham. He was among the foremost in standing by Mr. Moody on his visits there.

At the meeting of the Irish Evangelical Society, Rev. J. Ervine, from Kingstown, referred with deep feeling to the difficulties of Protestantism in the south and west of Ireland. Roman Catholics could point to Protestant places of worship closed, and to Protestants becoming more scattered and leaving the country. Doubtless terrorism has much to do with this, but the problem that is forced on the attention of the friends of Ireland just now is one of the gravest that has occupied this generation. Our hope is in the pleading prayers that are ascending to God.

The address of Dr. Dale, of Birmingham, at the late union meeting of Congregationalists and Baptists, pointed with a very powerful finger to a danger felt by the ablest men in both communions. If in these days when entrance to churches was made easy, persons found admission who had no personal faith, and to whom the will of God was not the supreme law of conduct, the ambition of ministers might be met, but it would bring the worst of troubles to the cause of Christ. Dr. Conder, of Leeds, uttered words of similar warning, and said the worst Church systems would work better in the hands of earnest Christian men than the best in the hands of worldlings.

The question how to deal with villages must not absorb an even greater one—how to deal with chief cities whose influence is incalculable. London is increasing by sixty thousand a year; Paris at the same rate, and New York, in proportion to its size, more rapidly still. Such enormous populations are without parallel, and in them the world-powers have their opportunity. The past tells us how chief cities have utterly perished because of their corruption. If, as is to be feared, the returns of church membership are by no means proportionate to the growth of these cities, and Christian influence is no adequate breakwater to the tides of iniquity which are setting in, the accountability of the Church is very serious. Rev. iii. 15—18 tells us what was the warning against lukewarmness in a commercial city.

Glimpses of life in London are occasionally given which are a painful revelation. Recently a champion prize-fighter was carried to his grave. He died at the age of twenty-five, and, from dark alleys, an enormous multitude emerged—many young, many debased, many flauntily clad, and many with industrial conveyances, the large number of which arrested all beholders as the huge procession followed the hearse. Such an emerging of a hidden population at the West-end tells a sad and solemn story of a so-called Christian city.

Some of the Y.M.C. Associations of our country, as we have lately remarked, are beginning to realise the deep spiritual needs of the heathen world. We are glad to find that many of our Christian women are also catching the flame, especially with respect to the condition of their own sex. There will be found in our list of announcements the programme of an All-day Convention next Tuesday, at Exeter Hall, on "The Women of India." The subject is one that ought to come home with peculiar power to every Christian woman in England. We are nationally responsible for the social and spiritual state of these sister subjects of our Queen; and if we are in dead earnest, surely much more can be done to let into their lives the light of Christ's Gospel.

This Convention ought to be followed up by others on "The Women of China" and "The Women of Africa."

The Christian.

The Sale of Walford Road Hall,

STOKE NEWINGTON, N.

After four years of successful ministry and useful work amongst the poor around us, we are now required either to purchase the above property (formerly used as a chapel), or to relinquish the same forthwith.

The Converts and Congregation, who number over 200, though poor, are doing all they can, and the Vendors have made a special abatement in our favour. Yet it is quite impossible to provide a quarter of the £700 required from our own resources. We have to complete the purchase by June 24.

To enable us to do this we earnestly appeal to those who value such Christian and ameliorative labours amongst the poor and irreligious, to come to our assistance in this moment of special trial.

There is a large Sunday-school and many useful agencies. All the labourers are voluntary, and maintain in addition large Open-air Meetings in the vicinity.

Help in any shape would be most thankfully received by the Editors, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; or by the Director of the North-East London Gospel Missions,

"It is as fine a collection of Sacred Airs as can anywhere be found. All the Hymns and the Tunes are beautiful, impressive, gracious; and the rendering of them, and the hearing them sung in private or public alike, have led many to change their whole course of life."
Oldham Chronicle.

"Of this Sacred Song Book it is scarcely needful for us to say a word. Thousands have listened and thousands have sung them, and will retain their good impressions, when all the mists have rolled away."—Baptist Messenger.

This Volume, which is largely composed of New Sacred Songs, Duets, Choruses, and Anthems, has been used alternately with "Songs and Solos," during the grea London Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Mr. Sankey and Mr. Mc Granahan are already well known by their hymns, which are sung all the world over; and the present collection, which is specially suitable for Gospel Choirs, will doubtless add to their reputation as true Gospel musicians.

THE

A COLLECTION OF

New Part Songs, Choruses & Anthems.

Written and Arranged expressly for Male Voices

By JAMES McGRANAHAN.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Limp, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

The Gospel Male Choir was, during the last five months of the London Mission, a special feature of the meetings of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. There are, doubtless, many more who would wish to dedicate their voices to the service of the Master; and with the present volume (which is arranged for 1st and 2nd Tenor and 1st and 2nd Bass) in their hands, and the hearty co-operation of a few brethren like-minded, this wish can be easily gratified. Says Mr. Mc Granahan:—"Organize a quartet, a double quartet, or better still, a chorus of male voices; and prove the power for good in the harmony of male voices when consecrated to the glory and service of our divine Master."

"It is a splendid collection of New Part Songs, Choruses, and Anthems, expressly arranged for male voices. Many of the pieces are the very words of Scripture, and are set to tunes which which give great force and sweetness to the words themselves. The book cannot fail to be a blessing wherever used."

DR. BARNARDO will feel greatly obliged to Clergymen, Ministers of the Gospel, or ladies resident in the country and having a knowledge of the industrious poor, who will send him the names of worthy people suitable to be entrusted with the care of a child to be "boarded out" with them. A sufficient weekly sum would be paid with each child, and its clothes would also be provided. It is desired that the persons recommended should themselves be godly people connected with any Evangelical denomination, total abstainers, and not having a large family. The children to be boarded out would be mostly young, and proper arrangements would have to be made for their attending an elementary day-school, divine service, and Sunday-school. As the scheme of boarding out in connection with "Dr. Barnardo's Homes" is likely to be greatly extended this year, the names of a very large number of persons in humble life willing and able to undertake the care of a child are required. In reply give full particulars, name and address, calling, denomination, number and ages of own family, whether most suitable for care of boy or girl and at what age, and if correspondent would be willing to visit the child so placed out, say once a month.—Address Boarding-out, 18 to 26 Stepney Causeway, London, E.

PASTORS requiring rest, and would like a mission, or missions halls needing special Revival services, should apply for full particulars.—Gerald Coultas, General Superintendent, 155, Balls Pond-road, London, N.

FOR BIBLE STUDENTS & TEACHERS.

QUESTIONS ON THE FACTS OF THE BIBLE,

Suited for use in Schools and Families. By Jabez Horne, Inspector of the Schools in the Orphan Houses, Ashley Down. Tinted covers, 6d.; cloth, 1s.

"A good examination in the Scriptures might be conducted with the help of this little manual, the questions in which are extremely well arranged."

The Rock.

May also be had (for the use of Teachers only),

KEY TO QUESTIONS ON THE FACTS OF THE BIBLE.

Which furnishes the Answers to all the Questions. Cloth, 6d.

THE NUMBER "SEVEN" IN SCRIPTURE.

Compiled by S. A. Blackwood, Esq., C.B. Paper Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d. Presentation Edition, Cloth Boards, Bevelled, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"Many other attempts have been made in tabulating the circumstances connected with the word "seven" in the Bible, but we cannot think of any one which is so complete, so concise, and so systematic as in the small volume compiled by Mr. Blackwood. From Genesis i. to Rev. xxii. all the many times the word occurs are duly noted, and each book is dealt with seriatim, so that reference is easy. One object of the book is "to stimulate search and to arouse inquiry," and with this book by the side of the Bible one course of study can be made very profitable indeed."—The Rock.

CHRIST LIFTED UP.

Meditations on the Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ. By Rev. Robert Gilchrist. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"An earnest, practical exhibition of the Gospel under a variety of aspects. Christ lifted up on the cross, and at the Father's right hand, is the grand theme, and affords scope for setting forth a wide range of Gospel teaching. The writer does this in an interesting, while simple style."—British Messenger.

"Old-fashioned divinity presented in a pleasing form. May its readers be many."—Sword and Trowel.

THE GOSPEL IN LEVITICUS.

Chapters on the Old Testament Foreshadowings of the Great Redemption. By the late Rev. Dr. Fleming, of Kentish Town. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"The subject is set forth with a clearness, a directness, and a persuasiveness which leave little to be desired. Every lover of sound Scriptural theology, especially in regard to the momentous doctrine of the Atonement, will find in the book a rich treat."—Baptist Magazine.

JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED.

The Character, Writings, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple. New and Enlarged Edition. By Rev. Dr. Culross. With Chromo-Lithographic Views of the "Sea of Galilee" and the "Island of Patmos." Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.

"It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."—Sword and Trowel.

"THY FIRST LOVE."

Christ's Message to Ephesus. By Rev. Dr. Culross. With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"It is a heart-searching and stimulating little book."

British Quarterly Review.

"Its language is chaste and clear; its thoughts are fresh and invigorating; its tone is evangelical without being sentimental. While there is a genial warmth of devout feeling, there runs through its pages a healthy breeze of robustness."—Literary World.

BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR & KNOCK.

Christ's Message to Laodicea. By Rev. Dr. Culross. Tinted Covers, 1s; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"The exposition is fresh and original, displaying great critical skill and discrimination, together with happy quotations of Scripture. The style is all that could be desired—chaste and polished, yet full of force; here and there, as in the author's other works, we meet with passages of great poetic beauty."

Aberdeen Daily Press.

CALLS TO CHRIST.

A Series of Addresses by Rev. R. W. Nicoll, M.A. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"Force and freshness are eminently the characteristics of these 'Calls to Christ'; they are also brief to a proverb, and hence they may be of great service to an earnest evangelist who knows how to use another man's thoughts."

"This large and most useful book for five shillings. . . . We need not say a word to commend Cruden's priceless work. Young men can now for a crown purchase a new copy of the best Concordance; whereas not long ago we thought ourselves fortunate if we could pick up a second-hand copy at that rate."—Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, in The Sword and Trowel.

Foxe's Book of Martyrs.

A COMPLETE AND AUTHENTIC ACCOUNT OF THE LIVES, SUFFERINGS, AND TRIUMPHANT DEATHS OF PRIMITIVE AND PROTESTANT MARTYRS IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

By John Foxe. With Twelve full-page Illustrations. Complete in one handsome volume, cloth boards, 1083 pages, 10s. 6d.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott deserve most cordial thanks for the production of this noble edition of a noble book; and we are specially pleased to observe that the aid of pictorial art has been invoked to attract to the volume the attention of the young. Only let this book have a place in every British home, and we may smile at the efforts of Rome and of the Anglican ritualists to undo the blessed work that was achieved for our nation and the world by the thousands of faithful witnesses to the truth who, in dark days of priestly domination, resisted unto death."—Christian Leader.

By Rev. E. Payson Hammond, M.A.

Mission and other Appeals.

Hackney Y.M.C.A.—Mr. F. L. Porter, secretary of this branch, writing from The Grove, Mare street, E., appeals for £100 to clear off a debt of £40, and to extend the work among young men.

Seamen's Mission, Folkestone.—Mr. Henry Galer, 35, Garden-terrace, Broadmead-road, Folkestone-road, asks for books for sailors bags. Tracts for distribution outside the Folkestone Exhibition are greatly needed. Large excursion parties are visiting from the Continent, so French tracts and Scriptures will be most acceptable.

Union Hall Mission.—The time has arrived when we hope to be again fully engaged in preaching the Gospel in the tents in this great metropolis. About £200 will be required for this summer work, which will in no way interfere with the evangelistic work carried on in the five halls of the Mission.

Yours, &c., Robert Bilke.

18, Greenhill-park-villas, Harlesden, N.W.

Distress in Wales.—Mrs. Pechey, Rhamberfedd, Hope, Mold, asks for help in one of the poorest districts in North Wales, in the way of old clothes, boots and shoes, for men, women, and children. Through slack work in the collieries, the distress becomes more and more apparent. Parcels will be thankfully received by post, or for larger ones Mrs. Pechey would send her railway address.

Inebriate Women.—The Women's Union of the C.E.T.S. are about to open a Home for Inebriate Women. Applications for a Home of this kind, for women of all classes, are frequently received by the committee. They earnestly ask that subscriptions and donations, promises of furniture and other necessaries, may at once be sent to the secretary, Miss Haslam, 116A, Palace-chambers, Bridge-street, Westminster, S.W.

St. John's, Copenhagen-street, King's Cross, N.—A Sale of Work, the proceeds of which will be devoted to meeting the heavy expenses of mission work among the masses in this very poor and thickly populated district, will be held on July 1, at Worthing House, Barnsbury-square, N. All kinds of useful or fancy needlework, clothes for poor, flowers, fruit, or provisions will be most thankfully received by Mrs. Charles Ough, at the above address.

Homes of Hope.—Every day most painful applications are made for admission, and the thought of refusing a helping hand to any young woman struggling to get out of her miserable life is very distressing, especially in the case of those who have only made a first false step, and for whom particularly this appeal is sent. The Committee are urgently in need of funds, and will be glad of help.—Yours, &c.,

4, Regent-square, W.C. W. Hornbrook, Sec.

One Tun Mission.—Mrs Barker Harrison, 32, Eaton-terrace, S.W., writes that contributions are urgently needed to save the Mission commenced twenty-nine years ago, and as urgently needed as ever for the numerous depraved and destitute families in the slums of Westminster. The death of the Earl of Shaftesbury, who took the deepest interest in the schools, &c., is an unspeakable loss. As it is not at the East-end the old Mission is overlooked by those who have the means and the will to help.

Orphanage at Sunbury.—Lieut.-Colonel T. Newton Young, Lambton Lodge, Spring-grove, Isleworth, writes: During the past eleven years various temperance associations have supported an orphanage at Sunbury-on-Thames, into which the orphans of all sections of the temperance body are admitted. Owing to loss of work the expenditure has exceeded the income by £115, and we have to meet bills coming due. We have several pressing cases now pleading for admission, but we are most reluctantly compelled to refuse admission until our financial condition improves.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—June 6, Acts ii. 14—24; June 7, ii. 25—36; June 8, ii. 37—47; June 9, iii. 1—11; June 10, iii. 12—26; June 11, iv. 1—12; June 12, iv. 13—22.

Derby, May, 1886.

We have received a number of letters in ply to a note by a correspondent, in a cent issue, in which he commented on the osence in many boarding schools of any prosion for training girls in the duties of ery-day home life. Our object in inserting e note was not to draw attention to any rticular school or schools, but to bring the estion before the notice, both of parents d teachers.

Dr. Cunningham Geikie recently delivered lecture on "True Socialism" (in reply to e on "Socialism," by Mr. Morris) to the orking-men of Norwich. It is full of the isdom and common sense of God's religion, d the Socialism it teaches is that taught th in the Old and New Testaments. It is, erefore, both conservative and radical, eking to conserve the good and to root up e evil. Here is a wholesome rebuke for e Fourth Estate :—

> I cannot but think that the social irreligion and morality of the day is largely due to our able itors; good men, no doubt, in private, but most ngerous in their calling. I see long reports of vorces, seductions, and breaches of promise in pers which would scarcely say a word to help on e great Act for the protection of young girls. I ok in vain, day by day, for any trace in editorials the existence of a God, or of a higher law than ere gain or pleasure. With a power greater than at of the pulpit, the able editors ignore the istence of a HIGH IDEAL in life. To make the orld better; to guide it according to the Ten mmandments; to keep alive the fear of God, hich is the life of a nation, is not thought their cation. They have simply to think of what pays. ho would ever know from a newspaper that there a God, or that to believe in Him and act accordgly is vital to any community? Till the Press se to the dignity of its magnificent commission, d teach men that the greatness of a nation lies t in its wealth, but its worth, that its prosperity es not consist in having so much money, or so uch selfish indulgence, but in fidelity to truth, rity, justice, unselfishness, and integrity, there a small hope for the future!

One of the lying half-truths of the day is, You can't make men sober [or pure, or pright, or anything else] by Act of Parliaent." We rejoice when we find a man who es not fear to knock the bottom out of a sk of hollow cant like this. Dr. Geikie ys:—

> Truth, honesty, character are dead in large dertments of business—dead, or like to die. The sult is that wages are down to the lowest; men not get the worth of their money; trade is being st to us. One way to remedy this is, beyond estion, to pass wise, just laws, to force men to honest and just. There are many who fear no d but an Act of Parliament. It is mere folly to y men cannot be made moral in this way. They n, at least, be forced to act morally [or not to t immorally]. Ask the little girls of England Mr. Stead's law has not forced morality on the ffians who formerly could ruin them with imnity. Think of the Factory Act, of the Women--Mines Act, of Plimsoll's Act. Pass another, to quire everything sold to be what it says it is, d to punish all scamp work.

No doubt this would be called, in the cant the day, "grandmotherly government," d Dr. Geikie a "faddist." But he can ford this; it is the lot of all reforms and formers. It was "grandmotherly government" to abolish slavery and to restrict urs of labour; and Wilberforce and aftesbury were the "faddists" of their ys; as the men who cry out against the ink traffic at home and the opium traffic road are now. But the next generation ill call them Christians and philanthropists. True Socialism" is published by Jarrold & ns, price 3d.

We have received from Rev. E. P. Hammond some interesting notes of the visit of himself and Mrs. Hammond to Germany. We hope to give them in our next.

A correspondent writes to us as follows:—

> SIR,—Within the last three months I have been to a good number of different places of worship in the West-end. I am sorry to say that it has come to me very forcibly that, in many cases, had I gone into them unsaved, I should not have learned the way of salvation before I came out. Should this be so? Surely pastors do not think the old, old story is so wearisome to believers, that they must discourse on every other topic but that?

The Executive Committee of the National Temperance League are making arrangements for a National and Colonial Temperance Congress in London, which will be held in Princes' Hall, Piccadilly, on July 14, 15, and 16. The object of the Congress is to receive information regarding the extent of drinking habits in the Colonies and dependencies of the British Empire; the regulations in force in those localities for restricting or prohibiting the drink traffic; and the results of efforts put forth by Temperance Organisations, Churches, Sunday-schools, Educational Boards, and other public bodies for the promotion of Total Abstinence from Intoxicating liquors.

> DEAR SIR,—May I suggest to your numerous readers a means of disseminating the valuable information and stimulating truths contained in THE CHRISTIAN; it is that of supplying libraries and reading-rooms with the same. Being allowed myself to send it to a Free Library in one of our principal towns, I am desirous that other Christians may be induced thus to bring it before the public, also other helpful periodicals, such as the Y M.C. Association Notes, and Y.W.C.A. Home Words, and Gazette. In the hope that Christ's kingdom may be thus extended, I am, dear Sir, yours faithfully,
> AN APPRECIATIVE READER.

We occasionally get a letter asking what can be done with a quantity of back numbers of THE CHRISTIAN. We hope those readers who are allowing their numbers to accumulate will adopt some such plan as above proposed. No one need be at a loss to find willing and thankful recipients.

We regret exceedingly to receive a letter from the medical adviser of Richard Weaver, saying that he has been suffering for some time past from vertigo, and that he must abstain from active work at the very least for several weeks. A little while ago Richard left home to hold meetings at Devonport, but was obliged to return home when he had got as far as Bristol. There are many who have been blessed for eternity through his preaching, who may now have an opportunity of showing their love to him. His address is Milton Cottage, Sale, Cheshire.

Mr. Ruskin has in a striking passage insisted upon "the duty of delight," a duty in many cases very little recognised even by those who have most to rejoice over. Powerful, however, as are the great prose writer's words, a greater writer still, the Apostle Paul, has urged stronger reasons in support of the cultivation of that spirit of joy which ought to be characteristic of the Christian life. It is very evident from Rom. xiv. 17, 18, that a not unimportant part of the service of Christ is "joy in the Holy Ghost," for it is recorded that he who does not fail in that portion of his service is not only approved of men, but also acceptable to God, or, as the New Version has it, "well pleasing to God."

The following circular tells us that Mr. Moody is as usual planning to spend his holiday in laboriously helping others. No one can estimate the benefit to America and the world through the 205 College students whom he thus invites to reap the benefit of his wide experience:—

COLLEGE STUDENTS' SUMMER SCHOOL FOR BIBLE STUDY,

To be conducted by D. L. Moody, at Northfield, Mass., July 1—31, 1886.

We are happy to convey to your Association the following invitation from Mr. Moody. He is proposing to hold a College Students' Summer School during the entire month of July at his home in Northfield, Mass., a delightful place of summer resort, where are offered abundant opportunities for wholesome recreation. The object of the school will be the study of the Bible and of such methods of Christian work as are adapted to College life. Mr. Moody, while himself conducting the meeting every day, will also bring to his aid men of wide experience in Bible Study and Christian work.

The regular exercises are not to exceed two hours a day, the balance of the time being devoted to just such recreation as students need after the work of the College year, the Connecticut river being accessible for boating, and the mountains in every direction affording opportunities for walking and climbing. Other facilities for outdoor exercise and sport will also be furnished. Such opportunities for conference and study as the students may desire outside of the time mentioned can also be arranged for.

Mr. Moody can accommodate over two hundred persons in his school building at Northfield. Accordingly he is able to invite each of the two hundred and twenty-five College Young Men's Christian Associations to send one representative.

The entire cost of living will not exceed five dollars a week. There will be no other expenses. Reduced railroad fares in the way of excursion tickets are always offered in the Summer season, and from whatever point your delegate may come he will be able to avail himself of this reduction.

Mr. Moody seeks the benefit not only of the individual students who come, but also that of the institutions which they represent. He, therefore, desires that every College Association should select as its representative a student who will be in college at least two years longer, and one well qualified to impart to others during that time the benefit which he shall have received.

The invitation offers to Christian students a rare opportunity of spending enough time with Mr. Moody to gain the benefit of his thorough practical experience in Christian work and of his knowledge of the Bible for use in such work.

52, East 23rd Street, L. D. WISHARD,
New York City. C. K. OBER.

Any English people travelling in America would do well to visit Northfield.

It has been said of one of our great English poets that there is a risk of his readers being carried along by the exquisite music of his verse before they have had time to seize the thought. Professor Rhys appears to have had a somewhat similar thought with regard to portions of the Bible; for, in a recent sketch of the evolution of English prose, he has said, after quoting a passage which he describes as "noble in its thought, and hauntingly musical in its expression" (Ecclesiastes xii. 5, 6 and 7), and "a perfect example of prose rhythm" (Song viii. 6, 7):—

> It would be gratuitous to quote further from sources so returned to—returned to until there is a danger of the noblest storehouse of English prose becoming so ordinary a resort as to lose the full influence of its supreme virtue.

The remedy against this tendency is, however, a very simple one, within the reach of everyone. It is simply that of taking a small portion and meditating not upon its literary merit but upon its meaning. "The entrance of thy Word giveth light" is as true to-day as when David experienced it; but the critic must give way to the seeker after Divine truth, if the darkness has to be dispelled.

Anniversaries.

Children's Special Service Mission.

This excellent Society divides its anniversary into two gatherings. At the afternoon meeting in Exeter Hall, on Tuesday week, there was a large muster of young people, chiefly those, we imagine, who have enjoyed the ministrations of the Mission at the sea-side or elsewhere. After song and prayer,

Mr. Arrowsmith said they could not get along without money, though most of the workers are honorary. The balance at the bank for the general fund was then about a couple of pounds, and he appealed to the workers to try and get regular subscribers, even if they only promised small sums. To show the power of littles, he stated that the children of Bordeaux, out of their savings, lately gave £400 towards the relief of sufferers from the inundations. How important at the seaside to have plenty of printed leaflets, hymns, and tracts to scatter about. God does bless the printed word to the salvation of souls. There was a would-be smart letter in The Pall Mall Gazette, a little while ago, throwing ridicule upon what was called "the tract nuisance." Mr. Kennedy, the Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. at Exeter Hall, who was himself converted through a tract, had written a letter to the Gazette in reply, but it had not as yet appeared. They expected better things from a paper that had done such good service in the past. Mr. Arrowsmith made an appeal to the workers not to run away to the quietest places at the sea-side they could find, forgetting the more popular and larger resorts where the children chiefly congregate. He earnestly urged them to make the most of these six precious weeks during the summer, when the children of the upper classes can be reached and won for God. The work was to be done by individual effort, much more than by addressing large gatherings. It is in the little quiet talk with a boy or girl that they are brought to decision. In order to do this the workers must know their Bibles well. He closed with a simple and pathetic Gospel appeal to the young people present.

Rev. G. F. Head, of Hampstead (Chairman), said the work was of great importance; many of those who are reached by the happy services at the sea-side will be leaders of society in the time to come. Perhaps they hear little or nothing of Christ at home; but the seeds of truth are lodged in their hearts, and they go back to their homes to bear fruit. Many a schoolboy too goes away and dares to be singular at school, in the defence of the good, the pure, and the true. He rejoiced in the fact that the workers took a share in the sports of the children, because it showed that the religion of Jesus Christ was not a matter of gloom and long faces. It is a great thing to let the young people know and feel that they can become workers for God in early life. The afterwork, daily the reading of the Scripture portions, was of the deepest importance. He advised that more help should be given to the children in the study of these portions.

Mrs. Evered Poole next addressed some words of earnest exhortation to workers. There is need in such work of continual encouragement. Many of the great buildings of antiquity were built of a multitude of small bricks; so the temple of God's kingdom is being erected of individual souls, many of them the souls of the very young. We cannot begin too soon to find out the course of life's stream, so as to guide it into channels that will be a blessing to our boys and girls themselves, and those whom they can influence. One great beauty of a little child's character is its susceptibility and the power of being moulded for God. What possibilities are bound up in the heart of every child! How solemn then it is to work among the young, and to seek to train them for eternity. The energy that we sometimes grumble at in children may develop into a zeal and activity, which, by the grace of God, will achieve great things for Him. As crooked, knotty, and knobbly pieces of wood, when polished, make the most beautiful furniture, so the little children with knotty places in their character turn out the best and most beautiful Christian characters. What great need of skill there is in dealing with the young. As all fish are not caught in the same net, so all children are not led to the Saviour in the same way. Let us be very discreet, and remember that to children especially religion ought to wear a very bright aspect. Don't wake up the children at six o'clock in the morning to say the Commandments, or send them away to the end of the garden to learn the Catechism. Her own little girl, when she came home from church one day, said: "Do you think God is very angry with me because my legs would not keep still; they were just like two ponies that wanted to gallop." How many religious people there are who are terribly afraid of a little fun. They think their boys are going to ruin if they make a racket. At the same time, parents must not go to the other extreme, which leads them to exercise no control at all. Mrs. Poole made a solemn appeal to mothers to have a care for the salvation of their own children, and not leave even to the Special Service Mission that which they ought to do themselves.

Mr. King, who works among the boys in public schools, spoke of individual responsibility, also of the need of adequate preparation in undertaking this work. Mr. Pericles Green urged dependence on God and faith in his Word as elements of success in teaching the young. He put in a strong plea for the foreign work in connection with which illustrated leaflets are now prepared by the Mission in many languages.

Another meeting was held in the evening.

The Christian Community.

The downpour of rain on Monday week doubtless prevented very many of the friends of this old-established Society from attending the annual meeting, in Exeter (Lower) Hall. There was, however, no lack of cheerfulness on the part of those who came, and a most excellent programme was admirably gone through. The first remark by the chairman, Mr. George Williams, was one of pressing sympathy with the esteemed Secretary, Mr. Atkinson, in a sad accident he recently sustained; hopes were earnestly expressed for his speedy recovery. The assistant-secretary in his report for the year reviewed the work done; there have been remarkable conversions, renovated lives, and happy deaths. Special attention was called to a new branch of the work entered upon last winter, by which no less than 4000 homeless men were gathered and sheltered for the night in Thrawl-street, receiving in the morning a breakfast and Gospel message. Two new Mission Halls were added during the year; twenty-five lodging-houses have been regularly visited, and 16,000 free meals provided.

The Chairman said that the practical Christianity recorded in the statement given was the best answer to infidel objectors. Now that the Society has a Mission in St. Luke's, one day, perhaps, they might have the joy in seeing Mr. Bradlaugh himself a believer. The highest point of enthusiasm during the evening was reached in the address of Rev. Hugh Price Hughes. He said it was truly an awful fact that nearly one million persons in this metropolis never attend a place of worship; and they never would until they were gone after. "I feel," exclaimed Mr. Hughes, "in a somewhat revolutionary mood to-night; I shall propose that on some fine Sunday in June there be a general turn-out, and all the ministers preach in the open air." No other Society is doing, or can do, the same work as this; it is invaluable also in providing Christians with work. He was quite sure if Christ lived here now, He would belong to the Christian Community. Its unsectarian character was a necessity for the unique mission it undertook. Hon. Arthur Kinnaird urged the members to consecrate themselves afresh, and thus memorialise the anniversary. Rev. Ira Boseley urged the setting forth of Christ's sympathy with the poor, and tender dealing with sceptics. Dr. Sinclair Paterson told of a ringleader in a gang of roughs, who exclaimed, when John iii. 16 was read to him, "That has broken my heart;" and became a new creature on that very spot. With much pathos the Doctor urged the preaching of God's love as the only remedy for the world's woes. Further brief words of counsel were spoken by Rev. J. de Kewer Williams, Rev. T. Walters, the Hon. H. Noel, Mr. E. Eisenstadt, and Mr. Webber. The last-named speaker joined the Community sixty-three years ago, and is its oldest member.

Royal Naval Scripture Readers' Society.

The annual meeting of this Society was held at Exeter Hall on May 20. The report stated that the Readers had steadily and successfully carried on their work during the past year. Want of funds prevented the committee from again sending a Reader to the North American and West Indian stations.

Admiral Key (Chairman) said they did not require any explanation of the work of the Society, as regarded the men of the Royal Navy, but he was very sorry to say that it did not meet with the support from naval officers which it deserved. He felt that it should receive their heartiest sympathy and support. He mentioned that about 10,000 men in the Navy were total abstainers, and he hoped soon to find the majority sober and temperate men; then they would be more inclined to listen to the teaching of Readers.

Rev. Canon Rogers, Mr. J. MacGregor, Admiral Lotheby, Admiral King-Hall, Rev. E. A. Williams, R. N., and W. A. Mount addressed the meeting. Mr. Williams, Reader, gave an account of his work at Hong Kong, from which station he had just returned.

Seamen's Christian Friend Society.

This Society's fortieth annual meeting was held on Tuesday, May 18, at the Seamen's Chapel, London Docks, and was largely attended by seamen and others. Mr. George Williams, the President, occupied the chair.

An abstract of the report, read by Rev. G. J. Hill, gave a very cheering account of the work. It stated that seventeen missionaries were wholly or partly supported by the Society; that, aided by about one hundred unpaid helpers, nearly one hundred services weekly had been held among sailors all the year round, at the stations in London, Liverpool, Whitehaven, Maryport, Workington, Isle of Man, Ireland, &c. Services had been held in several languages, and both on shore and afloat the attendance of seamen had been most encouraging; and, as a result of these meetings, a great many seamen had openly professed faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and were now showing forth his praise in lives transformed by his Spirit and devoted to his service. The Gospel Temperance work had been more than usually successful; more than 500 seamen had signed the pledge. A good account was also given of the other varied branches of the work. The report further stated that a missionary had recently been appointed to labour at Fleetwood, &c., and another as a travelling evangelist for West of England ports. During the past severe winter considerable relief had been given to destitute seamen. The report closed by stating that the costs of the enlarged operations had considerably exceeded the income, and that, for the first time in the Society's history, it had been found necessary to borrow from the bankers; but the Committee were persuaded that if the Society's work and usefulness were more widely known, it would speedily be relieved of the burden, and meet with more generous support.

Rev. A. J. Robinson (Rector of Whitechapel), and Rev. Cæsar Caine (Wesleyan minister), spoke on behalf of the Mission. The closing service in connection with the anniversary was held at the East London Tabernacle the following Thursday evening. The vast building was well filled. Rev. Archibald G. Brown preached a very suitable and earnest discourse. At the close he thanked the sailors for coming, and said it spoke highly for the work of this Society when it could bring together such a magnificent assembly of genuine sailors.

The workers in connection with the Society have been greatly encouraged by recent sympathy manifested. Mr. Dawson, J.P., of Aldcliffe Hall, Lancashire, lately offered £40 per annum towards the support of a missionary in Fleetwood and ports in Morecambe Bay. The Society would be greatly helped if others would add a similar amount, so as to free it from the responsibility of the burden which it is not in a position readily to bear. Mr. M. H. Hodder, of Paternoster-row, will be glad to acknowledge any kind assistance.

Spanish & Portuguese Church Aid Society.

THE annual meeting of this Society was held last week at Willis's Rooms. The report stated that a special effort has been made to extend the operations by means of itinerary evangelistic missions. The ARCHBISHOP OF DUBLIN, who presided, pointed out that while the Society did not send missionaries to Spain, but only aided those native Christians who were themselves already carrying on the work, yet that work had always been of a missionary and evangelistic character. Sir JOHN COODE had travelled in Spain, and was able to give the testimony of an eye-witness to the necessity and value of the Society's efforts. Rev. F. A. C. LILLINGSTON, in an earnest address, said it was the duty and privilege of Englishmen to preach the Gospel, remembering that it was only 300 years ago since they themselves received the great boon of an open Bible. Dr. LEWIS BORRETT WHITE, Secretary of the Religious Tract Society, referred to letters he had received from all parts of Spain and Portugal, showing the need of such work as that carried on by the Reformed Episcopal Churches.

Addresses were also given by Revs. G. S. Karney and J. S. Verschoyle.

China Inland Mission.

ACCORDING to time-honoured custom, this Mission convened its annual meetings at the Conference Hall, Mildmay. This year they fell to be held on Wednesday week, afternoon and evening. The clear shining, after much rain, brought together a goodly company in the afternoon, when Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS took the chair.

A long and detailed letter from Mr. Hudson Taylor, read by Mr. Theodore Howard, was of the deepest interest, as giving a birdseye view of the efforts of the Mission in all parts of the great Celestial Empire. We presume it will duly appear in China's Millions, and we would advise its careful perusal. We extract one of the opening paragraphs:—

> "We have to thank God for opening up new doors to missionary effort, and still more for opening many hearts to receive the Lord Jesus. The returns as yet received of the work of the year are very incomplete. In these papers I find mention of between two and three hundred who have been added to the Church by baptism, and rejoice to see that a number who had been under suspension have been restored to fellowship. Death has been unusually busy among our native Christians, last year having been an unhealthy one; and removals and discipline have also told on the native churches. From the statistics before me, it appears that in 28 of our 42 stations there were above 1300 communicants in fellowship. Were the returns complete, probably over a hundred more communicants would be noted. The same papers show over 2000 to have been baptized from the commencement of the work; but this number is also very incomplete. Our returns do not, in any case, show the number of candidates for baptism and hopeful inquirers. Of these, several hundred have been reported in the letters of our friends, so that the outlook for the coming year is decidedly encouraging. And it is all the more so when we remember that so many of our missionaries have recently arrived, and are mainly occupied in the study of the language; and likewise that during this year a larger number than ever before of our older missionaries have been absent on furlough. Moreover, during a considerable portion of the year in question, operations have been interfered with seriously by the war with France."

Mr. BROOMHALL contrasted the present state of evangelisation in China with the time when the first party went out in connection with this mission just twenty years ago. All the twelve provinces then unoccupied by any Protestant missionary had been entered, and with the exception of Hunan, in which the station is for the present closed, all have European missionaries and native helpers resident in them. There are now 152 European workers, including the wives of missionaries, scattered throughout China in connection with the mission. Forty went out last year, and this year ten have already gone forth. Notwithstanding this large increase in the working staff, the income for the year now ending is only about level with that of the previous year. Mr. Broomhall took occasion formally to contradict the rumour that has been widely spread abroad, and which we referred to some time since, that a large sum of money had been placed at the disposal of the mission by one of the workers now in China. Probably this rumour may in some quarters have stayed the inflow of help. We trust the support of the Christian public may grow with the growth and extension of the work. Mr. Broomhall said that this year no less than 118 candidates for service in China had presented themselves to the council of the mission, and he asked that prayer should be made for special guidance in selecting the right men and women to join the ranks of those already in the field. It was gratifying to hear that the circulation of China's Millions increases, and that Mr. Taylor's valuable pamphlet, "China's Spiritual Need and Claims," still finds favour with the friends of mission work. In a subsequent paragraph we refer to the new brochure just issued by Mr. Broomhall, "A Missionary Band," to be had at this office, price 1s. 6d.

After some encouraging words from the Chairman, several missionaries addressed the assembled friends. Mr. PIGGOTT pleaded very hard for a recognition of the claims of the outlying provinces of China, Manchuria, Mongolia, Eastern Turkestan and Thibet. As yet they have been almost entirely untouched by Gospel influences. May the God of the whole earth stir up some of his servants to become missionary pioneers among these needy peoples! Mrs. PIGGOTT followed with a very interesting account of personal experiences in Shansi, in connection with the cure of opium-smokers and the healing of the sick.

Mr. EASTON, who had very recently arrived from China after ten and a half years' service there, greatly interested the audience by his recital of missionary experiences and incidents. He is a lively and pleasing speaker, full of matter, and we trust his voice will often be heard on our missionary platforms during his stay in this country. The larger portion of his address was devoted to the history of three elders of the church at Han-chung, whence he came. The first was Mr. Ho. He had been a very strict member of the sect of vegetarians. He had travelled about the country trying to make disciples to vegetarianism, but really to accumulate merit in order to save his soul. He heard the foreigner preach, and after careful study became a Christian. Mr. Easton gave a graphic description of what took place one evening in his presence in connection with Mr. Ho. He was one of a very few who had obtained a most valuable document from his vegetarian sect which gave him great power in the world to come when Buddha comes. This paper he brought out that evening and burnt, lest it should be a snare to him and other converts. Another elder was brought to the truth through reading a copy of St. John in a friend's house. He has been instrumental in bringing many members of his own family in, and has had the privilege of helping his own mother, aged nearly eighty. Since then he had had great trouble, having lost his wife and two sons by death, and his neighbours say it is owing to going to foreign religion. Mr. Weh, the third elder, appears, from Mr. Easton's description, to be a very original character. He took it into his head one New Year's Day to go and pay his respects to the foreigners. He did so; he heard the Gospel and believed it. He went home to his village, and when the people found out what had happened, they said he had gone mad; his answer was, "Yes; praise the Lord!" Through him forty more have "gone mad." He was in the habit of selling vegetables, but has given that up to sell medicine in the market-place. His stall is covered with tracts; at the back is a British Workman, on one side of which is a scroll saying that he had medicines to cure opium-smoking, on the other a scroll giving the age of Methuselah. This, Mr. Easton said, might have been with an eye to business—intimating that if they purchased his drugs they might live as long as the patriarch, but more likely, he thought, as an evidence that godliness produces longevity. The speech closed with an account of periodical conferences held in the city for the Christians, some of whom come from the distant parts, carrying some their babies others their beds on their backs.

Mr. RADCLIFFE, as usual, was fervid and striking in his presentation of the great needs of the heathen. He spoke of the multiplied "floods" of converting blessing that came, in answer to the prayers and fastings of the early Church, and said he looked for a repetition of these signs and wonders now, if God's believing children would but lay hold of his almighty power. Very earnest petition followed from Mr. Frank White.

"The Missionary Band," to which reference is made in the foregoing report, is a truly remarkable compilation. As its title implies, it is a full and most interesting record of the circumstances connected with the departure last year of "The Cambridge Seven" for the China Mission field; but it is much more. The first division of the book contain letters from most, if not all, of these gentlemen after their arrival in China, and also "echoes" of the awakened interest in foreign mission caused by their visits to Scotland, Cambridge, Leicester, and various places en route for China. More than half the volume, however, is taken up with weighty utterances on the subject of "The Evangelisation of the World," culled from many sources, making altogether an invaluable compendium of ripened and inspiring Christian thought and experience on this transcendant topic. Among those whose spoken or written words are quoted are the late Lord Shaftesbury, Rev. W. Arthur, Mr. Radcliffe, Mr. Hudson Taylor, Dean Vaughan, Rev. Baptist Noel, Dr. Punshon, Mrs. Guinness, Dr. Duff, Mr. C. H. Spurgeon, Dr. Livingstone, Bishop Patteson, Rev. Griffith John, Dr. Moffat, Rev. Joseph Cook, Dr. Pierson, Major Malan, Mr. Ruskin, and many others. There are excellent photographs of the Cambridge seven, portraits of Mr. Hudson Taylor, Dr. Moffat, and Dr. Schofield, and a number of illustrations representative of Chinese life. Not the least valuable part of the work is the list of British Missionary Societies, and the guide to books on missions, missionaries, and mission fields.

It is, we repeat, a very noteworthy publication, and one that ought to be sympathetically studied by all whose hearts are in tune with the last great command of the ascending Lord.

The Young Abstainers' Union.

AT the annual meeting of this Society last Saturday afternoon, in Exeter Hall, Mr. S. A. BLACKWOOD, President, made an earnest appeal that the financial deficit might be cleared off, and that the annual income of the Society might be raised to at least £500. Few persons, he said, have any idea of the dangers surrounding our boys in schools, where, in some cases, intemperance existed to an alarming extent. The Union is making headway among the high-class day and boarding-schools.

An admirable though brief paper was read by Dr. Kate Mitchell, entitled, "Is Health compatible with Total Abstinence?" The answer was of course, in the affirmative; the paper declared, indeed, that in no other way could all the conditions of health be secured and maintained. The prevalent idea that alcohol serves to restore the waste of strength incurred through ordinary labour, was denounced as being utterly at variance with ascertained fact, since it only stimulates the existing powers, and provides no fresh access of nourishment whatever for the system. Should the day come when the practice of abstinence becomes universal, doctors would certainly be compelled to seek another profession for a livelihood.

Mrs. Ormiston Chant followed with an earnest address, claiming to have, in her babe of sixteen months, the youngest pledged abstainer living. Selecting as her subject "Temperance and the Social Circle," the young folks were urged not only to walk in the narrow way themselves, but to try and lead others into it. Rev. J. S. Jones spoke on "Temperance Reformation and Spiritual Force," and showed that the Temperance Organisation was an immense benefit to the Church of Christ as furnishing a new branch of Christian work.

The time that remained was all too brief for Rev. Dr. Clifford's eloquent and forcible address, the design of which was to prove that in every way the free use of alcohol is destructive of intellectual power, by disabling the brain, impairing the judgment, and depriving its victim of self-control. Mr. George Williams said that a doctor recently admitted to him that if all his patients were abstainers his practice would be reduced by one-fourth. This gentleman had himself since died through the effects of alcohol.

Mr. Samuel Morley's absence through illness was regretfully referred to.

North London Home for Aged Blind Women.

On Friday afternoon the sixth annual meeting of the North London Home for Aged Christian Blind Women was held in the Hall of the Young Men's Christian Association, Finsbury-park; Mr. T. A. Denny in the chair. Rev. J. F. Osborne (hon secretary) read the report, which stated that during the past year there had been only one death in the Home, and only £3 spent for medicine. There is a debt on the freehold of £600. The trustees of the Gardner Trust for the Blind have promised the sum of £200 if the other £400 is raised by Dec. 31. Mr. T. A. Denny has offered £50 on the same condition. At the present time there are 32 inmates at the Home—the oldest over ninety years of age, and the youngest fifty. Rev. Ossian Davies said they could not do miracles by giving sight to the blind, but they could do the next best thing—help to make their lives as comfortable and happy as possible. Rev. E. A. Stuart and Dr. Edmonds also supported the claims of the Mission.

MR. WILLIAM FORBES has been giving addresses at Dartford, Norwood, Lambeth, Vauxhall, Wandsworth, Highbury, and Mile End.

WICKEN, SOHAM, CAMBRIDGESIRE.—I am most anxious to erect a mission hall here at a cost of about £140. It is very much needed, as the church is out of the village. The Bible-classes and mission services are now conducted in rooms too small, unhealthily crowded, many unable to get sittings. The village abounds in men, many of them formerly confirmed drunkards. Eighty-five of them, however (young and old), have joined our Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance Mission, and many are most anxious to live for the Master. The hall would comprise a reading and coffee room. We are surrounded by High Church influences. The Nonconformists are showing us true sympathy, attending our week services, and uniting with us in prayer. A real work has begun in many hearts. The extreme difficulty of raising money in the country for the Lord's work, and my deep anxiety for their true welfare is my twofold excuse for asking the help of your readers.

MISSION WORK AT EPSOM RACES.

After twenty-six years' experience (for I have only missed one Derby since 1860) the deliberate conclusion forced upon me is this, that the work is much more easy now than then. "Patient continuance" on our part has worn down the opposition, so that now, if the people do not pay much heed to what we say and do, they do not offer much active opposition. And this fact must not be forgotten in estimating the value of such aggressive efforts. If we had to begin it now, I doubt how far we could obtain a footing. Therefore let the Open-Air Mission have the credit, under God, for preparing the public mind to tolerate much that it does not approve of.

The features of the work were very similar to those reported in these columns in former years. About a dozen members of the Open-Air Mission and London City Mission went to Epsom on Saturday evening, where, after prayer, a preliminary meeting was held at Burn's Corner. On Sunday morning another prayer-meeting was held, and in the afternoon a meeting was continued on the race course for nearly two hours. Unhappily, owing to inaction on the part of the authorities, one end of the course is like a fair on Sunday—swings, roundabouts, shooting galleries, sparring booths, &c, are in full operation. But a considerable number listen to the preaching opposite the winning post. The Congregational Sunday-school had a flower-service in their new and elegant hall in the town as a means of keeping the children from the course. In the evening one band of our preachers went to the course to work among the gipsies, and others, Miss Alexander and Mr. William Clarke taking the lead, while the other band preached in the Town Mission Room and at Burn's Corner.

On Monday a tea meeting for gipsies was held in the Town Mission Room, arranged for by Miss Alexander, at which Mrs. Simpson (a converted gipsy) and others spoke. But our greatest effort was put forth on Wednesday (Derby Day). The brethren were despatched two and two to all the roads and paths leading to the Downs for tract distribution and personal conversation. Eight of us went on to the course itself. I fastened a copy of my "Broad and Narrow Way" picture on a board, with a new picture, the "Up and Down Line," on the other side. This was put on a pole and tied to a rail on the lower side of the course, opposite to the grand stand. Mr. George T. Gillingham brought his concertina, and between singing, preaching, and expounding the pictures, our meeting was continued for nearly two hours prior to the races. In the evening we had an orderly preaching meeting under the clock tower in the town. And so the work continued during the four days of the races.

Lest any should think this kind of work to be labour in vain, I beg them to notice the passages relating thereto in the new report of the Open-Air Mission, which will be ready in about a fortnight.

GREAT NORTHERN TEMPERANCE FESTIVAL.—In connection with this festival, which is held as a counter attraction to the races, I should feel greatly obliged if friends of Gospel Temperance would send me Gospel tracts, leaflets, &c., for distribution at the meetings we shall hold on the Town Moor during the festival.

THE SHIPWRECKED FISHERMEN AND MARINERS' SOCIETY appeals very strongly to the hearts of the people, for so often "there is sorrow on the sea." It may be worth while to mention the incident to which the formation of the Society was due. An old sailor having read to his master an account of a terrible shipwreck, asked whether there were any fund out of which the families of the shipwrecked men could be relieved. It was found on inquiry that there was not, and master and servant having together drawn up a prospectus, the Governor of Greenwich Hospital was communicated with, and a meeting was held, at which the Society was formed, Sir George Cockburn, the then Admiral of the Fleet, being appointed President. That was in 1839, and now there are no fewer than 53,500 members contributing a small amount to the society's funds, on the self-help principle, and altogether the large number of 361,800 shipwrecked men and distressed widows and orphans have been assisted out of the funds—11,211 of these last year. And the total amount of relief thus granted has amounted to the magnificent sum of £59,461. In addition, rewards amounting to £2577 have been granted for the saving of 7422 lives under circumstances of special peril, besides thirty-two gold and silver medals. The income of the Society for 1884 was £25,139, and the expenditure £24,137. We need only add that the Society's office is at Sailors' Home Chambers, Dock-street, London Docks, E.

The Book World.

Southwood. By Catherine Sturge. 2s. 6d. T. Fisher Unwin. The truth embodied in this attractive tale sorely needs to be propagated, and we welcome the able authoress into the confraternity of temperance teachers. The literary merits of the book will win favour for it, and also, we feel sure, for the cause it advocates.

The Good Earl: A Brief Sketch of the Career of the Seventh Lord Shaftesbury. By Rev. Edward Lightwood. 1s. T. Woolmer. This is an excellent résumé of the life and labours of one of the greatest philanthropists of modern times, whose life stands out as a bright example worthy of being imitated by all classes, from prince to peasant. The portraits of his wife and mother are welcome, as are also the other illustrations.

England as It Is To Be. By William B. Philpot, M.A., Oxon. Marshall Brothers. A reprint of Sermons from The Church of England Pulpit, preached at various times and places, more political than evangelical, and redolent of the Darwinian theory of evolution, as well as other views and ideas outside the pale of assured belief. Varied additions are made in the form of poetry and prose, the whole containing some good and useful hints, but requiring discrimination and care in selecting them.

My Study, and other Essays. By Austin Phelps, D.D. 6s. T. Fisher Unwin. The well-known author of "The Still Hour" discourses in these thoughtful essays on several questions of surpassing interest and importance at the present time. The principal theme, however, is that of future retribution, which subject the writer approaches in a bold, but deeply-reverent spirit. The orthodox view is that which he advocates, but there is an originality about the method of its treatment which is exceedingly suggestive, and calculated to greatly help the mind in its reception of this solemn truth. Inspiration also comes within the range of the inquiry, and a valuable antidote is presented to the so-called "advanced criticism" of the day. Our Church of England friends will read with pleasure Dr. Phelps' large-hearted and brotherly review of the worth of an Episcopal Church.

The History of the Reformation in England. By Rev. G. G. Perry, M.A. Longmans. A scholarly and lucid account of the remarkable purification of England's National Church in the sixteenth century. Canon Perry purposely avoids all but the religious and ecclesiastical elements of the movement, and ably proves his two leading propositions—first, that the Church of England was not created 300 years ago by Act of Parliament; and, secondly, that owing to the ignorance of the laity, the corruption of the clergy, and the deadly intrigues of Spain and the Papacy, every measure of the Reformers can be justified. Two chapters, headed "The Spanish Revenge," and "The Defence of the Reformation," are specially instructive. The writer obviously prefers Jewett, Hooker, and Bramhall to more evangelical defenders of the truth. The book is, however, fair, and of use to young students and busy men.

The Psalms: their History, Teaching, and Use. By William Binnie, D.D. 10s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. This is a new and enlarged edition of a work which has for some time been out of print, and which the author has done well to reproduce, as it is eminently helpful to a closer acquaintance with that precious portion of Holy Writ of which it treats. The volume consists of three parts, the first dealing with the history and poetical structure of the Psalms; the second discusses their theological aspects, their christology, exemplification of personal and social religion, and their teaching on Holy Scripture as a revelation from God; while the third is occupied with notices regarding the use of the Psalms in the Christian Church. Both from the critical and devotional standpoint the book commends itself as the work of "a Master in Israel," one whose study of the subject cannot but be sanctified to the profit of many. There is ample room for difference of opinion on some of the author's conclusions, as for instance, when he asserts that the Psalter "earnestly inculcates the principle that the world is to be brought to God by means of the prayers and labours of a revived Church," and that in the millennial age all distinctions between Jew and Gentile will be done away. But whatever divergences of thought there may be on some points, all will find a mass of material and a degree of elucidation which they will be glad to adapt to their study of the book so dear to every renewed heart.

Letters to the Editor.

THE UNIVERSAL FATHERHOOD OF GOD.

DEAR SIR,—I find that my article on this subject, 'The Universal Fatherhood of God," has drawn orth numerous criticisms, both favourable and unfavourable. Allow me to say that one of my rincipal aims in writing was to arouse attention. Points of controversy were brought into relief, while those of agreement stood more in the background. This may, or may not, have been the best nethod of opening the subject.

On the one hand I have succeeded in my purpose of awaking attention; on the other I have been largely misunderstood, some of my critics eplying as though a denial of the Universal Fatherhood were equivalent to a denial of the Universal Love of God. They appear to have overlooked the balance of truth which I was most careful to preerve. While I stated that I believed the doctrine of the Universal Fatherhood was unscriptural and njurious, I went on to ask: "Have we not someimes so spoken of God's love to his own as to eave the impression that He had no love for the unregenerate? In exalting the Father's love to he children, we have almost overlooked the strong ompassion, the bright and glorious generosity, hat is ever flowing towards each member of our ace, even the unworthiest. For the world at arge, the Christ-rejecting, Godless world, there is he Creator-love of God, immeasurably inferior to hat of the Father, yet how great, how strong in pure pity, how much superior to the noblest human ove, none can tell." Let me add that I wrote the above thinking the while of the large and tender generosity of God's providence, of the story of the Prodigal Son, and of the words, "God so loved he world," &c. An intelligent faith in the limited Fatherhood of God only appears to narrow our onceptions of his great love to all men. In reality t makes glorious room for that truth, while t makes clear the still more wonderful love which belongs to his children in Christ Jesus. f only for its philosophical breadth, and for the ublimer view it gives us of the heights and depths f the love of God, I would choose the doctrine of he Limited, in preference to that of the Universal, Fatherhood. The universal view fills the canvas with a vast and level upland; the limited shows you that same upland with its interior upheaved nto majestic mountains, piled mass upon mass, leaving the high arch of heaven. Our language :—

> Let all men know that all men move
> Beneath a canopy of love
> As broad as the blue sky above.

nd yet the Fatherhood of the New Testament is istinct from this general love, having other foundtions. It is the central mountain mass which rises rom the high plateau.

As you, Sir, have pointed out, we must clearly disnguish between sonship in Adam, and sonship in hrist the second Adam. Let us give full place to God's glorious Fatherhood in creation, in which we ave been greatly wanting, I fear; but let us not orget the superiority of his Fatherhood in the New reation in Christ Jesus. It is delightful to think f the relationship that existed between Adam and is God. With what gladness of love did the Great Creator regard this crown of his creation, this man made in his own image! Then with what blessedess of confidence did unfallen man expatiate in he warm, bright light of his Maker's love, and ejoice to know that he was altogether in his ands!

Did sin kill this love of God? Nay. But it hanged its character, turning it into pity. The ove of complacency became the love of compassion. But more followed from the fall. Sin changed he relationship between God and man. The judiial relationship hitherto latent, because sin was ot, now became the dominant one. It was not nerely that man had lost the child-nature: he had orfeited for ever, not the love of God, but all the reedom and privilege of sonship which Adam had njoyed as a son of God. He is now "under w," and not "under grace." He is in the law ourt; and before he can reach the peace and berty of the family circle, he must somehow obtain just and legal discharge from all the claims of a oly law. Love and law co-exist; and, but for the ubstitutionary work of Jesus Christ, God's unpeakable gift, which is at once the grandest iumph, both of love and of law, they would have o-existed in opposition the one to the other. Now, owever, they unite in offering to every man, as a ee gift, a sonship with God, which shall imeasurably transcend that which Adam once njoyed.

As far as I can discover, this everlasting sonship in the Second Adam is the only sonship with God recognised by the New Testament. It declares God's love to every man, and that principally in the life of Christ, who loved everyone as He loved Himself, and who in all this was Emmanuel, God with us. Still, it is most careful not to say that the relationship between man and God is that of a son to a father.

In saying this I do not forget the Pearl of Parables. Every Bible student knows that parables must be interpreted according to their main intention, and also in harmony with the general teaching of Scripture. Suppose we press this parable in every part, and say that it teaches more than the fact of God's yearning love, and his generous and mighty joy in forgiveness. Say, if you will, that Christ here proclaims God's fatherhood to every man. What then? You cannot stop. You are logically bound to go on and say, as hundreds of preachers, alas! are now saying, that Atonement, by which I mean the death of Christ as our substitute, is an idea contrary to the teaching of Jesus. If you insist on taking the story of the Prodigal as a complete statement of the way of salvation, you have no escape; for did not the Prodigal return without sacrifice, without mediation? Indeed, if God's relationship to fallen men be only that of a Father, there is no room for atonement. Atonement belongs to the sphere of law: never to that of Fatherhood. The necessity to punish exists in the law-courts only: it is not known in the family circle, where punishment is always corrective, never penal.

This interpretation is in opposition to our Saviour's declaration that He came "to give his life a ransom for many," to say nothing of a multitude of other Scriptures—e.g., Isaiah liii., or Ephesians i. 5—8: "Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to Himself . . . to the praise of the glory of his grace, wherein He hath made us accepted in the Beloved: in whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins," &c. If there be no Judge to be propitiated, but only a Father, it is vain to talk of "redemption through his blood," &c. If all men are sons already, why should Paul speak of the "adoption of children by Jesus Christ to Himself?"

One of the foundation thoughts in Paul's theology was the distinction between law and grace. He spoke of every unbeliever as "under law," and "under the curse of the law." Never once does he use the term children in reference to men out of Christ; but speaking to fellow-believers he says: "We are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." According to him, and to the New Testament generally, man is found under condemnation in the law-court of Divine justice. By union to Christ he passes through death (the death of Christ for him), out of the law-court into the eternal family. Henceforth he is no more "under the law, but under grace."

But, further, this new relationship brings new love. Paul laid bare a mighty foundation for the special love of God to the believer when he told the Ephesians (i. 6) that they were "accepted in the Beloved." Did not our Lord allude to a similar truth when He said to his disciples (John xvi. 27): "For the Father Himself loveth you because ye have loved Me, and have believed that I came out from God"? See also John xiv. 21, where the love of the Father is promised as the special reward of the thoroughly obedient and Christ-loving disciple. Such love is entirely different both in character and foundation from the love that follows all men, seeking every man's good.

We want a thoroughly broad theology—broad enough to include the grand truth of God's generosity and compassion for all; broad enough, too, to allow place for the Scriptural distinction between this general love, and his special love of near relationship, and complacency for the members of the Body of Christ. Our theology must also be broad enough to find room for the Cross of Christ, and for all the stern facts of sin and righteousness and judgment of which it speaks. For myself I find that the Pauline doctrine of sonship in Christ alone satisfies these conditions. All else is narrow and inadequate.

I would remark, in closing, on the practical effect of this doctrine on the preaching of the Gospel. Just as some ill-taught evangelists teach that men must believe that God has forgiven them, and they will be saved, so the consistent believer in the Universal Fatherhood will teach that God is now their Father, and they must return to Him as such. And just as, in the one case, we reply: No, you are called to believe that God is "ready to forgive," and to approach Him accordingly; so, in the other, we reply: No, God is revealed to us, not as the Father, but as wishing to be the Father, of all, inviting all to sonship through Jesus Christ his Son.—Yours truly,

J. P. C.

LEPERS IN INDIA.

DEAR SIR,—In your notes on the Missionary Conference at Mile-end in your last issue, I am reported as having said that I found the disease of leprosy so terrible that I could not persuade myself to go near, nor cross the thresholds of the lepers' homes. This is quite a mistake, as I have been over and over again in the homes of the lepers, and have knelt at their dying beds. What I meant to convey was that on one occasion I met with a case so terrible that I could not persuade myself to cross the threshold of the room where the man was. It is also a mistake to say that my work lay chiefly in the Madras Presidency, as it has, on the contrary, been altogether in the Punjab.

May I take this opportunity of informing your readers that a very gracious work is going on amongst these poor lepers, many of whom are being brought to the Lord.—Yours faithfully,

WELLESLEY C. BAILEY,
Secretary, Mission to Lepers in India.

EAST LONDON TRAINING INSTITUTE.

DEAR SIR,—Many of our students would be glad, on the termination of the present session of the College at the end of June, to undertake active evangelistic work for a month or two during the vacation. The London men would, of course, for health's sake prefer work in the country, or at sea, or abroad; but the forty or fifty men from Derbyshire are able and willing to undertake town or city enterprises. Some would be suitable to act as supplies for absent pastors. All are in earnest, and anxious to make the most of their holiday for the Master's service.

Our annual meeting and farewell to outgoing missionaries is fixed for June 29, the Tuesday after the Mildmay Conference. Friends from the country are cordially invited to the afternoon or evening meeting, at Harley House, and can receive tickets on application.

Perhaps I may also mention that Cliff House, Curbar, Derbyshire, will be open again during the vacation as a summer resort for Christian friends. To spend a few weeks there is an easy and pleasant way of helping the Institute, which, I am sorry to say, just now greatly needs help. Cliff is one of the sweetest and healthiest spots in England; all who know it are in love with it, and few things are more refreshing than a sojourn among the moors and dales of Derbyshire. The trustees place the house at the service of the friends and supporters of the Institute during the vacation. Applications for accommodation at Cliff, or for the help of the students, should be addressed to Harley House, Bow, E.—Faithfully yours,

H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

DOES ART NEED WOMAN'S SHAMELESSNESS?

SIR,—I have little expectation that the following remarks will be admitted into your paper, but nevertheless I forward them to you, as they deal with a subject of much importance in these days when many seem to hold that art is one of the most important influences for regenerating man!

Sir F. Leighton, in The Pall Mall Gazette of May 24, is said "to repudiate the theory that the study and painting of the nude from the nude is unnecessary in art," and to have stated, "It is the only way of painting the figure with absolute artistic accuracy."

Now, Sir, what is this but the assertion that in order to attain an approach to perfection in that art which gratifies the eye, and is supposed to refine and educate the taste, it is absolutely necessary to ignore the moral law of decency and modesty, the handmaids to purity, which sprang to light in the heart of Adam and his helpmeet, when by their own acts they were about to enter upon a world of abounding sin and temptation; which innate sense of fitness was to be to them and their descendants a help and a safeguard?

I ask whether this view of the President of the Royal Academy does not set the seal of Satan instead of that of righteousness upon all representations of human beings, if they are to be considered true to nature.

There are other points connected with this subject which ought to be dealt with openly and plainly by those who can bring to the discussion Christian principle, common sense, and reason, combined with a due admiration for legitimate art and what is beautiful. I earnestly wish the matter would be so treated now, when the display of nakedness is held to be justifiable, if only it is treated with high artistic skill.—Yours obediently,

A BRITISH MATRON.

THE FOLKESTONE EXHIBITION.

Sir,—For the first time in the history of such exhibitions, that at Folkestone is to remain open on Sundays. Hitherto it has been the honourable distinction of England to respect the day of rest. Even in the Continental Expositions the British department has been shut, and the attendants released from work on that day. I have often heard foreigners express not merely surprise but approval of our usage in this matter, and the silent testimony has had good influence. The ill-advised innovation at Folkestone will change this feeling. The town will be invaded by excursionists from Boulogne, as well as by crowds brought by special trains, and Folkestone will lose its advantage for residents and visitors who enjoy a quiet Sabbath, besides compelling the work of multitudes on the day of rest.

Some of the patrons of the Exhibition are known to be opposed to Sabbath observance, and others are Roman Catholics, who regard Sunday only as a holiday, but this attack on public sentiment and national usage ought not to pass without protest. Till now there has been some respect paid to the Lord's day by the directors of such exhibitions in this country. James Macaulay, M.D.,
Editor of The Sunday at Home.

ANOTHER MISSION SHIP.

On Saturday a sixth mission vessel in connection with the Mission to Deep-sea Fishermen was formally dedicated at Yarmouth. This vessel is the gift, as already announced, of the Duchess of Grafton, in memory of the late Duke of Grafton, and by her express desire has been named The Euston. The new smack is a fine vessel of eighty tons, and is fitted up expressly for mission work, with accommodation in the aft cabin for clergymen, ministers, and other gentlemen who may give some period of their vacation to mission service amongst the trawlers.

After the dedication service a meeting was held, presided over by the Mayor of Great Yarmouth. Mr. E. J. Mather, Director of the Mission, having made a statement as to the work, the Duke of Grafton, on behalf of the Duchess, presented the vessel to the Mission. His grace very warmly expressed his hearty sympathy with the work, and read a very graceful letter from his sister-in-law the Duchess. Addresses followed by Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P., Sir Saville Crossley, M P., Mr. Harvey George, and four of the Mission skippers. At the close of the proceedings many of the friends inspected the vessels, expressing themselves as greatly pleased and delighted with all they saw.

CONFERENCE ON THE SPIRITUAL LIFE.

A three days' Convention for the Deepening of Spiritual Life was held at Blackheath, from May 25 to 27, under the presidence of Mr. H. F. Bowker. The attendance was large, especially at the evening meetings, when the Rink Hall was nearly full. The following gentlemen took part in the meetings: Revs. Dr. Elder Cumming, C. A. Fox, E. W. Moore, J. B. Figgis, W. Webb-Peploe, and Evan H. Hopkins. In the afternoons Bible readings were given on the Second Coming of our Lord, as "The Hope of the Church."

The meetings throughout were characterised by a quiet earnestness which was a very marked feature, many of the audience following the speakers, Bible in hand, verifying the quotations from Scripture by which the various arguments were enforced. The addresses were of a deeply spiritual character, urging that the majority of Christians were living far below their privileges, and calling for a definite surrender of the will and affections, and a whole-hearted consecration of spirit, soul and body to Christ. The possibilities of faith were strongly insisted on, and deliverance from the power of sin by constant trust in a living Saviour, and through the grace of the Holy Spirit, was maintained. It is believed that great blessing has been received by many who attended these gatherings.

Maryland, U.S., has adopted a Bill for Scientific Temperance Teaching, but without a compulsory clause.

In Toronto, the sale of liquor is now prohibited between 11 p.m. and 6 a.m. On Saturdays, public-houses must close at 7 p.m.

The Scottish Temperance League has issued a circular urging affiliated societies to support, by petitions, &c., Mr. McLagan's Local Option Bill, due for second reading on June 16.

SALVATION ARMY CONGRESS.

The International Congress summoned by the Salvation Army was begun on Friday evening by a grand "reception" of foreign delegates in Exeter Hall, which was crammed to repletion. As these delegates, coming from the four quarters of the globe, filed along the front of the platform, the scene was a singularly picturesque one and probably unique in the history of Exeter Hall assemblies. Beginning nearest home, there came Miss Booth, of Paris, with her French and Swiss comrades. Sweden sent its delegation. A little group of Italians resident in London, representing the organ-grinders and the ice-cream men of the metropolis, excited much interest. Commissioner Coombs, from Canada, with a small contingent of Red Indians, clad, not exactly in war paint, but decorated with feathers, was followed by the United States brigade, under Commissioner Smith, including several handsome negresses. Then there was Colonel Tucker in his fakir's dress, accompanied by a band of dusky natives from India and Ceylon. Last of all, from far off Australia came Mr. Ballington Booth, whose party embraced several Chinese; only on the score of expense he forbore from bringing samples of converted aborigines and Maoris from New Zealand. As these groups appeared in turn, and passed to their respective seats, the enthusiasm of the crowded audience rose to a white heat. A large Scotch party under Colonel Edmond were seated in the gallery at the rear of the hall.

Every member of the Booth family was on the platform. The General presided with all the skill that comes from long and varied experience. In giving some statistics of progress since the last Congress, four years ago, he said that then they had 320 corps; now they had 1552. At that time they had 766 paid officers; now there are 3602. Then they held 6220 services per week; now the weekly total is 28,200, equal to a million and a half per year. The movement extends to nineteen countries or colonies, and there are as many War Crys published. Nineteen rescue homes have been opened in different parts of the world; through these nearly 1880 girls have passed, and it is believed that 65 per cent. of these have been savingly converted. A good part of the evening was taken up with songs and testimonies from selected delegates. Some of these were very striking, and all illustrated the remark of Miss Booth, that there is no power in the world like the love of Christ, which, on the Continent (she might have added, all round the globe), has turned those who were very devils in wickedness into angels. The General said he had resolved that on this occasion at least they should throw aside all formality and dignity, and thoroughly enjoy themselves. The meeting certainly took his advice.

The Congress proceedings continue throughout the present week, the chief centres of gathering being Exeter Hall, Clapton Congress Hall, and the Great Western Hall, Paddington.

"LOOK AT ME."—A true and striking story, under this heading, by "Pearl Fisher" which illustrates forcibly the prison gate work of the St. Giles' Christian Mission, has been issued. We would advise all who desire to know something of the wonderful things God is doing through this agency to send for a copy which will be freely supplied by Mr. Hatton, 4, Ampton-street, Regent-square, W.C. The work carried on by this branch of the Mission is one of the most remarkable of our time, and well deserves the liberal help of all Christians. We learn that just now it is in special need of help. In an early issue we hope to give a portrait of Mr. Wheatley, who is the chief worker, and a sketch of its operations.

"A FRIEND OF THE OPPRESSED."—Dear Sir,—Permit me, through your columns, gratefully to acknowledge receipt of £1 on behalf of the poor factory girl in Dundee (Ann Munro), who was dismissed from her employment and driven to frenzy by the man who was over her as foreman, because she virtuously repelled all his base attempts to pollute her. I hear to-day that the scoundrel who dismissed her, and who was himself dismissed when the case became public, has already got employment in a neighbouring factory; but the poor girl is still seeking for work in vain. The kind lady who, under the name of "A Friend of the Oppressed," has sent this pound will be glad to know how helpful it will be.—I am, &c., (Rev.) David Macrae.

THE NAME OF JESUS.

Glorious name of Jesus,
Sing it loud and long,
For it cheers the weary,
Makes the weakest strong.

Tender name of Jesus,
Soothing all our woes,
Whisp'ring sweetest love-tones,
Conq'ring all our foes.

Peaceful name of Jesus,
Quelling all our fears,
Banishing our sorrows,
Drying up our tears.

Healing name of Jesus,
Cleansing all our guilt,
Through the precious life-blood
Long ago He spilt.

Precious name of Jesus,
Charm of heaven above!
Scattering its sunbeams
Full of life and love.

Name for mortal sinners
Of the deepest dye,
Pointing them from earth-life
To the home on high.

Jesus! Jesus! Jesus!
Peal it far and wide,
O'er the rugged mountains,
And the rolling tide.

Guiding name of Jesus,
Lead us on our way,
From this night-bound region
To the light of day.

In that land of glory
Far beyond the sea,
Jesus! is their watchword.
Jesu Domine. Amen.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For very special blessing during the mission by Mr. Thorne at Margate.——For encouragements received in connection with mission work at Horseley-heath, Tipton, Staffs.

PRAYER.—For great blessing on a tent mission now being conducted at Cerne Abbas, Dorset, by Mr. John Elliott.——For Gospel services being held to June 13 at Baptist Chapel, Birchington.——For blessing on Gospel services in a barn at Poole, Kaynes, Gloucestershire, by Mr. Opie Rodway, June 3—7.

MR. DENHAM SMITH has had another month of sowing and reaping at Clapton Hall. Both halls filled to overflowing; aisles, platform, and every available place occupied. He now preaches in St. George's Hall through June, and in Dublin in July and August.

HINDU WIDOWS.—The story of the sufferings of these sisters, as told by one of themselves, in a little book published by the Zenana Bible and Medical Mission, is deeply pathetic. As is well known, thousands of children are married before they know the meaning of the word, and should the husband die, a life of untold misery is before her. The child-wife is thenceforth treated with the utmost indignity and cruelty by all her friends. According to the last census, the number of these unhappy women reached the awful total of 20,938,626. The British Government has done well in abolishing suttee, but have not ventured to touch this larger and more grievous question. Well is it that the Christian Church should move in the matter, and they should receive the warm support of Christian widows, who in their bereavement have received the tenderest sympathy from their friends. All communications should be addressed to the Society's Office, 2, Adelphi-terrace, W.C.

In Glasgow, on one Saturday in May, 2913 persons entered one public-house in the course of three hours.

The Liverpool magistrates very properly refused an application from the publicans for extension of the hours of sale during the Queen's visit.

The Sale of Intoxicating Liquors on Sunday (Durham) Bill, was thrown out of the House of Lords, May 25, on the third reading, by 97 votes to 70.

Lord Salisbury's recent description of the total abstinence movement as "a passing craze," has naturally given great offence in the temperance world.

SOUTHSEA CONFERENCE.

Rev. F. Baldey, vicar of St. Simon's, Southsea, onvened his fifth annual Conference on Tuesday, ednesday, and Thursday (May 18—20). There as a preliminary prayer-meeting on Monday vening, and every morning during the Conference the friends met for prayer and praise. esides the daily meetings of the Conference at 1 a.m., 3 and 7.30 p.m., there were testimonies to the Lord's work after dinner in the oom adjoining the Conference Hall. Those rom a distance were hospitably entertained in he houses of various brethren, and by the kind nvitation of Mr. and Mrs. Baldey, about 100 at down daily to a substantial tea, after which ome portion of the Word of God was opened. n Friday an address was given to about 800 hildren on the Conference subject, and an evanelistic meeting was held in the evening.

The praise and testimony meeting on Friday orning was the best of all. The testimonies ere given might be summed up in the words, Jesus Himself." An opportunity was afforded any present to signify their willingness to ive themselves to Foreign Mission work, and to "anywhere with Jesus." Some twenty-five ethren and sisters stood up. The sight melted l hearts. Mr. Baldey saw amongst those who od up his own daughter, who is his right and in every good work, and he prayed that arents might be ready to part with their nearest d dearest for Christ, adding, "God loveth a eerful giver."

The Conference subjects were: "The Life of aith," "The Walk of Faith," and "The ictory of Faith." The following is a brief tline of one of the most valuable of the ldresses:—

We should steer between the Scylla and Charbdis of "I have no sin," and "I must sin." mans vi. 22 shows not only the provision of d for our pardon, but for preservation. The swer to the question, "Shall we continue in n?" is, No. The moral character of the new e received by us in union with a crucified and sen Christ, not only secures for us a fitness for aven, but deliverance from the dominion of sin a master all the way thither. Failure should abnormal. There is remedy for failure, but ere is power to prevent failure. Whilst the ful nature remains, it may be kept in abeyance, d need not spring into act, through the power the indwelling Spirit. Some talk about their s like an invalid lady about her ailments, and nsider that their ebullitions of temper, their elings of pride, and fear of man are infirmities be pitied, rather than sins to be renounced. hers sing about their sins in cheery tones, Where is the blessedness I knew, when first I w the Lord?" Have you lost it? Don't sing out it. Is your path not like "the path the just which shineth more and more," &c., t less and less, or more and less? Are u dissatisfied with Jesus Christ? Shame on u. Go down in the dust at his feet and knowledge your sins. "He is able to keep u from stumbling." Do not say sin is necesry to keep us humble, or you make sin an inument of good. Can that work good, which s heaven with dismay and hell with glee? The swer to the question, "Shall we continue in , &c.?" is, "Cease to do evil," by union with rist in his death and in his resurrection.

Christ expects us to carry out the precepts of e sermon on the Mount and to live his life, by ting Him live in and through us. How are to live Christ? We must be "in grace" fore we can "grow." We do not grow into ace, but "grow in grace." Let the soul be htly centered in Christ as to headship, and as to lowship. This centering of the soul is somees by the sudden surrender of the will, and renunciation of all known sins. Give all. ke all. We must be "delivered out of the nds of our enemies." Then we can serve God thout fear, in holiness and righteousness be- e Him, all the days of our life" (Luke i. 74)

RESCUE WORK IN MANCHESTER.

The closing rescue meeting for the winter was held in the Wesleyan Methodist school-room, Lever-street, on Thursday, May 20. Previous to the meeting a Conference of workers and those interested in this class of operation took place. Mr. Wakefield Macgill (Chairman) stated that during the winter a midnight meeting had been held every alternate week, and an afternoon Gospel meeting every week. Large numbers of girls had been reached, both at the religious services, and in personal conversation, the result being that many had forsaken their evil ways, and either through the Homes, or through the efforts of the City Mission, had been restored to virtuous ways. Some, at least, to be a blessing where formerly they were only a curse. The result of the last Conference was that the Board of the City Mission had accepted the responsibility of providing Probationary Homes, one for those who had fallen, and one for those who were on the brink of falling. Thanks to Mr. F. W. Crossley, who furnishes it, and to Mr. W. Houldsworth, who has given the Mission his former residence at Cheetham for a nominal rent, it is hoped to open in another month a shelter for the friendless fallen; this will certainly be an inestimable boon to the city.

Mr. Langley reported that during the year about 160 girls had been restored to their parents, or placed in Homes. The streets are now in a very different state to what they were when the Mission commenced. The change for the better is marvellous both as regards sinful women and wrecked men; he did not think it was an over-sanguine view to believe that these meetings, and the personal appeals on our streets addressed to the fallen of both sexes, have had a fair share in bringing about this blessed result. Mr. Eadson said he believed there was not one half the number of girls now living by sin that there were a couple of years ago. Rev. Geo. Wainwright said he was deeply grieved to hear of want of sympathy shown by the Christian public of Manchester to the rescue work. He considered that such apathy must arise from the practical side of the question not being brought sufficiently before them.

Mrs. Grimké, in a most interesting address, referred to the difficulties connected with rescue work, because of the terrible demoralisation of young women by a life of sin. At the same time her remarks were hopeful. Many of the girls who had left her Home she could trust with implicit confidence, even in the midst of severe temptations.

The Conference began and closed with earnest prayer, and the workers determined to go forward with renewed vigour upon their arduous service. A midnight meeting was held, at which fifty girls were present, and six were taken, at the close, to the City Mission Dormitory, 102, Bloomsbury.

At a recent conference of delegates of the Sheffield trades, complaint was made of the injury done to the working classes by the planting of public-houses in their midst against their will.

BRETON EVANGELICAL MISSION.—Pasteur and Madame Lecoat have been in England endeavouring to bring the Gospel and give the Scriptures to their fellow-countrymen and women in Brittany. A number of drawing-room meetings were held in London, Brighton, and the Eastern Counties, and both these worthy missionaries had interviews with the executive of the Tract Society, Sunday School Union, and Trinitarian Bible Society, and much helpful communion with many Christian friends. They returned to Tremel much encouraged and refreshed, and intend to hold further meetings in the Channel Islands en route. The work is very prosperous, five new members were admitted to the Tremel Church just before the pastor left, and one is now studying at Harley House for mission work. Mr. Joseph Wates, 4, Princes-road, Lewisham-hill, S.E., is the secretary.

OTTOMAN RULE IN PALESTINE.—In the first sermon to his congregation after returning from the Holy Land, Dr. Thain Davidson said: "The character and condition of the population are degraded beyond all that I had anticipated. On every side you see the curse and blight which appear to accompany Turkish rule and Mohometan superstition. The Ottoman power is rottenness and imbecility. How could it be otherwise? Whilst the children of the Cross, by their industry and intelligence, have been adding knowledge to knowledge, discovery to discovery, improvement to improvement, the followers of the Crescent remain stationary; and stationary they will remain so long as they adhere to a creed which, in addition to the mass of absurdities it inculcates, tends more than any other to debase man as an intellectual being—the doctrine of fatalism alone being sufficient to paralyse all mental energy, and produce moral and social stagnation."

GOSPEL HALLS for LONDON POOR.

Dear Sir,—Many of your readers are deeply interested in the work of the Ragged Church and Chapel Union, at once a legacy and memorial of the philanthropic Earl Shaftesbury. The labourers are unpaid, and, with the exception of a small salary to the Secretary, all the money subscribed is devoted to the maintenance of mission halls and mission services for the destitute poor of the Metropolis. There are 100 stations under the supervision of the committee, and denominationalism is subordinated to the higher aim of preaching Christ as the succour of the perishing and the Saviour of the lost. Hitherto the income of the Society has fallen short of the demands upon its resources. And no wonder; for what is £500 per annum when the spiritual necessities of the London poor are to be met?

Last year upwards of 10,000 persons attended the humble ministrations conducted on Lord's-day evenings in the by-ways and back slums of this imperial city. Many of these were so ill-clad and unkempt as to be unfitted for ordinary places of worship, and most of them have lived in the habitual neglect of Divine ordinances. Drink, dissipation, and debauchery have reduced hundreds of educated men and women to the lowest level in the social scale. Yet even these and such as these have been reached, and, by God's grace, rescued. I am sure that an organised movement of this order is in harmony with the mind of Him who ordained that his Gospel should be preached unto the poor. Would that professing Christians were more in sympathy with their Lord's purpose, for then help would be forthcoming, and the cause of God in this great city would be promoted.—Yours respectfully,

Laicus.

ON THE FRENCH COAST.

Writing on board Mr. Henry Cook's mission ship Mystery, at Audierne, Finistèrre, France, Mr. W. Jenkyn Jones, of Quimper, sends to us an account of evangelistic work on the coasts of South Brittany, from which we extract as follows:—

The Mystery left Havre on Easter Monday, and reached the port of Douarnenez, on the south-east shore of the beautiful bay of the same name, on the last of the month. On May 1 we left Quimper, and joined the vessel. On Sunday, May 2, we held on board our first meeting, and had a congregation of about seventy or eighty. In the evening the room was filled by an attentive and sympathetic audience of about 160, made up of workmen and fishermen, the Protestants only numbering about a dozen. It was rejoicing to see the weather-beaten faces of these people softened by the preaching of the good news. This place has always been looked upon as one of the most priest-ridden even in Brittany. We remained at Douarnenez for ten days, holding meetings every night, and having good congregations the whole time. Many came night after night, after being out at sea the whole day, and having to leave the following morning at three or four o'clock. We cannot believe that such zeal arose from simple curiosity; we feel confident that it was from a desire to hear God's word.

From Douarnenez we came to Audierne. The novelty connected with our work was still greater in this place than in the previous port, for no Protestant services of any kind are known to have been held in these parts since the Great Reformation. Our meetings here have been well frequented; sometimes many were forced to turn away for want of room, and generally we have had the most earnest and continued attention from our hearers. On Sunday there was a religious assembly in the place; we had a meeting in the afternoon, at which the great majority were peasants from the country around. In the evening we had another meeting on board, but, unfortunately, had a number of persons more or less under the influence of drink, and it was by dint of patience that we were enabled to carry on the meeting. The drink seems to be the plague of this country. We intend leaving, if weather permits, this day (May 19), and steer towards Quimper. We feel thankful that God put it into the heart of Mr. Cook to let us have the use of the Mystery for a few weeks.

"Beer, Wines, &c.," is the title of a valuable lecture by Dr. Edge, being No. 6 of the ninth series of "Manchester Health Lectures for the People," price one penny.

SUNDAY, JUNE 6.—RUTH II.

1.—A mighty man of wealth . . . and his name was Boaz.—One of the most interesting features of the Book of Ruth is its mystical or typical character. The reception of Ruth, a stranger and an alien, into the commonwealth of Israel, plainly foreshadows the reception of the Gentiles into the Church of God. Boaz is a type of Christ. His name, the same as that of one of the pillars in Solomon's Temple, means "in Him is strength." As "a mighty man of wealth," he typifies Him whose riches are unsearchable; and as in the discharge of the office of kinsman (goel) he takes the Gentile stranger to be his wife, he represents Him who "loved the Church, and gave Himself for it."

10.—Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldest take knowledge of me, seeing I am a stranger?—The deep humility of Ruth expressed in these words well depicts the state of soul of one taught to know one's alienation by nature from God, and to value "grace" as the alone ground of our acceptance with Him.

16.—Let fall also some of the handfuls of purpose for her.—We should now say "on purpose." R.V. translates, "Pull out some for her from the bundles." Boaz does not sell her corn, but, acting on the principle of grace, gives freely.

20.—One of our next kinsmen.—"The word here is goel, the redeemer, who had the right (1) of redeeming the inheritance of the person; (2) of marrying the widow; (3) of avenging the death (see Lev. xxv. 25—31, 47—55; Deut. xxv. 5—10, xix. 1—13). As these rights belonged to the next of kin, goel came to mean the nearest kinsman."—Sp. Com.

MONDAY, JUNE 7.—RUTH III.

1.—Shall I not seek rest for thee, that it may be well with thee?—Though Ruth has hitherto found grace in the eyes of Boaz, and received gracious treatment at his hand, still further blessing awaits her. Nothing less than union with him, with all the honour which such a union involves, is the privilege to which she is called, and this Naomi now unfolds to her as something which she is to go in and claim, according to the usages of Jewish family life.

7.—His heart was merry.—"A frequent expression in connection with eating and drinking, but not necessarily implying any excess. See Judges xix. 6, 9; 1 Kings xxi. 7; 2 Chron. vii. 10. In Judges xviii. 20 it denotes gladness without any reference to eating and drinking."—Sp. Com.

9.—Spread therefore thy skirt over thine handmaid; for thou art a near kinsman.—Compare Ezek. xvi. 8, where the Lord describes his taking Israel into union with Himself: "I spread my skirt over thee, . . . and thou becamest mine."

18.—The man will not be in rest, until he have finished the thing this day.—R.V. renders it, "The man will not rest until," &c. Compare this with the first verse of the chapter, "Shall I not seek rest for thee?" That Ruth should obtain this rest Boaz must work, and "not be in rest" until the matter is finished. So a greater than Boaz invites the labouring and heavy laden to come unto Him, and He will give them rest; but to obtain this rest for them He must work, and "not be in rest" until the cry, "It is finished," proclaims the work done. Compare Luke xii. 50: "I have a baptism to be baptized with; and how am I straitened till it be accomplished!" Also Luke ix. 51: "He stedfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem;" and Isaiah l. 7: "Therefore have I set my face like a flint."

TUESDAY, JUNE 8.—RUTH IV.

1.—Then went Boaz up to the gate.—The work which Boaz took in hand was twofold. First of all he must find out whether the nearer kinsman would undertake his part, and if not, then he must formally purchase to himself the inheritance, and betroth Ruth according to the usages of Israel. So before the Son of God undertook the work of Redeemer, He tested the ability to redeem of the nearer kinsman, that is, of man himself, by the dispensation of the law, and found that "what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh," that He must undertake. When it was shown that "none of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him" (Ps. xlix. 7), then He undertook that work which enables Him to say: "Deliver him from going down to the pit: I have found a ransom" (Job xxxiii. 24)

6.—Lest I mar mine own inheritance.—"Josephus and the Chaldee Paraphrase explain these words by saying that the goel had a wife and children already, and would not introduce strife into his family. Others think that as the son who might be born of the marriage was 'to raise up the name of the dead upon his inheritance' (ver. 10), there was thus a risk, which he would not incur, of the goel's own name being blotted out from his inheritance. Perhaps a better explanation is to take the word 'mar' in a sense which it has sometimes, that of wasting or spending. If he had to find the purchase-money and support Naomi and Ruth, his own fortune would be broken down, if, as is likely, he was a man of slender means. Boaz, being 'a mighty man of wealth,' could afford this."—Sp. Com.

9.—Ye are witnesses this day that I have bought.—There is mention made in this verse, both of an inheritance bought, and a wife purchased. So in the antitype, there is a purchased people, and a purchased inheritance. See Rev. v. 9, 10.

17.—They called his name Obed.—Obed means "serving." So is service the fruit of the soul's union with Christ. See Rom. vii 4—6.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 9.—I SAMUEL I.

"The call of Samuel to be the prophet and judge of Israel forms a turning-point in the history of the Old Testament kingdom of God. As the prophet of Jehovah, Samuel was to lead the people of Israel out of the times of the Judges into those of the Kings, and lay the foundation for a prosperous development of monarchy. Consecrated, like Samson, as a Nazarite from his mother's womb, Samuel accomplished the deliverance of Israel out of the power of the Philistines, which had been only commenced by Samson (see Judges xiii. 8, 'he shall begin to deliver Israel out of the hand of the Philistines'); and that not by the physical might of his arm, but by the spiritual power of his word and prayer, with which he led Israel back from the worship of dead idols to the Lord its God. And whilst as one of the judges, among whom he classes himself (1 Sam. xii. 11), he brought the office of judge to a close, and introduced the monarchy: as a prophet he laid the foundation of the prophetic office, inasmuch as he was the first to naturalise it, so to speak, in Israel, and develop it into a power that continued henceforth to exert the strongest influence side by side with the priesthood and monarchy."—Keil.

2.—And he had two wives; the name of the one was Hannah.—This is somewhat of a reproduction of the allegory of the two wives Gen. xvi., as explained Gal. iv. 24. Hannah means "grace" or "favour," and she fitly represents the spiritual Church, whilst Peninnah represents "Israel after the flesh." Her persecution of Hannah corresponding to Ishmael mocking Isaac. Barren at first, as was Sarah, Hannah afterwards is made the mother of one who both from his Nazarite consecration, his office as prophet, and his acts as deliverer, strikingly foreshadowed Christ.

7.—And as he did so year by year, &c—This refers back to the early part of ver. 5, "Unto Hannah he gave a worthy portion; for he loved Hannah." From this to the end of ver. 6 is a parenthesis.

18.—Her countenance was no more sad.—"A beautiful instance of the composing influence of prayer. Hannah had cast her burden upon the Lord, and so her own spirit was relieved of its load."—Sp. Com.

THURSDAY, JUNE 10.—I SAMUEL II.

"The song of Hannah is a prophetic Psalm. It takes its place by the side of the songs of Miriam, Deborah, and the Virgin Mary, as well as those of Moses, David, Hezekiah, and other Psalmists and Prophets, whose inspired odes have been preserved in the Bible. The peculiar features which the songs have in common is, that springing from, and in their first conception relating to, incidents in the lives of the individuals who composed them, they branch out into magnificent descriptions of the kingdom and glory of Christ, and the triumphs of the Church, of which those incidents were providentially designed to be the types. The perception of this is essential to the understanding of Hannah's song."—Sp. Com. The similarity to Mary's song of praise (the Magnificat) shows that the same subject is common to both. Samuel, born to teach, save, and rule Israel, gave occasion by his birth to a song of praise, which went far beyond the occasion and embraced the great events of which those of his life were but typical.

6.—The Lord killeth, and maketh alive, &c.—D this and the corresponding expressions which follow mean that the Lord kills some and makes aliv others, or that those whom He exalts He first bring low? Without denying the first, the second woul seem more appropriate as describing God's dealing with his people. In conviction of sin the Spiri "killeth" ("Sin revived and I died," Rom. vii. 9 but in order to quicken with the new life tha is in Christ. He "bringeth down to the grave" (as Baptism represents, Rom. vi. 4) to bring up, i the resurrection of Him that was raised from th dead. He "maketh poor" (Rev. iii. 17, 18) t enrich with his own unsearchable riches.

35.—And I will raise Me up a faithful priest.— The preliminary fulfilment was in Zadok (1 Kings i 35); but the "substitution of the priesthood afte the order of Melchisedek (i.e., Christ Himself) fo the Levitical may be foreshadowed."—Sp. Com.

FRIDAY, JUNE 11.—I SAMUEL III.

1.—The word of the Lord was precious (or rare R.V.) in those days.—"The song of Hannah an the prophecy of the man of God (ii. 27) are th only instances of prophecy since Deborah. Samue is mentioned as the first of the series of prophet (Acts iii. 24).—Sp. Com.

11.—Both the ears of every one that heareth i shall tingle.—"This expressive phrase occurs agai twice (2 Kings xxi. 12; Jer. xix. 3), of the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. It i remarkable that Jeremiah repeatedly compares th destruction of Jerusalem with the destruction o Shiloh (vii. 12—14, xxvi. 6—9). The catastroph that fell upon the house of Eli and Shiloh is allude to in Ps. lxxviii. 60—64."—Sp. Com.

13.—For the iniquity which he knoweth; becaus his sons made themselves vile, &c—Keil punctuate differently, and makes the sense more pointed; he reads it: "Because of the iniquity that he knew his sons were preparing a curse for themselves, and did not prevent them." R.V. also translates "His sons did bring a curse upon themselves."

18.—It is the Lord: let Him do what seemet Him good.—"Samuel's communication simply confirmed to the aged Eli what God had already made known to him through a prophet. But his reply proves, that with all his weakness and crimina indulgence towards his wicked sons, Eli wa thoroughly devoted to the Lord in his heart."—Keil. See a similar instance of criminal parenta indulgence in David noted in connection wit Adonijah's rebellion (1 Kings i. 6): "His fathe had not displeased him at any time in saying, Why hast thou done so?"

19.—And Samuel grew.—"This shows tha Samuel's call to the prophetic office was before h was grown up. Josephus says that this call happened when he had just completed his twelfth year."—Sp. Com.

SATURDAY, JUNE 12.—I SAMUEL IV.

Keil thus sums up the contents of this chapter "At Samuel's word the Israelites attacked th Philistines and were beaten (1—2). They the fetched the ark of the covenant into the camp according to the advice of the elders, that the might thereby make sure of the help of th Almighty covenant of God; but in the engagemen which followed they suffered a still greater defeat in which Eli's sons fell, and the ark was taken b the Philistines (3—11). The aged Eli, terrified a such a loss, fell from his seat and broke his nec (12—18), and his daughter-in-law died after giving birth to a son (19—22). With these occurrence the judgment began to burst upon the house o Eli. But the disastrous result of the war was als to be a source of deep humiliation to all Israel Not only were the people to learn that the Lor had departed from them, but Samuel also mus learn that the deliverance of Israel from th oppression and dominion of its foes was absolutel impossible without its inward conversion to God."

3.—Let us fetch the ark of the covenant of th Lord.—This superstitious trust in the mere presenc of the ark by a people who were in apostasy from the Lord, is not unlike the confidence whic Christendom, in its apostasy, reposes in the Sacraments, as if forsooth God's presence and blessing were inseparably and unconditionally tied to them The ark could no more save Israel when Israel's heart had departed from the Lord, than the sacraments can profit when repentance and faith ar absent. "Thou hast neither part nor lot in thi matter: for thy heart is not right in the sight o God" (Acts viii. 21), was said to one who had bee but lately baptized. A superstitious use of the sacraments is (as in this case) a betrayal of the into the hands of the enemy.

THE RELIGIOUS TRACT SOCIETY proclaims the Gospel of the Grace of God in 177 languages. It was founded 87 years ago with the object of spreading the news of God's love at Home and in Foreign Lands.

FUNDS URGENTLY NEEDED.

It is supported by, and aids Christians of all Evangelical Denominations. Circulated nearly 82 millions of publications last year.

Does not expend one shilling of its subscriptions or donations on management or other expenses.

Uses all its Missionary Funds for the object for which they are subscribed, but pays all its expenses out of Trade Funds.

Has aided in printing the Pilgrim's Progress in over 70 languages.

Has published its New Testament Commentary in ten languages—Chinese, Arabic, Syriac, Mahrati, Bengali, Canarese, Urdu, Singhalese, Karen.

Made grants of Tracts last year to the extent of 26,000,000, suitable for all classes.

Distributes packets of healthy interesting literature to almost all the Emigrants leaving the ports of the United Kingdom.

Provides for a very large distribution of Books and Tracts for sailors of all nationalities.

Has issued more than 40,000 libraries, varying from 25 to 500 volumes, either at very reduced rates, or for very poor districts free.

Helps all the Missionary Societies in providing Gospel literature in their fields of work, but is only able to do a tithe of what is needed, through want of funds.

Maintains in all its publications a testimony to Evangelical Truth.

A subscription of 10s. 6d. or upwards constitutes membership in the Society; a sum of £10 10s. constitutes Life-membership. All subscribers receive copies of the new tracts and other small publications.

Subscriptions may be sent to the Secretaries, Rev. Lewis Borrett White, D.D.; and Rev. S. G. Green, D.D.; 56, Paternoster-row, London, E.C. Cheques, &c., should be crossed, and made payable in the name of Mr. Joseph Tarn, Cashier.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

THIS Society is employing nearly 130 earnest, faithful, and experienced Readers—most of them in the poorest localities in the Metropolis—who visit from house to house and room to room, bringing the Word of God to the poor, the sick, the erring, and the outcast; they also help generally in the spiritual work of their respective parishes.

Unless speedy help is received several grants must be withdrawn for want of funds.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

President—The RIGHT HON. the LORD MAYOR.
Chairman—Capt. the HON. F. MAUDE, R.N.
Secretary—REV. H. BLOOMER.

Object—To win Souls for Christ.

Twenty-three Agents are constantly at work in the Port of London. The results of their previous efforts, made in simple faith, show that they have been greatly blessed by God.

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED.

Numbers of The Christian, Magazines, Tracts, &c., are most necessary, and will greatly assist the Chaplains and Missionaries.

The Secretary will be pleased to give an account of the Work either at School Room, Lecture Hall, or Drawing Room Meetings.

MRS. HILTON'S CRÈCHE.

A SALE OF USEFUL AND FANCY ARTICLES

AT

LIMEHOUSE TOWN HALL,

WILL BE OPENED ON

SATURDAY, JUNE the 5th, at Twelve noon,

AND WILL CONTINUE OPEN FROM 12 TO 10 O'CLOCK ON THE 7th, 8th, and 9th.

Mrs. Hilton regrets to announce a Deficiency of Stock, but she trusts that friends will come to her aid by sending contributions, as upon the success of this Sale very much depends the continuation of the Country Home. At this season of the year this branch is most needed.

Contributions can be received until the last day of May.

Address—

MARIE HILTON, The Creche,
12, 14, and 16, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY, COMMERCIAL ROAD, E.

Mildmay Mission to the Jews,

79, MILDMAY ROAD, N.

This Mission was commenced on the first day of June, 1876, and is now ten years old.

It has been a work of faith from its commencement, and has had signal tokens of the Lord's approval, for which we praise Him.

It has been thought desirable that our thanksgivings should be publicly expressed.

TWO MEETINGS, therefore, for PRAISE AND PRAYER, will (D.V.) be held in the CONFERENCE HALL, MILDMAY PARK, N., on THURSDAY, JUNE 3, 1886, at 3.30 p.m. and at 7 p.m., to which all friends of Israel are cordially invited. Tea will be provided for those coming from a distance.

"Publish ye, praise ye, and say, O Lord, save thy people, the remnant of Israel."

GRAY'S YARD RAGGED CHURCH AND SCHOOL,

James Street, Oxford Street, London, W.

President—F. A. BEVAN, ESQ. | Treasurer—GEORGE HANBURY, ESQ.

Gospel Services, attended by about 500 of the Homeless Poor, are held on Sundays, at 11 a.m. and 3 p.m., after which each person present is supplied with Bread and Coffee. About £2 each Sunday are required for the Food alone, and there are other heavy expenses connected with the Work of the Church and Schools. Funds are Urgently Needed, and will be thankfully received by the Treasurer, 21, Portman-square, W.; Mr. Philip Gough, 33, Cambridge-street, Hyde-park, W. Mr. A. G. Fraser, 4 Inverness-terrace W.; or by Messrs. Morgan & Scott.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every fleet.

E. J. MATHER, Director.

181, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.
(Next door to Blackfriars Bridge.)

N.B.—The Offices were removed to the present address in December last; attention to the change will save much trouble, time, and expense to the Mission.

THE CRY OF THE CHILDREN.

President—Right Hon. Earl of Aberdeen.

Over Fifty Thousand of our poorest City Children regularly attend the 180 Ragged School Missions affiliated with the

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

The operations include Sunday and Bible Schools, Day and Infant Free Schools, Week-night Schools for Rough Lads and Girls, Industrial Classes, Gospel Mission Services, Mothers Meetings, Ragged Churches, Bands of Hope, Temperance Meetings, and Crèches. Country Houses provided for the weakly or convalescent. Emigration is also promoted, and numerous other agencies for the benefit of the poor children and their parents. Additional funds are urgently needed, and will be thankfully acknowledged by John Kirk, Secretary.

Offices—Exeter Hall, Strand, W.C.

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, ASTHMA, AND ALL OTHER CHEST DISEASES.

SIXPENCE (Post Free), or Large Edition (cloth), 1s. 3d. from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E., and Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The Seventeenth Series of Weekly Cases is now publishing, from May to August.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of Miss STANNARD, NORWICH.

In January of last year, Mrs. Stannard, of 29, Magdalene-street, Norwich, consulted me about her daughter. Consumption, which had been manifested in the family, had shown signs of attacking her. The first indication was cold, followed by diarrhœa, erysipelas, pains in the side, short breathing, night perspirations, were now prevalent, with loss of strength and emaciation of body.

It was not many weeks, after commencing with medicine and prescription, according to my advice, that there was decided improvement. "She is better (writes Mrs. S.); has gained flesh, the appetite has improved, the pain is less acute, and the breathing more free."

After this she remained at a stand-still through the Spring, and, not having been very regular with the medicine, she relapsed a little; but commencing again, and taking also a preparation I directed for the liver, and to give tone to the system, she again improved.

In December, a sister writing me upon her own case, says:—"My sister is now a healthy-looking young woman. Everyone tells us what a change there is in her. She has a colour like a rose."

I inquired last month (April) relative to the patient, and the mother writes me:—"My daughter is quite well, and is at business. We are very grateful for your kindness. You are quite at liberty to publish her case. Another daughter, who wrote you about her own case in December, has also benefitted, and is in good health."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

Spiritual Power for Missionary Work.

By REV. GRIFFITH JOHN, Missionary to China.
With Preface by
Rev. HENRY SIMON, of Westminster Chapel.

"If any one wants to have his soul stirred within him for his work at home, let him read 'Spiritual Power for Missionary Work.'"—Lay Preacher.

"This is an eloquent discourse upon the need of the Holy Spirit's influence in work for Christ, and is followed by a powerful plea for increased help to the missionary cause."—The Baptist.

"Let missionary students read this short essay; and let its reasoning be laid to heart by those also who have to work at home. If the Churches were baptized with the missionary spirit, how rapidly the Gospel would now spread in the world!"—Methodist.

The Bible for the World.

A Lecture

By Rev. A. N. SOMERVILLE, D.D.
of Glasgow.

"Would that in the darkness of this world's night we were all awake! The Lord Jesus expects that His people shall form a chain of watchers, extending from Jerusalem, the scene of His triumphs, to the very ends of the earth. He would have them kindle their responsive signal fires amid the gloom, till tidings

"Of that renowned and glorious conquest,
Once achieved on Calvary,"

shall have reached the savage Ethiop, the Makololo, and red Kaffir, on the south; the Laplander and the native of frozen Siberia on the north; till, on the west, the glad tidings shall have coursed through the kingdoms of Europe, bounded across the ocean, and swept over the three Americas, from Greenland's icy mountains to the flaming Andes, and thence to Fuegia's inhospitable shore; and till, on the east, the song of liberty shall have burst from the lips of emancipated India, shall have been caught up by the millions of awakening China, shall have been echoed back in strains of gratitude from the isles of the wide Pacific; and till the tiny Norfolk Isle, with its pines and tree-ferns, and vast Australia, with all her gold, consecrate their service to the Lord."—PAGE 13.

Price 1d.; 7s. per 100; 6 copies post free for 6d.

Variety, Unity, Activity.

An Address

By Rev. A. N. SOMERVILLE, D.D.
of Glasgow.

"It is probable that the profuse variety in the development of grace in different individuals is due in part to the diversity of natural constitution with which grace comes in contact. Here we find Abel with his righteousness, and Enoch with his holy walk; Noah, with his stedfastness; Abraham, with his faith; Sarah, with her wifely reverence; Melchisedec, grandest, as I take it, of the sons of Ham; the servant Eliezer, with his conscientiousness; Isaac, with his fear of the Lord; Rebecca, with her alacrity at the call of God; Jacob, with his power in prayer; Joseph, with his filial and fraternal love; Job, the Gentile, with his patience; Moses, the lawgiver, with his meekness; Aaron, with his stillness under the rod of God; Miriam, with her timbrel of praise, and all her 'jubilee singers' by the sea; Joshua, with his courage; Jethro, the Midianite, with his sagacity; Caleb, with his full following of the Lord; Phinehas, with his zeal; Rahab, of Jericho, who received God's messengers with peace."—PAGE 4.

In this remarkable address Mr. Somerville enumerates and gives the characteristics of nearly one hundred Scripture persons.

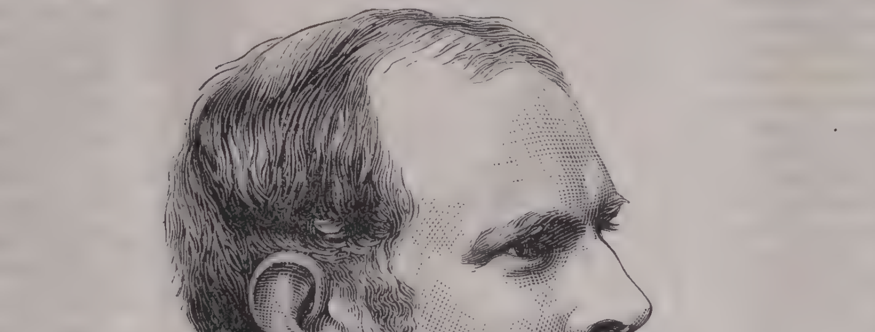
THE LATE BISHOP HANNINGTON.*

IT was in 1876 that the Church Missionary Society despatched its first missionary band of eight men to the Victoria Nyanza. In eighteen months four had fallen in Africa and two had come home. Again the corn of wheat was to bear fruit by dying. The news of the death of two of them, Lieutenant G. Shergold Smith and Mr. T. O'Neill, fired the ardour of a young English clergyman. He would be the one to "lift high the royal banner" that had dropped from their hands. He would consecrate his active frame, his keen eye and sure foot and ready hand, his adventurous spirit and scientific tastes, to the Lord's service in Africa. That young clergyman was JAMES HANNINGTON, then thirty years of age.

The fourth son of one of the well-known Hanningtons at Brighton, he was born at Hurstpierpoint on September 3, 1847. From his childhood he was in all kinds of dangers, "without a notion of fear, and with the minimum of harm." As a schoolboy, he showed first-rate abilities, but was too full of fun and frolic to be industrious. On leaving school he went into his father's business; but after six years' trial in various departments, he had succeeded only in gaining "a certain amount of knowledge and experience in almost everything except business." His leisure hours were spent in scientific pursuits, his mother, an accomplished woman, initiating him into the mysteries of botany, geology, conchology, and natural history. Holiday seasons found him all over the Continent, insomuch that before he was twenty-one he had visited every capital in Europe except two.

His twenty-first year, 1868, saw the whole current of his life and thoughts changed. His family were Nonconformists, and his father had built a large chapel in his own grounds at Hurstpierpoint. But James Hannington at this time came under High Church influence, and his dislike to business having reached its climax, he determined to go to Oxford, with a view to holy orders. But, as he himself afterwards wrote, he was a "mere formalist, and fast drifting to ritualism." Still, the Spirit of God was working in his heart, and he was led to regular habits of prayer and self-examination.



(From Photograph by Mr. T. H. Lord, Cambridge.)

In October, 1869, he matriculated at St. Mary Hall, Oxford. He passed his final examination and took his degree in June, 1873, and in Feb , 1874, he was ordained at Exeter by Bishop Temple. But he had not yet realised the freeness and fulness of the Gospel. That it pleased God to reveal to him a few months later, through the instrumentality of a college friend, Rev. E. C. Dawson. The latter, "with some fear and trembling," and knowing Hannington's "detestation of cant and shams, and scorn of religious enthusiasm," wrote and told his friend of his own conversion to God. Hannington did not answer the letter for some time; but he could not put it away from his memory, and at last, "being," he says, "in terrible bondage and doubts and fears," he wrote and begged Mr. Dawson to come and see him. Not being able to do so just then, Mr. Dawson sent him Dr. W. P. Mackay's "Grace and Truth" to read. Hannington began at the preface, but was repelled by a slip in scholarship, and threw the book away. After a while he remembered it, and put it in his portmanteau when going to Exeter, but again so disliked the first chapter that again he put it aside. At length he took it up once more, and read on to the chapter entitled, "Do you know your sins are forgiven?" "My eyes were opened," he afterwards wrote. "I was in bed at the time reading; I sprang out of bed, and leaped about the floor, rejoicing and praising God that Jesus died for me; and from that day to this I have lived under the shadow of his wings, in assurance of faith that I am his and He is mine."

Hannington's ministerial life began at Martinhoe, in North Devon; but at the end of 1875 he was invited to take charge of St. George's, Hurstpierpoint, the chapel his father had built, which had been ere this made over to the rector of the parish as a chapel of ease to the church. His ministry there was much blessed. People of all classes from villages around would walk in on Sunday evenings to hear the fervent Gospel preaching, and often late comers were turned away from the doors, every inch even of standing room being occupied. Of his Bible classes, Temperance Society (he wore the Blue Ribbon himself), and other agencies, it is needless to speak. Among young men he was especially useful. Many who came under his influence are now engaged in Home Mission and Temperance work, and four offered for the foreign field.

* Extracted from an admirable sketch from the pen of Mr. Eugene Stock in The Sunday Magazine for June. (6d. Religious Tract Society.)

It was in 1878 that, as before mentioned, the news that Shergold Smith and O'Neill had fallen in Central Africa awakened in James Hanningtom the desire to go forth himself to the dark places of the earth. But he was then a young husband, and there were home calls, and the way was not clear. For nearly four years he waited till the Lord should make his will clearly known. Then he offered himself to the Church Missionary Society to go out for a time, not definitely giving up his church meanwhile. In May, 1882, he sailed for the East Coast of Africa, commissioned to lead a fresh party of five missionaries to Uganda and the stations on the road thither.

The party left Zanzibar for the interior on June 28. Their route was that known as the old road, due west for five hundred miles to Uyui, and then north for two hundred miles to the south end of the great lake, the Victoria Nyanza. It is, as far as Uyui, the route of Cameron and Stanley, and of the London Missionary Society's missionaries to Tanganika. It was already pretty well known, but it took Hannington and his party, with their caravan of some hundreds of porters, four months to reach the Nyanza. Hannington never spared himself, and exposure to damp, bad water, and other privations brought on repeated and serious attacks of dysentery. Again and again his brethren advised his going back; but his strong feeling that the leader of the party must set an example to the rest in courage and endurance led him to persist, until in February, seeing that "to remain was but to burden them and to die," he suffered them to send him back. On the journey to the coast he was worse than ever. Twice the natives who carried him in a litter laid what they thought to be his lifeless body on the ground and left it; and both times he succeeded in crawling after them. But his cheerfulness triumphed over all suffering, and his men at one place said to a missionary, "Master must die—he is sure to die; but how is it master is always so happy?"

However, he reached England safely, and in health renewed by the voyage; and one of his first acts was to consult the doctors as to the prospects of his returning to Africa. Their verdict was favourable, and although he had resumed his ministerial duties at Hurstpierpoint, his heart was still in Uganda, and he asked the Society to send him back. The Society responded by suggesting his name to the Archbishop of Canterbury to be appointed a Bishop for the supervision of its missions in those parts; and on June 24, 1884, at the Parish Church of Lambeth, he was consecrated. On November 5, 1884, Bishop Hannington sailed the second time for Africa. It is needless to detail his incessant occupations and journeys during the next six months. With all his modesty, he acknowledged to having done "an amazing amount of work." One journey was to Chagga, the Switzerland of Africa, where he arranged for the establishment of a mission, which is now being carried on by Rev. E. A. Fitch, son of the Vicar of Cromer.

At length, on July 22, he started on his most serious and (as it proved) his last expedition—a journey on which he had set his heart, and from which no prospect of peril could turn him aside. This project was to reach the Victoria Nyanza and Uganda, by a direct route north-west from Mombasa, past Kilima Njaro, and through the country of the fierce Masai tribe. Hannington knew the dangers of the road, and he would not let any other white missionary go with him; but he took an African clergyman, Rev. W. H. Jones, once a slave, rescued by a British cruiser from a slave-ship. The journey took three months, and was successfully accomplished. On October 8 Hannington reached the north-east corner of the great lake. Leaving Mr. Jones and part of the caravan there, he went forward alone round the northern shore, and reached Usoga, the district adjoining Uganda on the east, on October 22. Another day or two, and he would be at the mission station, with three English brethren to welcome him, and more than a hundred baptized converts, the fruit of the previous three years' work.

But a new danger awaited him, of which he was but partially, if at all, conscious. The young King of Uganda, Mwanga, son of the famous Mtesa, had, with his chiefs, become greatly alarmed by rumours, sedulously exaggerated by Arab traders, of German "invasion" and "annexation" in East Africa; and they could not dissociate from these the now actual approach of a white man, said to be a "great priest," by a "back-door" into the country through which no Mzungu (European) had ever before entered. "Kill him at once, and seize his goods," was the advice of the leading chiefs; and orders were sent accordingly. The Bishop and the fifty men with him were arrested in Usoga, kept in confinement eight days, and then put to death, the natives being speared, and the Bishop shot with his own rifle. Four of the porters escaped, and fled to where Mr. Jones was waiting; and he brought the rest of the caravan sadly back to the coast. Meanwhile, the missionaries in Uganda, though the king tried to conceal his cruel deed from them, heard all from their converts. One of the reports was that "when a prisoner, the Mzungu (European) was kept aloof from his men and his goods, but allowed his bedding and his Bible and one or two other books. He occupied his time in writing much. When they were about to kill him, he bade them tell the king that he had purchased the road to Uganda with his life, and that he died for the Baganda" (people of Uganda).

Thus died one of the truest and bravest missionaries of modern times. Deeply is he mourned by those who knew and loved him; but of this we may be confident, that there is a purpose of love in his early death. Is it not that embodied in the text, "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit"? The fruit will surely come in the shape of men willing to consecrate their service to the Lord in the cause for which James Hannington laid down his life—the cause of the evangelisation of Africa.

THE WORK OF THE MINISTRY.

By Dr. SOMERVILLE.*

INFLUENCE OF THE MINISTRY.

The extent of the influence of the ministry is apt to be overlooked even by ministers themselves. Experience teaches that none fulfil a higher function in this world for good ends than good ministers. On the other hand, there are none who in all ages down to the present hour have exercised a more pernicious influence than bad ministers. By bad ministers I do not mean immoral ones, but those who do not faithfully discharge the proper duty of their calling. However eminent the intellectual abilities of the individuals may be, no greater hindrance to the progress of the Gospel exists than unconverted or even unspiritual ministers. They misrepresent Christ to mankind; by their lukewarmness they deaden the spiritual sensibilities of thousands, they chill at critical moments the awakened anxieties of inquirers, they put a barrier in the way of the Gospel when it is brought by others to their neighbourhood, they confirm the prejudices of the worldly, they encourage the enemies of the Gospel to treat earnestness in religion with contempt, and by their own marrowless, unevangelical, dry, and ineffective preaching, they deprive the Gospel of its distinctive qualities, by which alone it can conquer the human heart. They induce society to think that the ends of the ministry are sordid, selfish, or merely political, and that it is not worth while making any sacrifice to extend it in our own land or elsewhere; they give strength to false religious systems, whose abettors are ever ready to take advantage of their opportunity; and, on the other hand, they compel people who have received some knowledge of the truth, in self-defence to seek refuge in sectarianism. In short, such a ministry resembles the malaria that blights and desolates a province. Britain is reaping still the results of the worldly and unfaithful ministry of the eighteenth century. At this moment whole regions in Europe are shut off from the truth by clerical representatives of a false Christianity. I may add, it is among ecclesiastics in several lands that rationalism which starves the souls of the people has had most sway. High Churchism, too, in some regions interposes formidable obstacles to the Gospel.

PREACHING.

Let me call attention to one important feature of the ministry—viz., preaching. "As you go, preach." "Preach the Gospel to every creature." "Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the Gospel." "The preaching of the Cross is to them that perish foolishness, but unto us who are saved it is the power of God."

It is impossible to over-estimate the value of good preaching. Without depreciating other means for benefiting society, there seems to be no more ready and efficacious agency for improving and elevating the community than faithful and practical preaching of the Gospel.

Think of the many thousands of persons in the British Isles (it is said there are 38,850 in England, Wales, and Scotland), whose calling it is every week to preach Christ's Gospel to the people; and then consider the drunkenness, Babylonian dissipation, Corinthian vice, the gambling, murders, suicides, irreligion, deplorable ignorance, that prevail in our land. May not the question suggest itself, Is there not something amiss in our preaching, and is there not in our methods some lack of adaptation to the condition of society, otherwise they would operate more influentially on the regular hearers, and through them on the masses outside?

As to preaching, we believe that the character and true success of a Church will depend more on the quality of its preaching than on anything else. All adventitious supports will fail to enable a Church to keep its ground, much less to advance, if the preaching be unevangelical, weak, and, as we say in Scotland, "fushionless and feckless." It is a dreadful thing when, through lack of thought, through careless preparation, and through the preacher's subsiding into platitudes, sermons constrain the hearer to yawn and complain of insufferable tedium, to feel, in consequence of the dullness of the service, that his time has been wasted, and that the public worship of God is distasteful.

* Extracted from the Moderator's closing address at the Free Church Assembly, Edinburgh.

I need not say how essential in a minister is spirituality of mind, in order that he may, by his example and daily walk, raise the tone of those with whom he mingles. But the character of his preaching also will depend mainly on his own attainment in grace. Can we expect good preaching from a man whose mind is set on earthly things, who idles away his week in trifles, or who spends his strength on mere literary or secular work, who neglects the daily study of Scripture, who knows nothing of earnest dealing with God in prayer for himself, his family, his flock, or the nations of the world, who is selfish, and who is given to the pleasures and story-telling of the table? A minister needs continual watchfulness over himself, and to be ever on the alert for the honour of his Master. Indeed it is not enough that he possess the grace of God. He needs to have that grace always in exercise. A perpetual progress in spiritual attainment, and advance in the higher life are indispensable, and for this end the minister's soul must be ever under the hand of the Divine lapidary; thus only will true sparkle be imparted to his preaching, and the man himself, like the polished stones on the breastplate of Aaron, be qualified to tell on the sensibilities of his flock.

WHAT AND HOW TO PREACH.

It would be out of place to descant on homiletics here. It is enough to say that it is essential for the prosperity of the ministry, that the grand and outstanding doctrines of the Gospel, which shine out from the page of Scripture as with the light of a sunbeam, should be roundly and articulately proclaimed and reiterated. Let us not be ashamed of distinctive doctrines so much decried in certain quarters in the present day. The objection raised by some to preaching doctrines amounts really to this, that we ought to speak about Christ as a person, rather than about what Christ has done. Whereas, it is not merely on what He is, but on what He has done that the Gospel we have to preach is based. If doctrine be not clearly stated, preaching will lack pith, and become vapid; mere appeal to feeling will ere long pall on the ear, and the only effectual incentive to a moral life be awanting. We must insist on the great doctrines of the Bible, such as that of man's moral ruin, the commanding truth of the sovereignty of the grace of God, the person of Christ, the necessity of regeneration by the Holy Spirit, and especially the substitution, the atoning death, and, what is now too seldom brought forward, the justifying righteousness of Christ, his coming again, the need of a personal reliance on Christ for salvation, and the indispensableness of holiness of heart and life. The Atonement of Christ! If that doctrine be withheld from the people, what, I ask, have we to preach to them? That atonement is the most stupendous event in the history of the world, and is the truth, the proclamation of which alone will restore to God the alienated heart of man.

But let no man handle these foundation verities with a careless and slovenly touch, making those things which are instinct with life appear to the hearer heavy, uninteresting, and commonplace. No preaching is effective which does not grasp and deal with the conscience. At the same time we must ever approach our hearers with tenderness and pathos; for, unless we reach the affections, even pungent address to the conscience will fail to gain the man. I may add here, that apt and judicious illustration has a powerful influence in attracting the listener, in riveting on the mind the lessons conveyed, and in fixing instruction on the memory. May I be permitted to say that, in my wanderings over the world, I have found that the fearless proclamation of the peculiar truths of the Gospel has power to engage and arrest the most unsympathetic and incongruous audiences: and that thus I have had what to me has been vivid confirmation of the perfect adaptation of these great truths to the spiritual necessities of mankind.

ALACRITY TO RESPOND TO THE LORD'S CALL.

One thing required of us all, ministers and elders, is that we hold ourselves at the Lord's disposal, and if his voice in providence be, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" that we be ready to respond, "Here am I, send me." By this we must indicate that we are willing to go, to act, to suffer, or to surrender, as the Lord may require.

(1) Young Men.—Let me say to the younger men among us, that much is expected of them, and that the talent of youth which rapidly melts away, is to be prized and utilised. Joseph, who sheltered the entire Church of God in Egypt and saved a great nation, was a young man. The half million warriors who crossed the Jordan to conquer for Israel the Lord's inheritance, were, with two exceptions, all young men. And was it not a youth who, with the sling and the stone, broke the tyranny of the Philistine and delivered the people? Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, who shook the entire empire of Babylon, and who are shaking the world at the present hour, were young men. All Christ's Apostles were, at the time of their calling, young men. Calvin wrote his "Institutes," which have moulded the minds of myriads, when he was twenty-six. Patrick Hamilton, the proto-martyr of the Reformation in Scotland, was a youth of twenty-four. George Wishart, the martyr, was comparatively a young man. John Livingston, of the famous Kirk of Shotts, was a young man. Hugh M'Kail, Richard Cameron, and James Renwick, who yielded their lives for the crown rights of Christ, and whose names are emblazoned on the flag of Scotland's spiritual liberties, were young men. In our day William Burns, Robert M'Cheyne, Alexander Duff (when he began his work in India), were all young men. ✗ At the present moment the religious movements going on all over the country, that are cheering our hearts so much, are in a measure due to the energetic action of young men.

May the Lord fire our young men—ministers, students, and those of all professions—with fresh zeal for the Master's cause and kingdom. Shall some of our younger Silases, Timothys, and Lukes, who are present in this Assembly, not be willing, like the Apostle's companions, to embark and pass over into the lands of the heathen?

(2) Old Men.—As for the old men, let me bid them remember that their service cannot be dispensed with. The sun, though strongest at noon, is most superb towards his setting. Christ has work for his servants to do, even at their latest hour. And to old men it is specially committed to show children and children's children what is the beauty, abundance, and undying efficacy of the grace of God. We have only to look at the page of Scripture to see the use God has made of old men. Who should be so full of the Holy Spirit as old men? Who should be so thrilled with love to Christ as those who have had longest experience of Christ's love to them? Who should be so rich in the Word as those who have made it the study of a long life? Who should have such ardent yearning for the extension of the kingdom of Christ as those who have longest borne his commission?

Do you think the Lord can be pleased if, after such talents have been committed to us old men, a dying world shall reap no advantage from them? Shall we say, because our life is far spent, we may now leave it to younger men to fulfil the Master's behest? Nay, rather because the time that remains to us is so short, let us with tenfold more zeal strain to fill up with earnest work the fast fleeting hours of opportunity which, neglected now, will be gone for ever. Let the cry of the Psalmist be ours—"Now, also, when I am old and grey-headed, O God, forsake me not, till I have showed Thy strength to this generation, and Thy power to every one that is to come."

Above all, let us lay to heart the absolute dependence of the Church for all effective service and blessing on the Holy Spirit of God. We must live in immediate connection with Him, so that his influence may penetrate and pervade our whole fabric and administration. The presence and energy of the Holy Spirit will secure for any Church the possesion of varied and otherwise unattainable powers.

✗ So Brainerd Martyn [illegible]

CONCLUSION.

From the simultaneous stir in many minds on both sides of the Atlantic, about the evangelisation of the world, we may almost anticipate that an era of universal missionary activity is upon us. Should the Spirit of the Lord come mightily on his Church, it is quite conceivable that a rush of an impetuous tide may suddenly take place. This is the age of great surprises. In what direction, and in what channels the flood of blessing may take its course, whether in the quickening of churches, in the increase of organisations, in the proffer for service for the foreign field, or in an unusual resolve of individuals to consecrate their substance to the Lord, we cannot tell. But would it not be wise to be prepared, at once, to hasten on such a consummation by expectation and prayer, and to be ready to take advantage to the utmost of the surging blessing when it comes?

Let fathers and mothers, sons and daughters, ministers, elders and students, and Christians of every rank and in all positions, remember that no service rendered to the Lord shall be overlooked or unrequited. Abraham left country, kindred, possessions, and home. What was the recompense? For one family that he left, earth's innumerable families were made over to him. "In thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed." And again, when long afterwards, at God's bidding, he surrendered his one and only son on Mount Moriah, what was his reward? For one son that he gave up, God assured him of a progeny, multitudinous and brilliant as the stars of heaven, and countless and indestructible as the sands upon the sea-shore. So shall it be with any of us who are willing to sacrifice anything for Christ, for has He not Himself said—"Verily, I say unto you, there is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands for my sake and the Gospel's, but he shall receive an hundred-fold, now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions, and in the world to come, eternal life."

And now, once again let me recall to you that the century is hastening to its close. Do we not see time, swift-winged, with his keen eye, holding towards us in his hand the great sand-glass of the century. Mutely he points to the lower bulb of the glass so nearly filled, and then motions us to look at the rapidly diminishing grains in the upper bulb. Shall we allow these last sands to cease to run, without an effort to utilise the fourteen years that remain, as we have not hitherto done? It is plain that there is not one day to be lost—not one day! Let all our committees, Presbyteries, Synods, churches, and the masses of the Christian people awake at once, and call on one another to speed to the work.

Much may be done. In our own time have we not see the great wall of religious intolerance that had stood for centuries and which shut off Spain from the Gospel, even as her Pyrenees separate her from the rest of Europe, fall in one day to the ground? Have we not seen a similar wall enclosing Italy fall also in one day to the earth? Has not the massive wall of the Japanese opposition suddenly come down? Did not one night serve to take out two and a-half millions of Israelites from Egyptian bondage? Did not one night suffice to bring about ancient Babylon's fall and set the captives free? And has not the Scripture said that the mighty Apocalyptic Babylon shall be brought down in "one day;" nay, as if this were not enough, has it not thrice declared that in "one hour" it shall fall? Fourteen years! What may not be accomplished in fourteen years? From the dark hour of the death of George Wishart—burned at the stake at St. Andrews—till 1560, when the first General Assembly was held in this city, and Protestant truth prevailed over Scotland, was just fourteen years. Shall not then the entire churches of Scotland, and all that will associate with them, fixing their eyes on the Lord's promised inheritance, say like Caleb, when he stilled the agitated people in the wilderness—"Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it."

NOVELS AND NOVEL-READING.

The ravenous appetite for fiction shown by readers of all classss must have struck careful observers of the tendencies of our day. The baker's boy goes about the street eagerly devouring a thrilling tale in his penny journal. The minister in his study, and the politician in his leisure moments, are to be found with a novel in their hands. Publishers and librarians have the same tale to tell about the demand for fiction. An authority on the subject declared lately that nine-tenths of the books read in England are novels, and that in the whole world the proportion is as great as nineteen-twentieths. These significant facts call for attention, and we are glad that a capable writer in the current number of The New Princeton Review (2s. Hodder & Stoughton) looks the phenomenon fairly in the face. He believes that "everything runs to novels now-a-days, as in the Elizabethan age everything ran to drama." He finds that literature of every sort takes on this form, and is spiced with this flavour. Even science has to give a coating of sugar to its pills. He readily admits the universal craving for the entertainment which a story can afford, but deplores the methods adopted by the novelist of our times. We heartily endorse his protest against the disgusting realism and crime-stained fatalities of the stories with which the market is flooded, and commend his attempt to lead readers back to healthier tastes and purer sources of enjoyment.

It is high time that the Church of Christ should make her voice heard on this subject. The mischief done by bad books is incalculable. Novels of the French school are badly immoral, and savour of the sink of iniquity in which they take their rise. Their very coarseness lessens their power to hurt, because it compels a reader with any sense of manhood to fling them aside, as he would a poisonous reptile. But another class of novels is more subtle and deadly. They teach an ethical agnosticism which, by doubt and insinuation, undermines the foundations of morality. They mock at the highest sanctions of duty and the most sacred relationships of life. Their heroes are unworthy to shake hands with old-fashioned criminals of the Jack Sheppard type, and their women lose all claim to what makes womanhood bright and pure. A constant topic in them is the complications springing out of intrigues between the sexes; and they are never done ringing the changes on the doings of the married flirt and the mismated wife. We hold that whatever threatens the sanctity of the home affects the honour and strength of a country, and strikes at the heart of religion. Let our pulpits, then, speak out, and denounce this foe of everything that is true and good.

And this is not all. Many popular novels not only pollute the mind and undermine the morals, but they also give morbid views of life. The reader is carried into a close and stifling atmosphere. He is called on to engage in "a microscopic study of diseased types." Moods and feelings are analysed with the keenness of a vivisectionist and the minuteness of a scientist. The fruits of such studies soon make their appearance in a cynicism which questions good, and a despondency which weakens effort. Much of the ennui so prevalent in society can be traced, we believe, to the morbid analysis inculcated by the realistic novelists of our day. They have poisoned the springs of healthful recreation by pourtraying a world of falseness and foulness, from which we should advise every reader to keep himself unspotted.

Men demand entertainment, and will have it. Narrative offers it. It soothes the weary worker into forgetfulness of himself and his worries in experiences outside of himself. But why should not these experiences be healthy and rest-giving rather than those furnished by ransacking police-calendars or by subjecting the lowest moods and actions to a microscopic examination? No real recreation can be found in that which jars on the finest sympathies and dulls the spiritual outlook of the reader. Our fathers read the story to enter a world where fair ladies reigned and knightly deeds were done—a world in which the flowers never lost their bloom, the birds always sang, and over all there lay "the light that never was on sea or shore." By so doing, they steeped their lives in the spirit of romance, and forgot the prosaic troubles which annoyed them. We do not say that they could not be more profitably employed, but we do say that they reaped incalculably less injury from their romances than their children do from the novels of to-day. What is wanted is a return—if we must have novels—to those of the Sir Walter Scott type. They at least abound in incidents which, while always interesting, are never pernicious.

THE SCAPEGOAT.

Sir,—With respect to some remarks on the scapegoat, or Azazel, in The Christian of May 20, two things are to be observed: (1) If Azazel be a proper name, it does not follow that there is any interference with the atonement by our Lord. The Apostle delivered some unto Satan (1 Cor. v. 5; 1 Tim. i. 20); (2) I do not hold that by using Azazel in the Revised Version we expressed our belief that it is a proper name, for we did the same with Sheol and Abaddon. I think there is much to be said for the view, ably expounded by Tholuck two generations ago, that it means utter extinction; and the contrast in this case is very marked between the living personal Jehovah, for whom the one goat is appointed, and the utter extinction to which the other is given over.

It is indeed highly desirable that theological students should be well trained in the Old Testament, its typical meaning not being overlooked. My esteemed and beloved predecessor in the Principalship of this Hall, the late Dr. Patrick Fairbairn, himself one of these Revisers, among various great services to theology, in this department especially, wrote an admirable work, "The Typology of the Old Testament," which I hope may long be studied; it contains an excellent summary of the various opinions on this subject of the scapegoat.—I am, yours faithfully, George C. M. Douglas.

[We heartily endorse this recommendation of Dr. Fairbairn's "Typology."—Ed.]

HOMES for WORKING GIRLS in LONDON.

My Dear Sir,—It would be a great pleasure to me if some of your readers who have large houses out of town would invite the residents in Victoria, Woodford, Garfield and Hyde Houses, to spend the day with them on Whit-Monday—i.e., the next Bank Holiday, June 14. It would not perhaps incommode them very much to arrange for dinner and tea say for 50, 100, or 150 young workwomen.

A gentleman has kindly invited all the residents of Morley, Gordon, and Norfolk Houses to visit him on that day, but he cannot accommodate more.

John Shrimpton, Hon. Director.

BLOTTING OUT GOD!

["The Education Department of the Municipality of Paris has ordered the name of God to be erased from all the instruction books in the French public schools."—The Echo]

Wilt thou, O faithless France, presume to say
That God is not? and man must cease to pray?
Declare with icy breath that disbelief
Can only purge society of grief?
Shall Voltaire's creedless, crackling, scornful fun,
Hide holy thought, as dark clouds hide the sun?

Blot out the name of God? Ah, no! As soon
Crush summer's sweetness from the woods in June.
The life, and light, and love of that bless'd name,
Before the birth of worlds, were grand in fame!
Ere scent of rose or ancient blue of sky
Began to be, Jehovah was on high!

That name was old when Paradise was young,
Or angel choirs o'er Eden's haunts had sung;
Creation voiced its praise for life received,
When dense chaotic darkness felt relieved
By God's all-merciful, soft smile of light,
Which shaped day's beauty from eternal night!

Wouldst thou, O frowning France, through wrath of State,
Exclude this charming name from book and slate?
Make politics thy god, and man thy guide,
Because thy loss of faith increased the pride
That will not in the Bible mirror peep,
Lest scarlet ghosts of sin before thee creep?

False prophets, not thy God, O foolish France,
Have played thee false, and hindered thine advance:
The surging, restless temper of the times,
And that red shadow! following new crimes
Which mock the heartless muse of infidels,
And all the righteous music of the bells!

O fairest land of sunny plains! there frets
A Christless sorrow o'er thy violets!
Shall sin's despairing moan of sadness rise
Round vine-fringed seas, or up to glassy skies?
Must Jew and Gentile's God, who gave thee breath,
Retire? and let a nation meet its—DEATH!

DISTRESS IN WALES.

Dear Sir,—In my last brief letter I alluded to the apparent deepening and widening of the distress. My fears are sadly confirmed. In some places, where there exists at present no local relief fund, there is no hope of the long idle works being restarted, and the privation and suffering are becoming more acute. In several homes, where, in "good times" the family earnings have been between two and three pounds a week, there is often no food. Some of the few who have succeeded in getting occasional work have to start for a walk of many miles without any breakfast. At Breton Ferry, where, perhaps, the distress and need are deepest, the only reply to my question respecting work is "Breaking stones." Of this but a limited number can avail themselves, and as, by a recent order, employment is now to be given only on four days in each week, four shillings represents the full weekly earnings, with, I am told, twopence additional for each child under fourteen, all the elder children being, in the majority of cases, idle at home.

I have been so earnestly besought to continue, if possible, my assistance a little longer, that I must, for the sake of these poor people, assume once more my old garb of a mendicant. I have very gratefully to acknowledge the receipt of just over seventy pounds. Will my kind friends make it up to a hundred? I shall be able to gladden many bare, shadowed homes with the extra thirty pounds. As my movements for the present are rather uncertain, I shall this time prefer, if incurring no inconvenience, that any kind gifts in response to my present appeal be sent to the office of The Christian for me.

MANCHESTER Y.M.C.A.—The fourteenth annual report of this Association states that the aim of the work is now understood and appreciated by all classes of the community. During the year ending March 31, 1001 new members and associates joined the Association, 1016 Bible-classes and other religious meetings were held, and the Sunday afternoon Bible-classes conducted by Dr. Grimké had an average attendance of fifty. The different agencies, of a very varied character, had been well sustained. The Home of the Association is at 56, Peter-street, Manchester.

OUR DUTY IN THE PRESENT CRISIS.

AN ADDRESS BY CHARLES GRAHAM,

Minister of Avenue-road Church, Shepherd's Bush.

"I exhort therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks be made for all men; for kings, and for all that are in authority; that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty. For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour; who will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth.'
—1 TIM. ii. 1—4.

THIS exhortation of Paul was addressed to Timothy as his delegate in the Church of Ephesus; and it was not more needful for the Christians of Ephesus when Paul wrote it, than it is for the Christians of these countries at the present day. Let us notice

THE DUTY ENJOINED.

The object for which Paul left Timothy at Ephesus, while he himself passed over into Macedonia, was that he might charge some, in the Ephesian Church, not to preach doctrines opposed to those taught by the Apostle, neither to give heed to "fables," Jewish legends, "and endless genealogies," "Gnostic genealogies of spirits, or œons," or "lists of Gnostic emanations." These ministered questions ending in strife, not godly edifying. In opposition to this the end of Paul's charge to Timothy was to promote "love out of a pure heart, a good conscience, and faith unfeigned" (chap. i. 3—5).

Already some had put away faith and a good conscience, and of "the faith," that is, of the truth, had made shipwreck. Of these were Hymeneus and Alexander, whom the Apostle had delivered unto Satan, that they might learn not to blaspheme. Excommunicated by the Apostle, and his act ratified by God (Matt. xviii. 17, 18), they were given over, for a season, to the power of Satan for the destruction of the flesh by chastisement, that they might learn not to blaspheme, and the spirit be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

In this charge to Timothy, the Apostle exhorts, first of all, for reasons of importance, "that supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men." Then are specified "kings, and all that are in authority."

Paul saw the shadow of the coming apostasy falling on the Church. Men were beginning to "despise dominion, and speak evil of dignities" (Jude 8). "The mystery of lawlessness" was working. Prayer was, therefore, specially necessary for kings and governors.

Supplication is prayer intensified and prolonged. Supplication is in proportion to our feeling of need, whether for ourselves or others. Intercessions seem to be the deprecation of judgments and calamities (Schleusner). Thanksgivings are offered for blessings enjoyed or in prospect.

When this charge was given by the Apostle to Timothy, it seems to have been Nero who was upon the throne, and the magistrates and governors throughout the empire were heathen. It is clear, therefore, that God is willing to hear his people's prayers and intercessions, even for unjust and wicked rulers. On this subject Holy Scripture gives us many proofs and illustrations. How often did God answer the prayer of Moses, in removing the plagues from Pharaoh! When the arm of Jeroboam, stretched forth to seize the man of God from Judah, withered in a moment, so that he lost all power over it, at the prayer of the Prophet it was instantly restored. And when the King of Israel, the King of Judah, and the King of Edom, with their armies, were ready to perish in the wilderness with thirst, at the prayer of Elisha they were supplied with water. Moab, who had revolted from Israel, was given into their hand. But the charge given by the Apostle contains a stronger reason for faith than existed in any of these cases.

THE REASON IN RELATION TO CHRISTIANS THEMSELVES.

This reason is, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty. This obviously means a life not disturbed by persecution, nor by the invasion of our civil or religious liberty; it implies also preservation from war and insurrection. All these are to be subjects of prayer, either for their attainment or continuance, and subjects of thanksgiving if we possess them.

The prayer of Paul himself for the Thessalonians gives us the mind of the Spirit in this passage: "The Lord of peace Himself give you peace always by all means" (2 Thess. iii. 16). Here we clearly see that the mind of the Lord is that his own peace should at all times rule in our hearts, and be promoted by peace around us, in the family, in the Church, and in the world, "that our lives may be passed in all godliness and honesty," that is, as in R V., in "gravity." But the Greek word means more than "gravity," it includes sanctity or holy dignity.

Godliness is that reverential state of heart which continually worships and obeys God, while gravity, or holy dignity, commends the religion of the Lord Jesus, and attracts men to it.

That dark days are before our world, none instructed in the prophetic Scriptures doubts. The sum of the martyrs is not yet completed (Rev. vi. 2). To the eye of statesmen and politicians a dark storm looms in the future, and none can tell how soon, or where it may burst. In the East, fresh troubles may at any hour arise, which would wrap all the nations of the Roman world in the flames of war. Lawlessness, almost universal, is no longer a mystery working in secret, but a mystery revealed, to the disturbance, if not to the terror, of the nations.

The members of Christ, however they may be scattered over the face of the earth, are one body. Though it might seem to be an article which is dropping out of the creed of many in this country, the Christians in England and the Christians in Ireland are one. The first forty years of my life were spent in Ireland, and for twenty years, in my feeble and imperfect way, I preached the Gospel through that land; and I can truly say that not only the Christians, but the Protestants in Ireland of all denominations, are deeply attached to the English nation, to its Queen and its Constitution. If proof of that loyalty, often bearing severe strain, were necessary, it would be easy to find it abundantly.

Truly, at the present hour, our refuge is in God. To all those Christians whom my voice may reach I would say, plead earnestly with God to incline the hearts of the electors of these countries to send men to Parliament who fear God and regard the integrity and honour of this nation, that He has hitherto so greatly blessed; and that He will strengthen magistrates and judges to defend all, especially in Ireland, who hold his truth, from oppression and violence.

THE GROUND OF OUR PLEADING WITH GOD.

Our prayer for all men "is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour," and the end of our existence and of our salvation is to please Him. But our prayer is good and acceptable to Him, because "He desires that all men should be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth." This, then, is the grand end of our prayers for all men, that they may be saved. This brings us into sympathy with God. But surely, if we pray for the salvation of all men, we will leave no means within our power unemployed in seeking their salvation. Our efforts cannot fail to be as earnest as our prayers.

The line of our successful efforts is here indicated. God will have all men to be saved by coming to the knowledge of the truth. Satan has been a liar from the beginning, and destroys men by the belief of a lie; God saves men by the belief of the truth; and the truth in its fulness is in the Lord Jesus. We are saved when we know Him.

In accordance with this the Apostle affirms, "There is one God and one Mediator between God and men, the Man Christ Jesus." None other in heaven or earth could say, "I am the way, the truth, and the Life. No man cometh unto the Father but by Me." Being God and man in one person, He is infinitely suited to be our Mediator. To set up man, or angel as mediator, is to set up a cheat and a deception as well as a rival to Him. Christ became Mediator by his sacrifice for a lost world, "He gave Himself a ransom for all to be a testimony in its own times." He is "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." When we appropriate this truth, and know that He has taken away our sin, we are saved.

This Gospel dispensation is the grand period of this testimony. All previous dispensations prepared for it. Now, in the fulness of time, God has sent his Son into the world, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons.

How strange it must appear to holy angels, and still more so to fallen spirits, conscious of being lost for ever, that men under the sentence of condemnation should reject such a privilege! And how strange must the infatuation appear, when such a privilege is rejected for the pleasures and vanities of an hour!

It is obvious from this injunction of the Apostle to pray for "kings, and all who are in authority," that "the powers which be are ordained of God," and that "he who resisteth the power resisteth the ordinance of God." The duty of the Christian is to pray for those wielding the power, that they may use it aright. And if the Christian is persecuted for righteousness' sake to expostulate and appeal to the unchanging principles of justice; and if there is no redress, he has, like his Master, to commit himself and his persecutors to Him that judgeth righteously.

The greatest power on earth is the Lord's people. In their own sphere their power is omnipotent. Within that sphere every believer can say, "through Him that strengtheneth me I can do all things." "All things are possible to him that believeth." Who could tell how much the peace and prosperity of nations depend upon the prayers of the Christians who live in them?

CHILDREN'S SERVICES.

DEAR SIR,—My object in writing is to awaken an interest in the thousands of little ones during the Sunday evenings of this summer. As one of those blessed with a little family, and considering it a duty as well as pleasure to give the Sunday evenings for them, I was led, about four weeks ago, to transfer our service from the parlour to a field not far from the house, and to invite all the children near to join. Without any previous announcement, we soon had upwards of 100 little ones, and with the help of sheet hymns, we spent a truly happy Sunday evening. I know the little ones enjoyed it, and each Sunday evening they have been waiting for the service with pleasure.

This is work that can be carried on almost everywhere, not only at the seaside, but in our cities, country towns, and villages. I often pass through the parks in this big city on a Sunday evening, and whilst glad to see so much out-door work for the Master, I notice it is more directed to the grown-up folks, rather than the little ones. It has been gratifying to see how interested the fathers and mothers get, when any trouble is taken for their little ones' welfare; a goodly few stood and listened to the address, and we trust that blessing will follow.

THE METROPOLITAN COLPORTAGE ASSOCIATION is a power in the land—how great a power may be judged by the account of sales of religious literature during 1885. The number of Bibles and books issued was about 457,527, and of periodicals 320,504. From such a fount of inspiration and pure literature springs of healing must issue. Distinct blessing is traceable to this source, and indirectly in the discontinuance of bad books and periodicals, which constitute an evil so great that the energies of the Church may well be called forth against it. The work of the colporteur does not end with the sale of his book. Often does he proclaim the Gospel message where it is seldom heard, and his ministrations to the sick and dying have also been abundantly blessed. It is hoped that by increased subscriptions, the number of colporteurs will in the present year be increased from 80 to 100—a hope which all who value such work will heartily endorse.

A GIRLS' GUILD.

IN connection with the Gospel Temperance work at Hoxton Hall, there has recently been opened "The Girls' Guild of Good Life." Its object is "the cultivation of such habits and graces as tend to the building up of a pure and happy home life." Much good has been done, and many have been brought in who would, perhaps, otherwise have been walking the streets or frequenting music-halls.

The closing meeting of the session has just been held, when nearly two hundred girls met. A most enjoyable evening was spent, the girls themselves taking part. Some very helpful words were said to them by Miss Balgarnie. In order to keep them together during the summer months, Mrs. J. T. Rae is anxious to organise monthly Saturday half-holiday excursions, thus giving them a glimpse of something better and brighter than they are accustomed to in their daily life. Perhaps some of your readers who have large grounds would invite them, and others, perhaps, would help with funds. The ages of the girls range from twelve to about twenty years.—Yours truly, JENNIE NOBLE.

THE HIGHLAND TEMPERANCE LEAGUE report some interruption to their work through the general depression and the state of political excitement in which the country has been kept. Yet there is no question as to the strength of the temperance sentiment throughout the land. As an instance, in an informal plebiscite, in Stornoway, on the question of the Local Veto, 3495 voted in favour of the suppression of the drink traffic, and only 32 for its continuance. The popular assent to the principle of total abstinence is, "we are glad to be assured, increasing with rapid strides throughout the Highlands." Four agents of the Society have in the twelve months held 6[illegible]4 meetings, and gained 1798 members. The secretary's address is 6, Drummond-street, Inverness.

CONVERTS IN BENARES.

SOME years ago, whilst in England, I used to gather my children around me and tell them of some pressing case, in which I knew their little hands and pence could give assistance. Very brightly they would reply, "Oh, what can we do? do tell us;" and many a time they would deny themselves (for Jesus' sake) so that they might distribute to those in distress. Thinking about this a few evenings ago, I wondered, if I told the "little folks" who read the children's page in THE CHRISTIAN a true story, whether they could help me.

A year ago, two little wives fourteen years of age came to Lucknow. As they were so young a widow was with them to keep the house and look after them. They heard that a Miss Sahib taught other little wives to read, and they sent a message the next time she came near their house, Would she come and teach them? The missionary was very glad and in a few days she was sitting in their little dwelling-room teaching them the A B C of their own language. Before she left she inquired if they had heard of Jesus, but as they only shook their heads Miss Sahib told them of his birth and something of his life, the same stories which so many of our English children know.

One day they were shown a picture of Jesus on the cross and they were told how much Jesus loved them. The widow, whose name is Shoidamini, exclaimed, "Oh! I love your Jesus, tell me more about Him;" sometimes she would put the lesson books and slate away, and say, "We will spend all the time in talking of Jesus to-day." She could hardly read a word, but after a few weeks, when a Bible was given her, she made rapid progress, studying it night and day.

When her teacher spoke of Jesus coming again, she said, "Yes, that is true, for it says (turning to the Gospel) there were ten virgins—five of them were foolish, and were not ready when the Bridegroom came." It was mentioned that many who hear and read God's Word do not really believe it, "Shorto, shorto" (truly, truly), said Shoidamini, "for Jesus has told us about the sower and the seed." After some time, she said, "I am not allowed to go to my Indian sisters to teach them about Jesus, I would so like to do so; I would tell them all I know, and then they would love Jesus just as much as I do." Directly she saw it written in her Bible that believers were baptized, she begged to be taken in the gari (carriage), but she was told she must pray about it, and tell all who were in the house that she was a believer in Christ.

Do you think it is an easy thing for a Bengali woman to confess Christ by baptism? It is indeed a hard trial; when she becomes a confessed member of Christ's visible Church, in most cases she is counted by her friends and relations as dead; they will not speak to her, eat with her, or even allow her to touch them; her father and mother never speak of her.

In April, each time Shoidamini saw her teacher, she would beg of her to take her away at once, but her teacher would have her count the cost and see if she could give up all for the love of Jesus. At last, after much prayer, it was arranged that she should come to the Mission House, early in the morning of May 5. But God had ordered otherwise. A few days before, He had sent a great trial in that family, and when Shoidamini saw she could comfort and help them, she said, "I am willing to leave them directly this is all over, and I see the family happy again."

Now, why have I written all this? some may ask. I want to know if the young folks in England will help me to build a house for all those who come out from their homes and wish to be trained as Christians. Those who can read, and are suitable, will become teachers, the others must be taught sewing and other means of gaining their livelihood. Last year three Bengalis were baptized in Lucknow, and as we had no home in which to train them, they had to be sent to another mission. We propose building a row of cottages, allotting two rooms for each woman. This will cost about £600. We hope to give to each a bedstead, table, chair and cooking vessels, &c. Now, who will help? Contributions sent "For the Converts' Home, Benares," to Miss T. S. Hamilton, 2, Adelphi-terrace, London, W.C., will most thankfully be received. M. P. MATTHEWS.

THE SANTHAL BOY.

In The Illustrated Christian Weekly, Dr. J. L. Phillips gives a brief account of one of his Jungle boys in India, which cannot fail to interest all good children. He writes:—

A bright lad of fourteen, fresh from the jungles, came into Midnapore, and entered our Santal Training-school. Quick to learn, he soon caught the spirit of the school, and made rapid progress in study. A deep feeling of truly intelligent concern for their soul's welfare was increasing among these Santal lads, and this one began to share it. His clear and pointed questions, his honest and humbling confessions, his very hearty and touchingly earnest prayers, all drew my attention to him, and impressed me that he was to become a chosen vessel for the Master's use. He was one of the first boys to be converted. His heart was filled with light and flooded with love. His joy was calm, and deep, and constant.

One morning, just a few days after his conversion, he came to me and asked for leave to go home. Fancying it was but a fickle notion, a mere whim or a fit of homesickness, such as jungle lads often have, I answered that I could not think of letting him off now, for the term had but just begun, and that when vacation came he should go home like all the other boys. He quietly stepped out of the room, and I thought he was gone, but presently I found him standing on the veranda. Coming up to me again, his voice tremulous with emotion, he said, "Do let me go home now." The reason for his request occurred to me at once, but to test him I said, "Why do you wish to go home now? Tell me freely and I'll think of it."

The big tears began to fall, and for full five minutes he could not speak. Recovering his calmness he said so heartily, "Jesus has pardoned me; my heart is so happy I want to tell my friends about Jesus. My father and mother have never heard his name. Let me go home to tell them now." It was impossible to refuse him this earnest request, so I said, "Go home and we shall pray for you and for your friends." He went and was gone several days. The journey to his jungle home occupied two days, it being forty miles away. This Santal lad came back to us with such a happy heart, having told his friends what Jesus had done for him. And the ripe, rich fruit of his seed-sowing came as one by one, first the mother, then the father, then three brothers and two sisters, all came into the light and into the Church of Christ.

MISSION WORK IN DUBLIN.

I AM thankful to be able to give a very encouraging account of the work of the Dublin Mission among Roman Catholics. At no time have we had freer access to the people in their own abodes and in their coming out to the various meetings, showing an earnest desire for salvation. It is grievous to think of the utter ignorance of the people as regards God's Word. Men and women come to Dublin from various parts of the country, in order to get freedom to search for the truth for themselves. Persecution is rife against such—too sad to detail in this short space.

We have a glorious work amongst the children, more than 1400 are under daily teaching. Day by day we gather in the lambs to the fold, amply rewarded for the toil by the numbers rescued and brought to give their hearts to Jesus. Many are placed out in life and working for God. Some have won the prize, and have entered the heavenly home. How I wish our friends could see the dear ones gathering in morning by morning—little bare feet, scanty clothing, yet joyously partaking of the warm breakfast prepared for them, without which most of them would be hungry all the day.

All who learn God's Word are true and loyal. This has been clearly proved. If we had the means of spreading the Gospel amongst the people, the country would be in a very different position. If friends would come and see the mission work in Dublin and judge for themselves, it would be a great encouragement to the workers. We earnestly ask your prayers and sympathy at this very trying time.—Yours faithfully, ELLEN SMYLY.

SHELTERING HOMES, LIVERPOOL.—Through the kindness of a friend, 300 Liverpool widows recently spent a bright and happy day at New Brighton. The widows' sewing class, where they get tea and sixpence to help with their weekly rent, ceases in the summer, whilst Mrs. Birt is in Canada, supervising the little folk sent out from the Homes. A third party is sailing this week. Prayer is asked for them while at sea, that, as in former times, they may have a safe and speedy voyage.

A HINDOO WIDOW.

In the year 1877 or 1878, during the terrible famine, a Brahminee woman and her little daughter, a child of nine, came to Colar, and were sheltered and provided for. Akkataie, the child, attended the Bible-school. The seed of the Word was sown in her heart, which, like bread cast upon the waters, has been found after many days. She is now a deeply interesting young woman, between eighteen and nineteen years of age, tall and slight, and evidently of a very strong character. Kodanda Row and his wife visited the village last week, and then her mother told him of her child's determination to become a Christian, and dwell among the people of God. She said, "I, too, am willing to give her up;" and she arranged that the girl was to stay with me at the bungalow. The daughter also spoke with him, fixed upon the spot for meeting, whenever he could arrange to come and fetch her. Her last words were: "Come soon; I shall be ready to come whenever you call me."

Akkataie was married to a rich man, and I remember well the day when the overwhelming tidings reached them of his death, and the lamentation because Akkataie was a child widow. Last Monday, May 3, Kodanda Row, with his dear little wife and child, set off in the mission coach for her village twenty-seven miles away. Without help it was impossible for the young girl to escape from her home and come alone all that distance to Colar. Kodanda Row sent one of our faithful lads to her house to inform her of their arrival, and to tell her to meet him a little after 10 p.m. at the appointed spot.

She and her mother, conducted by the lad, arrived there too soon—about 9.30—and, as it was not possible for them to stay there without danger of detection, they hurried back to their village. Kodanda Row arrived a little after 10 p.m., and waited there more than three hours, until 1.30. It was a most trying time, every sound startled them. They were in danger of being taken up as thieves by any passer-by who might give the alarm. Happily, our lad came again to the spot to see if he could find Kodanda Row, and at once went off and again told the mother that Kodanda Row was waiting for Akkataie. But now the mother's mind was changed, and she expressed her unwillingness to let her daughter go. She desired to put it off until the next day. But the lad, Gideon by name, persisted that if she did not go that night she might never get away. The daughter at once expressed her decision to go that night, and so without her mother she started forth with Gideon.

Kodanda Row had nearly given up all hopes of seeing her. They hastened to the mission coach, where Kodanda Row's wife had been waiting so long and so anxiously for her husband's return. The news was spread abroad before Kodanda Row left Colar. Everyone knew that a Brahminee girl was coming, and that Kodanda Row was going to fetch her. It was spoken of in the cutchery at Colar, but no one was stirred up to hinder it being done. Kodanda Row found the object of his errand was known, as he passed on his way, and it seems a miracle that she should now be safe at home in the bungalow. However, as much time was lost by their missing each other, and the roads were very heavy in consequence of rains which fell that night (Kodanda Row had heavy rain to encounter amongst the trying events of that night), he determined to return to Colar another way, lest they should be intercepted on their way back. The Lord gave his angels charge concerning them, as was plainly seen from first to last.

We became very anxious the next day, when they did not appear at the time appointed, and hope died out, and fear that they had suffered violence took its place. I woke up early on Wednesday morning resolved to send someone to inquire after their fate, and then heard the sound of wheels and next the voice of Kodanda Row, assuring me that he had succeeded in his mission. A few hours after, her father arrived. Poor old man, he was in the house the night his daughter left it. Being an aged man, he is a light sleeper; but the Lord let him sleep on that night, and the next morning early he started off for a village unconscious that his daughter had left the house. The news was sent after him, and he walked the whole way in, and arrived at Kodanda Row's house a few hours after he did. He did not ask Kodanda Row for his daughter, he simply followed him from room to room and place to place, and then Kodanda Row asked him why he had come, and what was the matter. And he would answer him fully (for Kodanda Row wanted to tell him how it had taken place, how the proposal to leave was Akkataie's, and, in faithfulness to the Christian's God, he had to give her the help she asked for). The old man simply said that he had come after his two sons who had gone after the lad Gideon. He is still in the town waiting for the arrival of his sons. He does not feel strong enough to meet me alone. He is devoted to her. She is his only daughter. Poor old man. We are so sorry for him. He is such a kind-hearted, generous man. Pray for him that his love for his child may be the means of bringing him to put his sole trust in the God of his child.

Colar, May 7. Louisa H. Anstey.

P.S.—Kodanda Row has just seen the brothers. One is too angry to speak with him; the other says, "Ask her to come back with us for one month, and then we will send her to you." Kodanda Row has asked her, but she firmly declines to go back with them. She does not believe in their sending her back to us. Kodanda Row has invited them to speak with her themselves. They are doing so now; her brothers are weeping. The Lord keep her firm! He has done so. The interview is over, and she firmly refused to go with them.

WOUNDED IN THE FIGHT.

Dear Sir,—At the close of the winter, I was visiting in Ratcliff in company with one of my missionaries. I had only parted with him a few minutes, when he joined me again, but how altered! He had slipped coming down one of the dark staircases, and fallen to the bottom. He was writhing with pain, and could hardly speak, to tell me of the accident. At once I sent him to the London Hospital, hoping there was nothing but what could be put right. He had, however, injured his spine, and after staying there some time, has come out a paralysed man, powerless for service. His sight also is injured.

I am in deep trouble about him. He was a fine, smart, active man, full of life and energy, but is now, through this terrible accident, a physical wreck. He has a wife and four young children dependent on him. I feel in honour bound to make some provision for him. When falling down that dark staircase, he fell as a soldier in a noble battle with want and misery. I purpose, if possible, establishing his wife in some business. The case hardly comes under the general head of "distress," and would moreover require more than my general mission fund could allot to one family. I venture, therefore, to appeal through you for help to provide for one who is to-day shattered in health and strength, and who fell in seeking the rescue of others. Trusting some of your readers may be led to assist, I am, yours truly, Archibald Brown.

HELP FOR SEAMSTRESSES.—Rev. James Munro, superintendent of the Labour Aid Society, 241, Roman-road, Bow, writes in The Pall Mall Gazette:—The plan they are working upon (to take the work direct from the manufacturer and give it out to the poor people, deducting only from his price the cost of foreman, hot presser, and hire of the distributing room) has resulted in giving workers an increase of 5s. per week on their previous earnings. The work we are at present engaged in is trousers, vests, shirts, collars, and cuffs. We have secured work from several large manufacturers, and hope before the end of the week to have 206 seamstresses working under the auspices of our Society. We shall be pleased to have further co-operation and practical sympathy.

A HARMONY of GENESIS and SCIENCE.*

This is a remarkably able work on the harmony of science and religion. We are glad to receive such a work; and yet, is it really needed? In reading it we have been reminded more than once of a saying attributed to the beadle of the late Dr. Macknight, who wrote "A Harmony of the Four Evangelists." While the learned doctor was engaged on that book, a parishioner came to the manse, and asked to see him. The beadle said he was too busy to talk to visitors. "What is he doing?" "Well, he is making four men agree who never fell out." So it is, we think, with men like Mr. Baden-Powell. The facts of nature are God's revelation, the same in kind, though not in degeee, as his written Word. Both are parts of one whole; and all are familiar with the truth that parts of a whole must harmonise. The facts of science do not conflict with revelation: the theories may and do.

In his valuable treatise, Mr. Baden-Powell tells in simple language how far the conclusions of modern science go, and also shows that the fear of these conclusions subverting faith in the Divine Designer is groundless. He proves that the operation of nature is not chance or uncontrolled, but is orderly obedience to the working of intelligent and beneficent will. He maintains that the creation record, while enshrining truth, is not false in fact, but is literally true. A mischievous element of playing with the principles of interpretation is introduced when fact is confused with fable. A fact is a fact: a fable is a fable. "God said," and "God created," must be accepted as sober narrative, and not as parabolic teaching.

The most original part of the book before us is its contention that Genesis does not say anything about a direct and separate creative act. This contention is supported with convincing arguments; and its acceptance sweeps away the basis of the supposed conflict between science and religion. Attention should also be paid to the emphasis laid on the failure of evolution to explain the entrance of life, to connect mind and matter, and to trace the growth of man's self-consciousness and God-consciousness.

We do not know of any fuller and fairer discussion of the problems of creation than this. It never shirks a difficulty, but honestly faces it. Its candour in stating the position of an opponent is only equalled by the strength of the author's conviction that God's Word is the infallible rule of faith and life.

PARIS FOREIGN MISSIONS.

Among the Paris May Meetings was one of representatives of all the Protestant Churches, to consider what line should be taken by the Paris Missionary Society with regard to the new French colonies. M. Bægner, the Society's secretary, and some others argued that missionary work is essentially religious, and should, therefore, be international; others maintained that in missionary effort patriotism should be united to love of souls. The result might be thus summarised:—

Lessouto, in South Africa, must not be abandoned, but the missionaries should seek to prepare a native pastorate to take their place. In Madagascar it must not be thought of to substitute French missions for the societies already at work there; but it might be well for the Government to nominate a French pastor in the island, who should be an intermediary with the English and Norwegian Societies. In the Congo the general sentiment was strong in favour of establishing missions, and M. Bægner at once put himself in communication with M. de Brazza's representative in Paris. M. de Brazza, it is said, desires the help of Protestant missionaries.

A general extension of Colonial Missions was heartily approved of, but greatly increased funds will be necessary to accomplish this.—Christianisme.

CORSICA.—M. Hanneman has lately received the appointment of evangelist and director of the Corsica Mission, of which Mr. Donald Matheson, Queen's-gate, W., is treasurer. Writing from Corté, he says:—The hon. secretary, Mr. Cecil Berger, has been spending the last two months in Corsica, partly in search of health, but principally with a view to organise and establish the mission on a sound footing. He says: "Priests are here omnipotent—nothing less—and it is the most difficult business to get women to attend our hall. The work among the men is very encouraging. Mr. Berger tells me that our little society is at this moment almost devoid of funds to carry on the work; I would venture to ask the readers of The Christian to consider the claims of our work in Corsica.

WHAT SHALL WE DO FOR THE PEOPLE?

By LADY HOPE.

Yes! what shall we do for the people?—for our neighbours?—for those who live near us, around us, on every side, and yet are only too often strangers to us, and (is it not true?) strangers to happiness, and strangers to God? Bitter questions of rancour and distress, discontent and restlessness, often of a nameless kind, are seething in the hearts of thousands of our fellow-countrymen, and in London of our fellow-citizens. Our cup has been sweetened; can we not sweeten many other cups? Oh, yes! those of us who have been labourers in the field for some time have learnt the one efficient means of bringing happiness, and even true content and peace, and definite lasting comforts to both hearts and homes. It is the name of Jesus that effects this blessed work.

Some Christians in one way, some in another, are striving to reach "the masses"—our neighbours, I should say, and I may add, our friends; for so they are, most heartily and truly, when once they know us and understand our aims. As in the case of "the smoky chimney" (described by Peter Parley of our youthful days) a variety of cures was offered, and all were tried, each cure proving successful in its own way; so the great Master and Teacher, to whom we refer for counsel and skill in our undertakings, seems to lay different methods of effectual work upon the hearts and consciences of his different children; and each one He can make successful. Experience in the past, with faith for the present and the future, give us confidence in the sure results of the work He seems to lay before us, and most certainly gives us to do.

I only venture in this paper to describe one phase of answer to this great question. This winter I have heard, more frequently than ever, of instances of blessing, salvation, help and encouragement that have been found from the simple and true records of my pen, in a variety of little books that are known to some of your readers. I have learnt, as I never learnt before, that God has graciously blessed these pages. And to those who have been interested in the facts these books contain I should like to add some of more recent date, especially in connection with Gospel Temperance work.

At a coffee-house, in a distant country town, a crowded gathering of working men was taking place, assembled by their own request. At an early stage of the meeting whispers were raised amongst those in the front seat that "a queer set" had come in to-night, "some very rough characters," and that "men who were there had never been inside a meeting in their lives before." At the close of our hour together, a curious enthusiasm about signing the pledge was manifested amongst the strangers present. "Let us sign!" they said; and they came streaming up to the table, quite a long line of eager faces, while many hands were ready to hold the pen. One man was asked whether he was really in earnest about this new decision. His answer was, "I am in earnest;" and then he drew out of his pocket a bottle, which he presented to one of the ladies of our party, saying, "I always get this filled on a Saturday night, and take it home to the missus. But not to-night. No, never again! never again, God helping me!" This was nearly three years ago, and never since then has that poor man tasted of the spirits that had so nearly ruined him. His life, his home, his wife, became entirely changed, and now he has placed no less than £60 in the savings bank. A marvellous testimony to the fact that "the blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich." For his condition was only that of a poor cobbler.

Many others signed on that evening; and many have, I believe, kept firm, but others have fallen, lacking strength, and finding themselves beset by temptations on every side.

Now, where we have our temperance work backed up by coffee saloons such as those that I have tried and found so successful in different places, these beginners in the new life are helped and strengthened to overcome the difficulties that must ever surround them, and especially at their first start in the narrow way.

PROTESTANT SCHOOLS IN EGYPT AND PALESTINE.

One of the happiest features of a three months' tour through Egypt and Palestine was undoubtedly the signs of an increase in the vital power of Christianity, as seen in the training of boys and girls in Protestant schools. Thousands of children have been rescued from Mahommedanism, and have been taught to love the Saviour. This work among children cannot be overestimated. It is mainly due to the devotion and zeal of Christian women that the work has reached its present large proportions.

MISS WHATELY'S SCHOOL AT CAIRO.

On Sunday afternoon, March 7, I had the privilege of spending some time with Miss Whately. I was much struck by the devotion with which she spoke of the work, which is not only arduous, but often places her in most dangerous positions. Anyone who knows Cairo would testify to this, for even the strongest men would think twice before venturing into such places as Miss Whately feels it her duty to enter. Of course, she has to use great caution—for not only would she suffer, but the men and women who through her instrumentality have been converted to Christianity would suffer too. Space will not permit me to enlarge upon Miss Whately's work among adults, but it is one which deserves unqualified support. Her special work is undoubtedly among children, hundreds of whom have been brought to the knowledge of the true God.

The school premises are large, solid, and suitably adapted; the children are taught reading, spelling, singing, elementary arithmetic, geography, and history; but their spiritual welfare is the main consideration. They are taught to commit to memory and to repeat Bible verses, Bible stories, and hymns, and to look to Jesus Christ as their pattern and their Redeemer. The fathers sometimes give Miss Whately great pain and trouble by refusing to let their children continue to attend her school. In the end, however, Miss Whately's influence generally prevails, and she has seldom had to part with a scholar, except when death has summoned some little one away to a brighter world. I would like to impress upon all Christian friends the great need of more interest being taken in this work, which is elevating the status of the Cairo children, and helping to spread far and wide the knowledge of our Saviour. Miss Whately is very anxious to raise £200, towards buying a large boat in which to extend her work up the Nile. Many of us can show our interest in her work, by sending to her in a registered letter (care of British Consul, Cairo, Egypt) a few pounds, which, though but a small sum, will help materially towards the prosecution of so good a cause.

MISS ARNOTT IN JAFFA.

Everybody who takes any interest in Protestant schools in the East must have heard of the one founded in 1863 by Miss Arnott. This school is not under the auspices of any particular Society, but owes its present flourishing condition solely to Miss Arnott's persevering exertions. Her efforts have been so successful that a piece of land has been purchased, on which a large substantial house has been erected. There are over fifty pupils in the day-school; about sixty persons meet every Sunday for Protestant worship, and thirteen boarders are in training as teachers. £10 per annum is the cost of maintaining and thoroughly educating a girl in the house. Children who would otherwise have grown up in ignorance and degradation have become devoted Christians and useful workers in the Lord's vineyard. Those who have travelled in the East, and are able to form an opinion of the awful degradation to which the women are subjected, can realise to some extent the need of such an institution as this. Miss Arnott's institution will do a great deal towards promoting female education in that part of Palestine.

RAMLEH.

This is a small village about six hours' ride from Jaffa, on the way to Jerusalem. I was rejoiced to find that, even here, there were two Protestant schools, one for girls and one for boys. Those who say that Mohammedanism is making greater progress than Protestantism would do well to pay a visit to Palestine and see these schools. Christianity is indeed making rapid strides there; it is spreading over the country north, south, east and west. I was particularly struck with the earnest pleasant faces of the boys in this Ramleh school. There were about forty altogether, most of them tiny little follows between three and ten years of age. The head-teacher seemed an intelligent man, evidently interested in the progress of his pupils. The children sang one or two Arabic hymns. Then they sang for my special benefit, one of our English Sunday-school hymns, with a good deal of pathos and expression. It was a new thing for me to hear Arabic boys singing the praises of Jesus; intelligently answering questions about his life, and pointing out on the map the places He had visited in the course of his ministry on the earth. After seeing the boys I paid a very short visit to the girls, who also seemed happy and interested in their studies. They looked neat and clean in their plain linen frocks. They, too, seemed to answer all the questions submitted to them by their teacher, a young lady of about eighteen or nineteen, with perfect accuracy. From Ramleh I went to Jerusalem, and in another communication I hope to give some account of the Protestant schools in that city.

ENGLISH GIRLS IN PARIS.

Last week, at the invitation of Lady Mary Glyn, a number of ladies and gentlemen assembled at the vicarage, Kensington, to hear an account from Miss Leigh of her work among English girls and children in Paris. After a few introductory remarks from the chairman, Hon. and Rev. E. Carr-Glyn, Miss Leigh gave a sketch of the history of the work, which has now assumed large proportions. She narrated many very touching anecdotes of the terrible destitution to which English girls are but too often subjected after a brief experience of Parisian life. Hundreds of girls went to Paris for the purpose of obtaining a livelihood as governesses, shop assistants, and ladies' maids, and were immediately surrounded by evil influences of every kind. A shop-girl arriving at a French business house from England frequently had at once to change her name, because to French ears it would be too harsh and dissonant. "Quel nom affreux!" would be the exclamation of madame on learning the name of her new employée; and so, if it were Ann, it must be altered to Annette, or the girl might choose any name she pleased on one condition—it must be pretty. The surname was dropped, the Christian name was altered or changed, and so it often happened that the friends of an English girl, if they lost her in Paris, lost with her almost every means of identification.

Since the foundation of the Home, in 1872, over 4000 girls had been admitted, and many of these had been assisted to return to England, or had been placed in situations. There were, besides the Home, a free registry for those requiring situations, a sanitorium, a Young Women's Christian Association, a Governesses' and Artists' Association, an Orphanage, an Infants' Kindergarten and Day-school, besides other minor agencies for good. Miss Leigh concluded by an earnest appeal to those who were present to interest themselves in behalf of English girls in Paris.

Lady Elizabeth Biddulph, a member of Miss Leigh's London Committee, made a few remarks, and on behalf of the Kensington Association, expressed the hope that many ladies in Kensington would do what was in their power to further the work which is being carried on by Miss Leigh. Lady Elizabeth Biddulph stated that she would be pleased to receive subscriptions, which might be sent to her at 19, Ennismore-gardens, W.

Messrs. JONES & SMALL in BALTIMORE.

The meetings began in the Biddle-street Rink, on Sunday afternoon a week ago, says a correspondent in the New York Independent of May 20; those who could get into the great building sat listening to a man whose moral fearlessness was only equalled by his wit and pathos, and whose holy indignation burned with a flame like that which lights up the darkness of Old Testament times, and in the New made Herod wince and Felix tremble. Mr. Jones and Mr. Small are both men God, and so they are filled with a sense of the sinfulness of sin and of the mighty patience which heaven alone could have toward men. Thus their severest condemnation of the sins of professing Christians is always tempered with a love of the human soul and a sense of its value which must ever characterise a true evangelist. While the terrors of the law and the judgments of God are very sternly preached, especially to Christians, the Gospel which has been heard is one of exceedingly glad tidings to every soul which is honest with itself. From the most illustrious of the number of scholars whom one finds in attendance upon their ministry, unto the hard-worked street labourer, who gets his evening for the Rink meeting, there is one voice of testimony as to the singular power of these plain and earnest men to rouse the conscience to the point where the whole man feels like crying, "Lord, be merciful to me a sinner!"

Large numbers have felt that the eloquent attacks upon dancing and the terrible indictments of "progressive euchre," and the fearful excoriations of the theatre, as "Christian exercises and institutions," were rather severe, until by their side the Cross of Jesus, with its significance to the soul, its meaning to God, and its message to the heart of man, has been lifted up; under it have been read again and again the solemn promises which church members have made to "flee the world, the flesh, and the devil;" and then the soul has recognised the awful burden of responsibility, and the great peril in which it placed other souls. Many a pastor in this city has rejoiced in the warm hand which has pressed his tired hands, and the promise which has declared itself when some hitherto useless man of his church has said: "Henceforth count on me for any service for the Master." This, unquestionably, has been the first result of these meetings to many churches.

Baltimore is conservative to the core. She has scarcely ever had her "first families" so disturbed by a meeting as by this. Yet with all this conservatism, and "the unfortunate way" Mr. Jones has of saying the most unpleasant truths, it is a surprise to the body-guard of dignity and propriety to find that these vast congregations are growing finer in quality, and, above all, that good is being done. For these audiences are not at all the sort of audiences which it was expected would assemble around Sam Jones. It is easily seen that the man who supposed that the intelligent business men of Baltimore and many of the thoughtful people of the city could not stand these services made a great mistake. The truth is that fashionable persons, college professors, leading pastors of the Episcopal and Presbyterian Churches, to whom these people talk, join with the vast throng of intelligent men and women who attend these meetings in saying that this preaching of righteousness and rousing of conscience, in the presence of the cross of Christ, breaks through the elegant barriers which have kept the words of other ministers out, and holds before the mind an ethical ideal and motive which they must respect.

No one has heard Mr. Jones three times who does not believe him to be a messenger of God and who does not indorse his fearlessness and confess his genius. Never was he more resistless than he was against the liquor traffic. The grand audience rose and swayed like the waves of the sea; and when at last he massed his indignation and pathos, his love of men and his hate of their foe, the great wave of enthusiasm rolled on the shore and left nothing but its triumph. Man after man, young and middle aged, went to the earnest man and promised with tears their hearts to God. Another great moment in the history of every heart which was present occurred when Mr. Jones spoke of dancing. It was a most eloquent plea for purity. He stepped to the front and his voice rang out: "If I could, I would build a wall a mile high around the virtue of every girl." The building was shaken with applause and many a man declared that Mr. Jones was right and true-hearted.

These men seem very honest, fearless, and pious. They are men of wonderful spiritual power. They seem sure of victory, and Sunday, at the prison and at the Rink, promised the most desirable results. "Never," said Mr. Small, a week ago, "have we had such co-operation and such prospects." Every night many persons seek the inquiry-room, and hundreds have already been persuaded to begin, in the name and by the power of Christ, the new life. Sunday and Monday were the great days of the meeting. Sunday, Mr. Jones preached to five thousand men on the commandments. The Rink does not begin to hold the crowds. The city is thoroughly aroused and great good is done.

THE ROCK OF GIBRALTAR.

Dear Mr. Morgan,—I should be glad if you could find space in your next issue of The Christian for one or two items concerning the Lord's work here.

During the past few weeks special Gospel meetings have been held both at the Institute and also at the Mission Home, conducted by Mrs. Osborn, of Glasgow, with, we have reason to believe, blessed results. Many of the soldiers have openly testified to their conversion to God, while others have been quickened to newness of life. The meetings have been in many cases overcrowded. At present there is no mission room in the garrison capable of holding more than sixty persons, and a great need is felt for more accommodation.

We have at last secured the site for the new Institute in the main street, and commence building (D.V.) in a few weeks, when we hope to have a mission room capable of holding 200 persons. The site alone has cost us about £1,300, so that any help will be most welcome. The last mails from Egypt brought five letters from men who look back upon the Institute as the place of their new birth, some of them as far back as 1882. Nearly every mail from the East brings some cheering letter from a soldier, testifying to blessing received while stationed here, so that we are much encouraged to go forward.

Since your visit to the Rock, two at least new wine and beer licences have been granted, one to the new buildings in the Alemada, and the other to the new Soldiers' Recreation Rooms, so that now the only place in the garrison where the men can resort without intoxicating drink is the Institute; we want, therefore, to provide, as soon as possible, a counter attraction worthy of the name.

We rejoice to see the moral effect of the Criminal Law Amendment Act. Oh that we might be able to speak of its effect here also! Why does it not apply to the Colonies? for, although girls of a certain age are licensed here from the country for the purpose of prostitution, we have good reason to believe that many of tender years are offered up as unwilling victims also. I am informed that procuresses scour the villages for fresh victims and bring in numbers who are not licensed. I saw a sad sight the other day, of a young country girl, now licensed here, walking in the Alemada, dressed out in silk and jewellery, but looking wretched and a perfect wreck. Only a few months ago I frequently met her, in cotton gown, coming in from the country, a most beautifully handsome Spanish girl, the picture of youthful innocence, but now, alas! fast hurrying to the grave. I could multiply these cases, but, oh! it makes me wild to think of them—too often as victims to man's base treachery. "How long, O Lord, how long?" Wilt Thou not avenge these outraged innocents?

Mrs. Holmes and I hope to be in London the latter part of next month. We want to be at the Conference (Mildmay).—Yours in Christian fellowship, Geo. Holmes.

The Soldiers' Institute, May 27.

MR. SPURGEON (who is now much better) reports that during his illness large sums have come into the Orphanage treasury, and he has also received notice of the first American legacy ever left for any of his institutions. As soon as the necessary documents can be signed and returned, £100, left for the Orphanage by a gentleman in New Jersey, will be duly forwarded.

SOUTH CENTRAL RUSSIA.

My journey to Tiflis and its neighbourhood as far as Baku, on the borders of the Caspian Sea, has been greatly owned of God. There are open doors for the Gospel everywhere, and there is much more liberty on the other side of the Kaukasus than in Russia Proper. But what is to become of the nations who are crowded together in that beautiful country, so near the cradle of the human race? There are Tartars, Grusians, Georgians, Greeks, Turks, Persians, Armenians, besides Russians, Germans, Jews—each known by their attire and habit of living. Tiflis is a beautiful city, where all these nationalities may be met every day; but who cares for their souls? We know that God loves them as much as He loves us, but they have never been told of his love.

The three weeks I spent in Trans-Kaukasia I have had the joy of sowing the seed with full hands right and left amongst Germans and Russians Now I am nearing home by slow degrees. Here in Sevastopol, with its many thousands of soldiers, sailors, and dock-labourers, I have had a glorious opportunity for giving the Word of Life by the wayside. It is something so novel to give away books in Russia that you only have to begin with a few, and very shortly a crowd will gather around you. The Society for the Free Distribution of Scriptures (Mrs. Robertson, 1, Oakhill-park, Hampstead) is doing a noble work in Russia, and the British and Foreign Bible Society claim a generous share in it by their liberality. A New Testament (people's edition) is published at 25 kopekes, and is supplied to me on Mrs. Robertson's grant at half-price, i e., 12½ kopekes, so that I have been able to distribute freely at the rate of 8 New Testaments for 1 rubel (2s.), or 80 for £1.

To-morrow I hope to leave this for Odessa, and after a short stay at that place and a visit to Rabinowitch, I hope to re-cross the Russian frontier in a few days. My address will then be, Hotel Black Horse, Prague, Bohemia, but only for a few days, as I have to hasten home after an absence of nearly five months. What an accumulation of debt do we not owe to the nations of the earth. "Oh, forgive us our debt! For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory. Amen."—Yours,

Sevastopol, May 27. F. W. Baedeker.

P.S.—In the short notice in The Christian of May 20 there is a slight misprint. Instead of "woe to the foot," your paper has "woe to the fool."

HOME WORK FOR UNEMPLOYED.

A movement was commenced by the writer some five years ago which gives profitable employment to a number of poor ladies in their own homes. Their work requires a large quantity of cardboard and other boxes, and it is proposed instead of procuring them as heretofore, from foreign sweaters resident in London, to make the boxes at home.

With this view, an inexpensive workshop has been taken, where the novices will be taught by an experienced person, and the workers will be paid fair wages. The necessary scoring and cutting machinery, straw boards, wood pulp, and coloured paper, &c., will have to be bought, in such quantities as will command wholesale prices and to guarantee wages for, at least, one month. Any sum advanced by those willing to help the work will be placed to the credit of the lenders and will be repaid in kind any day after August 15, at the usual market rates. Whatever sum is thus contributed will be personally guaranteed by the writer.

CRYSTAL PALACE TEMPERANCE FETE.—The leading temperance organisations in the country have agreed to hold a united demonstration at the Crystal Palace, on Tuesday, July 13. The programme is of unusual interest and variety, and surpasses in these respects anything attempted on former occasions. No intoxicating drinks are to be sold at the bars. Excursion trains will run from nearly a thousand provincial stations.

NEWS FROM THE AUSTRALIAN BUSH.

In my last letter, about seven months ago, I described the country around here as looking so lovely in its spring-tide bloom. None of our children loved the wild flowers more than our dear wee Maggie, and many a one called her the flower of our flock. Before the last of the heath bells and sweet perfumed wattle blossoms were gone, we laid her in her grave. That dread disease, diphtheria, carried her off when she was a few weeks beyond seven years old. It was agonising to watch her sufferings, especially towards the end, but no murmur escaped her lips. The day before she died, she said "good-bye" to her brothers and sisters, and, throwing one arm round her mother's neck and the other round mine, sweetly said, "I love Jesus, Jesus loves me; and He is taking me home to Himself." The last hymn she learned was "Jesus, lover of my soul." Our loving Heavenly Father sustained us wonderfully during the trial, thanks be to his name.

A TIME OF DROUGHT.

At this date, the country around is altogether changed in appearance. For a long while our sky has been as brass and our earth as iron, and the rain of our land has been powder and dust. In many places about, there has been nothing for stock to subsist on for months, and the cattle and sheep have been sold at low prices or removed elsewhere, probably to linger out a miserable existence, or die on the roads. Water has been scarce, and I know of people carting it ten miles for drinking purposes, and others driving horses an equal distance, daily, to water. Sheep have perished by the hundred, perhaps by the thousand in some districts. Here we are in great straits; some of our sheep are dying off daily, and, if rain does not soon come, our losses will be calamitous. We have never yet had such a severe experience. The drought came on suddenly and unexpectedly to most people. But this colony seems frequently to suffer from droughts, and a mere passer-by, seeing the country in its luxurious season, has no idea to what it may be reduced by a couple of dry months, especially after a dry winter.

Many reading such books as "Oceana," or the quotation from it in your issue of February 18, might be seriously misled as to the general character of this land. Not many days ago I had a visitor here, who had but recently left his editorial work at home, and, having read glowing accounts, came to reside in this part of the world. His ideas are much altered since coming here; and, seeing the country in its present state, he will be inclined to run it down altogether as a barren, droughty colony.

Here, as well as in the old country, there is much depression in business. The last crops have been failures in many parts of Australia; the serious fall in the wool market has caused heavy losses and now this drought is telling terribly on stock-owners. Many unemployed labourers also are seeking work in vain. There is distress out here as well as at home, but it is comparatively small in degree and extent.

We were much touched in the reading of Mr. Mr. George Holland's address on "Starving London," and particularly so by his account of the poor Scotch family. Mr. Holland's portrait is a very speaking likeness, and I can almost imagine I hear him saying, as he often did when parting, "Pray for me." Those words used to make me wonder at his humility, and send me away reflecting on the estimation that this holy man had of prayer. On one of my last visits he told me Miss Brown was his able lieutenant. I remember her as a gentle, timid, retiring school-girl in Scotland. I recollect her as a successful teacher of little children at George-yard School, and, from the happy yet serious way in which she influenced some rough fellows one night at another mission-place, I do not wonder at the success of her Bible-class for men which you record. God bless George Holland and his helpers in their noble work. It must be a great pleasure to the readers of The Christian at home to receive the weekly portraits of well-known Christian workers, but to those of us in far-off lands it is positively delightful. We hope some day to see those of many others whom we know.

A TIME OF REVIVAL.

During the past few months we have had quite a refreshing time of it, spiritually, in these parts. Special and peculiar men and methods are required for religious work in sparsely-inhabited districts and outlying townships in the Australian bush. I have previously mentioned some of the work done by the Bush Mission. I will now say something of a special missioner—"a free lance," I suppose he would be called at home. In Orange, a railway township about fifty miles from this, lived a bank manager named Poulton. Rev. Dr. Somerville held evangelistic services in that town which Mr. Poulton, then an Episcopalian, attended. He was aroused, convicted, and, if not converted, began to live a better life. Thomas Spurgeon was in Orange not long afterwards, and Mr. Poulton received further light and blessing to his soul, and was soundly converted. As he openly confessed his faith in Christ by baptism, and became a street preacher, many said the man was mad!

He left his situation in the bank, and eventually became pastor of the Baptist flock in Orange. All along he preached in the streets, and on more than one occasion was fined at the police-court for so-called obstruction of the roadway. From my own experience, and what I have read, I think there is no place where greater freedom in open-air preaching is enjoyed than in London. But still Mr. Poulton unflinchingly carried on this work. He also preached at various out-stations with great acceptance, and I have met several people who have blessed God that ever Mr. Poulton came and spoke to them.

For some time back he has given up the charge at Orange, and has carried on a somewhat more extended work, taking Molong as a centre. The converts brought in at Orange formed the nucleus for Salvation Army work in that place, which is now being pushed on with much vigour greatly to the joy of Mr. Poulton. One day I was driving down a road in the township of Parkes. In the distance I observed a horseman crossing the thoroughfare. He looked up, and I thought it was Mr. Poulton. I saw him diving into his pocket for a tract, and as I pulled up my horses he was about to offer it; but, recognising me, he handed me another, entitled, "The Way of Holiness"—a subject in which he is deeply interested—as also in the baptism of the Spirit, which he reckons a higher blessing than holiness. After a conversation, he said, "Well, let's have a word of prayer," and there, in the middle of the road, he on horseback and I sitting in my buggy, he offered a fervent petition for mutual blessing and the glory of God. I afterwards learnt that he had held open-air services in Parkes, and large numbers had listened to his message with great profit to themselves.

His whole demeanour strikes one at that of a man thoroughly in earnest. He is one who is certainly living Christ to the people, and Brother Stead would shake him heartily by the hand if he met him. He holds meetings in small chapels and farms along the way, on his journeys, and many are brought to decision for Christ. His work in Molong at present is, to a large extent, carried on in the open air. Helpers have arisen who join him in bringing in the outsiders to hear the Gospel in the hall. Recently, a Wesleyan revival mission was held in that township, and the two missionaries were most cordial in their relationships. Each announced the meetings of the other, and Mr. Poulton attended some of the services held by the Wesleyans. The Presbyterian minister also encouraged the work by his presence. This is grand, to see the ministers of various sections of the Church of Christ helping a denominational evangelist. Whilst special evangelists, such as Mr. Moody, Dr. Somerville, Bishop Taylor, Rev. A. B. Earle, and others have done noble work wherever they have gone, still there appears to be plenty of room for the denominational evangelist; the labours of Mr. Aitken and Mr. Haslam in the Episcopalian section, Mr. Champness in the Wesleyan, and many others are specially blessed to those bodies amongst which they have worked.

In the New South Wales Wesleyan Church there is a Conference evangelist, Rev. James A. Bowring, who has been specially set apart for that work. He seems to be the right man in the right place, too. After his work at Molong he was to devote eight days to Parkes, and I had the privilege of driving him part of the way. Rev. Joseph Tarn, of Parkes, drove out to my place, and I drove him over to meet the evangelist about sixteen miles off. He arrived at the roadside inn almost at the same moment as we did, being driven by Rev. Mr. Allen, of Molong. As I have shown in Mr. Poulton's case how evangelists from home had been used by God to stir up another in the field, so here again I must record my joy in learning almost at once that it was much through the influence, encouragement, and faith of Mr. Edwin Good (whom some of us knew in London as a mission worker, and who has become more prominent even in Melbourne) that Mr. Bowring was brought out, and became a Gospel preacher.

After dinner we held a little service with the few who were about. There was an American organ in the parlour, and Mr. Bowring, being a good musician, did the "Sankey" as well as the "Moody" part of the service. Soon after, we drove back to my station, where Mr. Bowring held a service in the evening. A few of the neighbours rode over, and enjoyed the meeting along with those of us here, and all were refreshed. Next day Mr. Tarn drove him to Parkes, where he held an eight days' mission. I had the pleasure of being present three nights. It was like old times again We sang and spoke in the open-air, then marched along singing to the church. At first people didn't quite understand the thing, but even from the beginning several came forward anxious to find Christ. As usual, some of the most unexpected got the blessing they required, and most of those who came forward first were the country folk, but towards the close of the mission a large number of the township people were pressing into the kingdom, some of them so much moved as to rush forward without waiting to be asked. At the thanksgiving meeting many grand testimonies to the power of God's Gospel were given; so many had a note of praise, and so many more "came out" for salvation, that it was rather after midnight before the people would be dispersed.

Brother Tarn has now the responsibility of strengthening and building up the converts. He is an earnest soul, of the evangelistic style himself. I accompanied him to an outlying chapel, where the Spirit of God came down in power as soon as the service began. In fact, it seemed easy to move people, and when Mr. Tarn preached at Forbes, another township, during the mission in his own church in Parkes, a number came forward in great distress of soul, and several found peace in believing in Jesus. Mr. Bowring is in Forbes now carrying on the work. There is at present no resident minister for a week or two, but no doubt the work will go on well. There is nothing like nightly services and drawing in the net for bringing souls to decision.

Mr. Bowring generally devotes Saturday night to a Gospel Temperance meeting, and many don the bit of blue as well as find salvation at these services. He is a fresh-looking man, of about thirty-one years of age; he has a gentle, quiet manner, and one is reminded in his presence of the text, "He that believeth shall not make haste." He occasionally sings a solo with marked effect. He takes a slight rest between each verse, which gives emphasis to the message conveyed in the words. In this respect he is like Mr. Sankey, but he has not the large chest of Mr. Sankey, nor the powerful physique of Mr. Moody, and could not stand too long a strain of work. I believe he will, under God's guidance and blessing, be instrumental in the conversion of many in New South Wales. He takes advantage of his services to impress believers with the necessity of holiness to the Lord, and has been useful in freshening up many of the Lord's own people. The first address on that subject, given at Exeter Hall by Rev. Mark Guy Pearse, is very practical and faithful. D. M. Logan.

THE prospects of a speedy union between the divided branches of the Presbyterian Church in Scotland do not look particularly bright. It was stated in the Assembly of the Established Church that, in 1879, an acknowledgment of their reply to the overtures of 1878 was forwarded to the Free Church, in which regret was expressed that the attitude of the Dissenting Churches did not encourage the hope that further negotiations would bear fruit. Matters have not been improved by the Disestablishment agitation.

Dr. Cunningham's closing address was remarkable for the precision and force with which it gave expression to the ideas and tendencies which mark his Church. The fault was that, if the ideal he set up be carried out, truth of doctrine may be sacrificed to a false catholicity. It laid great stress on the alleviation of the miseries of this life, but said little or nothing about the saving of souls. Dr. Cunningham is not anxious that the Church should grow in spirituality—at least he does not say so—but he is anxious that it should grow "in tolerance, in catholicity, in breadth of view, in beauty of worship." He makes the boast that "for nearly half a century no minister of the Church of Scotland has been deposed for heresy." He forgets that this does not imply the absence of unsoundness of doctrine, but may tell a terrible tale of the laxity of discipline in his Communion. The celebrated "Scotch Sermons" warrant the belief that some heretics are safely sheltered in his fold. He welcomes the contributions that recent speculations have made to our knowledge of man, his origin, his history, and his destiny, and says that they have "not only modified our old theological conceptions, but may almost be said to have created a new theology." Such a statement, from a man who fills the Moderator's chair and professes to be the mouthpiece of his brethren, does not augur well for the spiritual vitality or future usefulness of the Church he represents.

The Foreign Mission Report of the Free Church was peculiarly interesting this year. It showed that the aim of the agency during the past months has been to consolidate and extend the work committed to its care. In India, Africa, and the new Hebrides much blessing has been experienced. The revenue was never so large. It amounted to £97,229, £12,000 of which was a donation from a generous doctor in Rutherglen. The evening devoted to addresses by missionaries was characterised by enthusiasm and hopefulness. The large hall was crowded, and the speakers were in thorough accord with their subjects. The Hon. Ion Keith-Falconer, a son of the late Lord Kintore, who has entered on a self-sacrificing mission to the Mohammedans of Arabia, excited deep attention. He gave his hearers the feeling that they were listening to a man filled with a dominant purpose in life. Dr. Laws, who is returning to Livingstonia, made a stirring appeal on behalf of the natives of Africa, 700 of whom, he said, pass into eternity every hour, only two of whom have heard the Gospel. The Moderator raised the enthusiasm of the gathering to its climax by an impressive charge to four missionaries on the eve of departure for the foreign field. The memory of his burning words and thrilling tones will not be readily forgotten by those who listened in the fading light to the old man eloquent.

A very interesting incident in connection with the Assembly meetings was the presentation of a Chinese and English Bible to the Marquis Tseng, by Rev. J. E. Somerville, on behalf of his father, the Moderator. The Chinese statesman's cordial acceptance of the gift will, we hope, prove prophetic of the day when his country will make the Bible the model of its laws and the rule of its national life.

It is very significant of the growth of the belief in evangelistic work in the Highlands that members of upwards of twenty Presbyteries in the far north should have consulted as to the best means of persuading Dr. Somerville to undertake a preaching tour through their parishes. Highlanders used to be strongly opposed to special evangelistic efforts. But times have changed. The outpouring of God's spirit and a quickened sense of the needs of the day have led them to see that evangelistic work is a necessity. Their request reached Dr. Somerville through Principal Rainy, and met with a cordial response. Expectations of much blessing are cherished.

The Moderator's closing address dealt with the duties and qualifications of the ministry. (Extracts are given on another page.) It was an address rich in counsel, and aglow with spiritual intensity, and formed a fitting close to an Assembly of much promise.

PRESBYTERIAN MISSIONS IN CANADA.

WITH respect to the agencies at work in this part of Canada, Rev. D. D. McLeod of Barrie, Ontario, writes:—The Presbyterian Church has about fifty mission stations throughout Muskoka, and in all of these, as far as we can overtake them, the Gospel is preached, at least during a portion of the year. The settlers there are poor; if any friends cared to help God's work among them, I would be happy to be the means of communicating with them.

As to Indians of the North-West, about which some correspondents have lately written to you, much more needs to be done. Our Government has treated them shamefully, and has brought dishonour upon the country by the manner in which the Indians have been dealt with. Still the churches have not been idle. The Presbyterian Church has done much for these poor people, where she has missions among them. Last year about £500 worth of clothing was distributed among them. This year there will probably be more. We have some ten or eleven missionaries at work among them. We are establishing an industrial school on one of the Reserves. The English, the Methodist, and the Roman Catholic Churches have each missions to these Indians.

I do not write to weaken the appeal of your lady correspondents from Brandon and Beulah. There is a large field of usefulness for Christian women among the Indians, wherever they can be reached. It is encouraging to find that our country women of the North-West are beginning to take up the cause of these despised and most unjustly used people.

MR. WILLIAM NOBLE IN HONOLULU.

A CORRESPONDENT sends an interesting detailed account of Mr. Noble's visit to Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, where he stayed for a month on his way to Australia. He was invited under the joint auspices of the Y.M.C.A. and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The mission lasted two weeks, and good was done. The audiences were composed chiefly of Americans, who are much less demonstrative than their English kin, but Mr. Noble has left lasting impressions here which will have practical results. There has never before been such a mission in Honolulu, and though many Christians were most deeply interested in the work, others failed to see the importance of such a special effort. It is only a little over a year since any organised attempt has been made to combat drinking and the liquor traffic at the Sandwich Islands, so that public sentiment is not yet strong against liquor interests and the vice of drinking. Temperance is not yet popular, but the sentiment is growing in favour and influence. The lectures of Mr. Noble have stimulated and encouraged Christians, and they will doubtless have more faith in the future to carry on what at times has seemed an unequal warfare against the evils of intemperance.

Perhaps the greatest good was done in meetings outside of the lecture course held for men at different places. The Honolulu Iron Works employ a large number of men, the majority of the foreigners being from the "old country." They were glad to hear Mr. Noble speak; after one address to them given at their noon hour at the Works, they were urgent for him to come again. The result of these addresses was that many of the men signed the pledge, some for the first time. The keeper of a saloon paid an emphatic testimony to the good Mr. Noble did, when he said, "He wished that man would leave the place; he was not doing half the business he did before Mr. Noble came." Mr. Noble has been the means of bringing peace and joy and hope to homes where these had long been unknown, and warm prayers from Honolulu will follow wherever he goes.

MR. SAMUEL MORLEY, who was recently elected Chairman of the Congregational Union for 1887, has, says The Nonconformist, after anxious deliberation, felt himself unable to accept the appointment. His decision is mainly based on the state of his health, which, though greatly improved, is not robust enough to allow of his acceptance of contingent responsibilities he would otherwise have felt it an honour to undertake, especially as the opportunity would have been afforded him of laying before the Assembly his views on some social questions which he regards as of paramount importance to all Christian citizens.

MESSRS. MOODY & WHITTLE IN NEW JERSEY.

PLAINFIELD, a city already greatly blessed in her religious life and privileges, has been especially favoured for the past week by the presence of Major Whittle, Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, and Mr. Moody. I name the evangelistic quaternion in this order because of its chronological accuracy, giving to the chief the last place. Major Whittle arrived, and began his work, on Sunday, May 9. He was accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan. Mr. Moody arrived on Saturday, and will remain for a few days. The interest in the meetings has been great; overflow meetings have been a necessity; the daily morning prayer-meetings are well attended; a daily children's meeting, under the skilful direction of Major Whittle, with his ingenious object lessons in practical theology, has attracted large attention. Major Whittle is a man of great simplicity, profound earnestness, sound common sense, has tact in dealing with children and adults, and makes constant and wise use of the Word of God. Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan are a surprise to me. Although I had heard of them for years, I do not remember having heard them sing before. They enunciate with distinctness, sing with expression and power, and add greatly to the spiritual tone of the meetings.

Of my old friend Mr. Moody, I am in danger of speaking with an ardour born of personal affection. I met him first at the door of the old Clark-street church in the city of Chicago in the fall of 1857, when I went to attend the Illinois State Sunday-school Convention. Mr. Moody was young, almost boyish looking, exceedingly active in his position as a member of the committee, and gave me, at that time a perfect stranger, a brother's welcome. After that I met him often in Chicago, in connection with Y.M.C.A. and Sunday-school meetings. We went to City Point together under the Christian Commission in the spring of 1865. We crossed the Continent on a Sunday-school mission in April 1871; attended the California State Convention at San Jose, spoke together in the great Mormon Tabernacle at Salt Lake on the return. In the summer of 1872 I met him again in London, and went with him across the Channel to Dublin, where we spent several days in the delightful fellowship of Mr. Bewley and his family. For several years I have seen but little of Mr. Moody; and it is a peculiar pleasure to me, in the privacy of personal fellowship, to study the effects of these years of growth and honour which have swept over him. . .

He is a model for ministers. No one should attempt to imitate him. No one can successfully imitate him. But in him may be seen what a man can do who devotes himself to the study of the Holy Scriptures with a desire to reach the hearts of men. And if this one idea could be impressed upon every minister in America, upon the students of every theological seminary in every branch of the Church, so that there might be a more diligent study of the Word of God, the world would see marvellous practical results during the next decade. Mr. Moody ought to visit and preach and lecture before every synod, general assembly, convention, convocation, conference, and theological seminary in the land. May God long spare his life to bless all branches of the church!—Dr. J. H. Vincent, in New York "Independent."

SAILORS AT MADEIRA.—In the notice of Mr. Smart's work at Funchal, Madeira, it should have been stated that the Bible and Tract Depôt, which the priests are endeavouring to get closed, is in connection with the British and Foreign Bible Society and the Religious Tract Society.

SAVE THE GIRLS.—Rev. Thomas Davies, Congregational minister, writes to The Pall Mall Gazette from Wykeham House, Barking:—Will you very generously help us to make known the exceptional distress under which we are at present suffering at Barking? Our jute factory has stopped permanently, we believe and among the many thrown out of employment are about 800 young girls. Most of these are utterly destitute, and unless something can be done for them without delay many of them will be driven by hunger upon the streets. Will any of your readers help us to save them? We are trying to get employment for some of them as domestic servants; a few have found situations; but the very best thing which could be done for a large number of them would be to help them to emigrate. Unfortunately, the cost stands in the way. Girls could be sent to the colonies for £5 (this includes £1 which they would receive on landing). We are far too poor to do anything locally in the matter, and I therefore urgently appeal to the benevolent throughout the country to help us.

Notes and Comments.

THE National Vigilance Association has passed a resolution to the effect that the practice which prevails in some Homes and Penitentiaries, of subjecting all inmates, as a condition of entrance, to a surgical examination, is objectionable.

We have received a large number of letters advocating different views of the present crisis in Irish affairs. Each party think they have right on their side, and there are Protestants who advocate Home Rule, and Roman Catholics who oppose it. We could not confine ourselves to letters on one side only, and to publish communications which would neutralise each other could serve no useful purpose. One correspondent asks that over against the adverse opinion of Mr. Spurgeon (to which may be added Rev. W. Arthur, Mr. John Bright, and others) may be mentioned a pamphlet containing letters from forty to fifty Irish Protestants of all classes in favour of Home Rule.

Speaking at a meeting in Trinity College, Dublin, at which Professor Drummond gave an address on the progress of religious work in the University of Edinburgh, the Earl of Aberdeen, in the course of an excellent speech, said:—

> I wish to make reference to the very serious influence, and the damaging influence, which results from misrepresentation of Christianity when it is put before us in an unmanly or gloomy or austere form. We are always to remember the converse and enormous effect of a manly, bright type of Christianity. There is one obstacle which affects us, as it has affected all in this matter, in the dedication of our lives to this work, and that is the passing of time. It is very natural that we should think that when we grow older it will be easier to dedicate ourselves to this work. It reminds me of what Holman Hunt, the great artist, said on one occasion when he was congratulated by a friend on his selection to paint the historical frescoes for the House of Commons: "Yes," he said, with sadness, "but I began with my hair grey." It will not be easier for us to wait until our hair is grey. Our opportunities and our strength are greatest in our youth, and it is now that we should make our decision.

The element of joy certainly ought to permeate the Christian life, and the Christian who, day by day, comes into the presence of the Lord with thanksgiving, will unconsciously have a great influence over others, and especially over the young, who almost instinctively recoil from that which seems to be gloomy and sad. "Religion never was designed To make our pleasures less," Watt's sang a century ago, and the line will bear repeating now; but the pleasures must be pure, and the religion must be real.

A correspondent suggests to all Christians who may be going abroad this summer, and who are anxious to do something for the Lord Jesus, that they should take with them and scatter broadcast to the little ones some of the excellent Foreign Picture Leaflets, published by the Children's Special Service Mission (48, Paternoster-row). The Mission (from whom full information can be obtained) makes free grants of these Foreign Leaflets. This is a work that all may join in. The happiness of a holiday may be increased a hundredfold by scattering these messages of God's love. Children of all classes gladly receive them. It was recently suggested in The Record that a great deal might be done in this direction amongst the many foreigners at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition. The Leaflets are obtainable now in thirty-six languages.

Under the most encouraging circumstances, our earnest and energetic friend, Rev. John Bain, of Harley House, last week opened his new tabernacle in Chatsworth-road, Lower Clapton. Beginning to evangelise in the neighbourhood three years ago, with an attendance of seven persons at the first meeting, he enters on his new church with a membership of 370, mostly gathered in during the period we have named. Many friends were present at the formal opening last week to share in the joy of Mr. Bain and his helpers; we should be glad if our readers are disposed to lend a hand in lessening the debt of £1000 on the building.

Cardinal Manning has, in a recent pastoral, boldly affirmed that "the future of England depends upon the future of the (Roman) Catholic Church," and that the "future spread, and health, and vigour, and fertility of the Church depends first and above all upon the multiplication and sanctification of the priesthood." This is plain speaking; but when the Archbishop goes on to declare that although "priests may fall" the priesthood "will for ever be the channel of its own sanctification," it is less easy to understand his meaning. Christ, he says, ordained the Apostles in order to "provide for the daily offering of his precious Body and Blood;" and that "by men, more than by books" the kingdom of Christ "is both spread and sustained." The man, be he minister or layman, who succeeds in winning souls to Christ, must not only himself feed upon the one Book, but he must break unto others the bread of life from that Divine Word; and whilst Britain remains faithful to the teaching of the Bible, we have no fear that Romanism, with its mental and spiritual darkness, will dominate our future.

There is perhaps too great a tendency in much modern literature to refer to the Saviour as "a Socialist" and "a Democrat." At least one of our periodicals, month by month, in its task of endeavouring "to justify God to the people," does much to familiarise the public mind with these designations as applicable to Christ. Of course every thoughtful student of the Gospels must recognise the fact that in the life and teachings of Jesus there was much that was in the strongest opposition to the principles of greed and selfishness which characterised a large section of society in our Lord's time as they do today. At the same time it is scarcely desirable that so much prominence should be given to the names, and so little to the statement of the fact that Jesus was intensely human because He was Divine, and that He sympathised with sorrow and suffering in every shape, because "He loved us and gave Himself for us." If there was in the utterances of Christ that which some modern thinkers claim as socialistic, it was simply because there could be no limitation to the love of Jesus, for the rich as well as for the poor; for those of Cæsar's household as for the outcast by the roadside.

The Roman Catholic Professor of Sacred Eloquence in St. Patrick's College, Thurles, has published a little volume on "Popular Preaching," which well deserves careful study, containing as it does much practical advice likely to be very useful to a wider circle than that for which primarily the notes were intended. Knowing, however, what a minor position is given to the Bible in the Romish services, it is somewhat surprising to find the Professor, in condemning the adoption of "incomprehensible English," or what is generally termed "preaching over the heads of the people," using these words:—

> Art is a poor remedy for hunger, and these poor souls are hungry. It is food they want. What do they care for elegance. Unlock the food: away with the barriers of strength and polish. Let them have the bread of God's Word. Your logic and your learning are poor stuff compared with this—pernicious stuff if they bar and conceal this, or stand as earthly substitutes for heavenly food. Let the preacher then be simple in setting forth the Word of God.

In another part of his little volume, Father Ryan, in answer to a query as to a good work on preaching, says:—

> Read the Word of God since you wish to preach the Word of God. The best book on preaching is the Bible.

We hope that his advice may be largely followed in his own system, and that many of those who take up the Bible as the best book for the preacher may find in it the bread of life. It is strange, however, it does not seem to strike the Professor that "the bread of God's Word" is just as good for the layman as for the priest, and that others than poor preachers may bar or conceal the heavenly food from those who are hungering for want of it.

Rev. J. W. Horsley, the well-known chaplain of Clerkenwell Prison, has stated recently that during the past few years there has been "an enormous and startling increase in female drunkenness," and he adds that the phenomenon is one of the saddest that have come under his notice. The mere fact is sufficiently painful without the addition of Mr. Horsley's opinion, based upon only too real and wide an experience, that "when women take to drinking they are generally irreclaimable," and that the number of female drunkards over thirty who regain permanent habits of sobriety is almost infinitesimal.

> The woman's whole nature seems to go, and her physical constitution increases the temptation to seek relief in stimulants.

These views are borne out by the sad fact that, although the proportion of the sexes apprehended is one woman to three males, when a comparison is made of the criminals who have been more than ten times convicted. It is found that the proportion is reversed, and there will be 9000 women as against 5000 men.

Unfortunately the fashion of seeking relief in stimulants is not confined to the poor creatures whose lives know but little of comfort or happiness; for the confectioners' and grocers' licenses have done much to encourage drinking habits amongst better-class women. It is no unusual sight in our large towns and cities to see young girls drinking sherry at confectioners' counters. It is only too painfully evident that the grocer's license has provided a means by which intoxicating drinks can easily be smuggled into houses. Some day we may have statesmen sufficiently patriotic to recognise the fact that a revenue derived from a nation's follies and sins must necessarily be, to a large extent, expended in repression and punishment. It says but little for the morality of our financial legislation that so much of it should be based upon the prosperity of the drink traffic. Only a few days ago, in commenting upon the financial portion of one of the proposed "Home Rule" Bills, one of the leading Irish Nationalist journals said that if there were any reduction in the Drink bill the whole scheme would collapse; yet there had been no hesitation in making a gigantic arrangement dependent upon the measure of a nation's degradation.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.

EXCURSION FOR VOLUNTARY CHRISTIAN WORKERS.

The Committee are very desirous to mark their sense of the self-denial of their LONDON VOLUNTARY HELPERS, who through the rough nights of the past severe winter walked the streets to seek and save the lost, by giving them a in the Country. To effect this they appeal to the READERS of "THE CHRISTIAN" for immediate Contributions, as their GENERAL FUND is NOT AVAILABLE for this object.

DAY OF SUNSHINE

Contributions may be sent to Messrs. Morgan & Scott, at the Office of this paper ; or to

JOHN H. L. CHRISTIEN,
Superintendent of Meetings.

Foxe's Book of Martyrs.

A COMPLETE AND AUTHENTIC ACCOUNT OF THE LIVES, SUFFERINGS, AND TRIUMPHANT DEATHS OF PRIMITIVE AND PROTESTANT MARTYRS IN ALL PARTS OF THE WORLD.

By John Foxe. With Twelve full-page Illustrations. Complete in one handsome volume, cloth boards, 1083 pages, 10s. 6d.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott deserve most cordial thanks for the production of this noble edition of a noble book ; and we are specially pleased to observe that the aid of pictorial art has been invoked to attract to the volume the attention of the young. Only let this book have a place in every British home, and we may smile at the efforts of Rome and of the Anglican ritualists to undo the blessed work that was achieved for our nation and the world by the thousands of faithful witnesses to the truth who, in dark days of priestly domination, resisted unto death."—Christian Leader.

FOR BIBLE STUDENTS & TEACHERS.

QUESTIONS ON THE FACTS OF THE BIBLE,

Suited for use in Schools and Families. By JABEZ HORNE, Inspector of the Schools in the Orphan Houses, Ashley Down. Tinted covers, 6d.; cloth, 1s.

"A good examination in the Scriptures might be conducted with the help of this little manual, the questions in which are extremely well arranged."
The Rock.

May also be had (for the use of Teachers only),

KEY TO QUESTIONS ON THE FACTS OF THE BIBLE.

Which furnishes the Answers to all the Questions. Cloth, 6d.

THE NUMBER "SEVEN" IN SCRIPTURE.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, Esq., C.B. Paper Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d. Presentation Edition, Cloth Boards. Bevelled, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"Many other attempts have been made in tabulating the circumstances connected with the word "seven" in the Bible, but we cannot think of any one which is so complete, so concise, and so systematic as in the small volume compiled by Mr. Blackwood. From Genesis i. to Rev. xxii. all the many times the word occurs are duly noted, and each book is dealt with seriatim, so that reference is easy. One object of the book is "to stimulate search and to arouse inquiry," and with this book by the side of the Bible one course of study can be made very profitable indeed."—The Rock.

CHRIST LIFTED UP.

Meditations on the Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ. By Rev. ROBERT GILCHRIST. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"An earnest, practical exhibition of the Gospel under a variety of aspects. Christ lifted up on the cross, and at the Father's right hand, is the grand theme, and affords scope for setting forth a wide range of Gospel teaching. The writer does this in an interesting, while simple style."—British Messenger.

"Old-fashioned divinity presented in a pleasing form. May its readers be many."—Sword and Trowel.

THE GOSPEL IN LEVITICUS.

Chapters on the Old Testament Foreshadowings of the Great Redemption. By the late Rev. Dr. FLEMING, of Kentish Town. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"The subject is set forth with a clearness, a directness, and a persuasiveness which leave little to be desired. Every lover of sound Scriptural theology, especially in regard to the momentous doctrine of the Atonement, will find in the book a rich treat."—Baptist Magazine.

JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED.

The Character, Writings, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple. New and Enlarged Edition. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. With Chromo-Lithographic Views of the "Sea of Galilee" and the "Island of Patmos." Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.

"It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."—Sword and Trowel.

"THY FIRST LOVE."

Christ's Message to Ephesus. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"It is a heart-searching and stimulating little book."
British Quarterly Review.

"Its language is chaste and clear; its thoughts are fresh and invigorating; its tone is evangelical without being sentimental. While there is a genial warmth of devout feeling, there runs through its pages a healthy breeze of robustness."—Literary World.

BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR & KNOCK.

Christ's Message to Laodicea. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. Tinted Covers, 1s.; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"The exposition is fresh and original, displaying great critical skill and discrimination, together with happy quotations of Scripture. The style is all that could be desired—chaste and polished, yet full of force; here and there, as in the author's other works, we meet with passages of great poetic beauty."
Aberdeen Daily Press.

CALLS TO CHRIST.

A Series of Addresses by Rev. R. W. NICOLL, M.A. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"Force and freshness are eminently the characteristics of these 'Calls to Christ'; they are also brief to a proverb, and hence they may be of great service to an earnest evangelist who knows how to use another man's thoughts."
Kelso Courier.

PASTOR BLUMHARDT AND HIS WORK.

A descriptive account of the remarkable work of Faith Healing carried on first at Möttlingen and subsequently at Bad Boll. By Rev. W. Guest. With Introduction by Rev. C. H. Blumhardt. With Portrait.

"I have come to think of Boll, since visiting it, as in many ways one of the most interesting places in Europe—interesting not only for its natural loveliness, its past history, its warm fellowships, and cherished memories, but for its noble testimony to Christian faith, and for the problems in the deepest things of Life and Truth which it leaves for after years to solve; and certainly no holiday could be better spent than with the little Colony of God's people, who are always to be found gathered round the old Pastor, whose life work all these years has been this beautiful and mysterious ministry of Prayer.

"The good Pastor himself, alas! since these words were first transcribed from my note-book, has been taken to his rest. He was a remarkable man, and leaves a work behind him too remarkable to cease. And though the visitor now will miss the characteristic figure, he will find there the same spirit and faith."

From "The SWORD and TROWEL" for May.

"This adds another to the already long list of text books. This book has a practical reference exclusively to Christian service, and touches upon the parts which the heart, the lips, the eyes, the ears, the hands, and the feet are to play therein. There is much freshness and force, both in the idea and its treatment; and we think it will hold its own with its many competitors."

London: Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

15. WHITHER GOEST THOU? Judges xix. 17.
16. WHAT SHALL WE DO? Acts ii. 37.

A PRACTICAL SUGGESTION.

A Gentleman engaged in preaching the Gospel speaks thus of this novel Series of Gospel Tracts:—"I take as my subject for the evening the Question on one of the Leaflets, such as 'What think ye of Christ?' The Scripture Texts quoted on either side of the 'Question' serve as 'points' in my Address; they are—

1. 'Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners.'
2. 'God commendeth His love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, CHRIST DIED FOR US.'
3. 'Surely He hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows. . . He was wounded for our transgressions; He was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon Him; and with His stripes we are healed.'

"The Hymns, of which a verse or two are given on the Leaflet, are sung at the Meeting; and at its close every member of the congregation receives a copy of that Leaflet as he passes out of the door. This plan is repeated until I have thus run through the whole Series of sixteen Tracts."

150 copies of "PLAIN QUESTIONS" may be had for Sixpence—either Assorted, or of any one kind. Or 1000 copies for 2s. 6d.; post-free, 2s. 9d.

London: Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

The Late John B. Gough.

Autobiography of John B. Gough.

BEST EDITION.

Large Crown 8vo. 227 closely printed pages. With Portrait, and three full-page Illustrations. Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.

"It is the most touching, thrilling narrative we ever read. Talk of the sensational in tales, novels, and romances—none of them is so stirring, or is filled with incidents of such extraordinary interest, as this life story.—Bolton Guardian.

SPECIAL CHEAP EDITION.

Unabridged.

With Portrait. In Tinted covers, 1s.
Neatly done up in Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.

"It is the record of a life as strange and eventful as it is impressive and instructive. A more perfect knowledge of such a life cannot fail to strengthen the faith of some and to inspire the zeal of others. The book, apart from its value as a beacon to warn and a light to guide, is studded with passages of beauty—word-pictures, which are not easily forgotten."
Temperance Record.

Orations by John B. Gough.

BEST EDITION.

Large Crown 8vo. 160 closely printed pages. Consisting of Eleven different Orations delivered in London and the Provinces on the occasion of his last visit to this country. With Portrait. Handsomely bound in Cloth Extra, 2s. 6d.

"To those who have not had the good fortune to hear Mr. Gough, these printed Orations will convey some idea of the wonderful dramatic force and eloquence which held audiences of many thousands spellbound."
Good Templar.

SPECIAL CHEAP EDITION.

Unabridged.

With Portrait. Crown 8vo., Tinted Covers, 1s.
Neatly bound in Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.

"They deal with the subject of Temperance in its varied aspects, and bring many startling facts and illustrations to add weight to the statements concerning the terrible dangers of moderate drinking."
Woman's Work.

The Orations by John B. Gough.

These Addresses may also be had separately as below. Price One Penny each. Or in Packets of Nos. 1 to 10, 10d.

9. Lend a Helping Hand.
10. Rescue the Perishing
11. "Now" and "Then."

"Each Oration is published at the price of One Penny, and temperance reformers have thus an opportunity afforded them of disseminating, at a small cost, the most powerful arguments which can be adduced in favour of their movement."—Northampton Herald.

Life-like Portrait of John B. Gough.

A striking and Life-like Portrait of the Great Temperance Advocate. Size 20 by 14½ inches. Suitable for Framing. Beautifully Printed from Stone. Price 1/0. Can be safely sent through the post; securely packed in Tube.

Those who loved the man will be glad to possess themselves of this memorial of a face which they will never more behold on earth. As the likeness of John B. Gough looks down upon them from the wall, it will recal the memory of one whose marvellous eloquence rivetted his hearers, and whose persuasive voice was the means, under God, of turning many to righteousness.

"The moment a man takes hold of the truth that Jesus is coming back again to receive His followers to Himself, this world loses its hold upon him. Gas stocks, and water stocks, and stocks in banks and railroads, are of very much less consequence to him then. His heart is free; and he looks for the blessed appearing of his Lord, who at His coming will take him into His blessed Kingdom."—Extract.

JESUS THE LAMB OF GOD:

Showing how He died on the Cross fo
Children; and how Little Ones have Learne to Love and Trust Him. By Rev. E. Payso
Hammond, M.A. *With Seven Full-pag
Illustrations.*

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

This little book will be eagerly read by almost any child into whose hands it may fall. It is full of stories, all clustering round some great truth, made simple t the very youngest mind. By way of illustration, th author occasionally refers to interesting cases of chil dren who have been hopefully led to the Saviour in hi meetings. Parents and Sunday-school teachers, wh would see their little ones led to Christ, should get th book for them to read, and pray that the Holy Spiri may use it in teaching them the way of salvation.

GATHERED LAMBS:

Telling how Jesus gathers the Lambs to hi
Fold. With Eight Illustrations.

Tinted covers, 6d.; Cloth limp, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

"In this book we find some excellent samples of Mr Hammond's anecdotal addresses to the young. The are full of picture and parable, some of the mos effective of the illustrations having been picked up i the Highlands of Scotland. The book contains strikin letters received by the author from children converte under his ministry."—Christian Leader.

"A charming collection of two hundred and twenty eight hymns and tunes, specially adapted for Gosp Services, Sabbath Schools, &c. While it includes som of the finest compositions of the great masters of sacre song, there are many hymns and tunes in it that wi be new to the Christian people of this country; and i may probably surprise most readers to find how prolif and successful Mr. Hammond himself has been in th department of literature. Not a few of his pieces hav been suggested by the touching testimonials of childre led under his ministry to give their hearts to Jesus and in these strains there is a richly experimenta power."—Christian Leader.

A Glance at the Great Work.

An Incident of Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Meetings in London.

By LADY HOPE.

"There, in that room, with numbers of others, who all wanted to be talked to just as I did, I found the very things that I wanted—COMFORT, and PARDON, and PEACE. Oh, why did no one ever talk to me before about it all, and make it so plain? The three verses which I saw that day in the inquiry-room were these:

"'The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin.' 'I, even I, am He that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins.' 'I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee.'"—Extract.

LIGHT FOR THE LAST DAYS.

A Study Historic and Prophetic. By Mr. and Mrs. H. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

A work comparing in a fuller and more accurate manner than has previously been attempted—in the light of modern astronomic and archæologic discovery—the predictions of Bible Prophecy with the great facts of the history of the last twenty-five centuries. It demonstrates the point now reached in the Divine programme of universal history, and considers the character of the coming kingdom as well as the order of events which will, according to Scripture, introduce it. The book indicates many wonderful and suggestive relations between Bible statements and familiar facts. It is comprehensive in scope, non-speculative in character, and philosophically cautious in its deductions—focussing the light from Scripture and from the analogies of past history upon the critical events of the present, and on the near future.

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every fleet.

Mr. William Wileman, of 34, Bouverie-street, E.C., has just published an illustrated Gospel tract in native Irish and English, which may be obtained from him at 2s. 6d. per hundred.

A recent writer, in a short paper of singular power, has in masculine English depicted the nobles and others whose figures stand out in the history of the Italian Renaissance. He has characterised them as "epicures in crime," and as "taking an intellectual delight in strange forms of evil." Unfortunately such coldly intellectual sensualists have existed at other periods than that of the Renaissance. In this nineteenth century of ours, with all its boasted culture, there are plenty of men who are as epicurean in their vice as in everything else. Without God and without hope in the world, they live for to-day, cruel in their selfishness, and selfish even in their cruelty, their wisdom, foolishness, their culture that of corruption. The peasant child lisping its evening prayer is wiser and nobler in its half-unconscious faith. To such men might Ezekiel's message of impending doom have been spoken with its terrible commencement:—"Thou art a man, and not God;" and their end will be like that of the wise in whose ears the prophet's message thundered (Ezek. xxviii. 2—8).

A correspondent of The Manchester Guardian, commenting on the decline in church membership, as shown in twenty-eight districts of British Methodism, says:—

> Many of the prominent leaders in Methodism are beginning to question the wisdom of spasmodic efforts.

The subject of the approval or condemnation of special religious services cannot be thus readily disposed of. Two things are indispensable to the success of such services: much preceding prayer, humiliation before God, and searchings of heart; and, subsequently, care that no stumbling-blocks of inconsistency should be set before young converts. "Spasmodic efforts" that are intended as a substitute for these things must assuredly be questioned.

An Irish correspondent has drawn our attention to a paper in the Parish Magazine published under the superintendence of the Dean of the Chapel Royal, Dublin. It deals with what we believe to be a very improper practice at bazaars and sales of work in connection with religious objects. We have not yet seen any satisfactory defence of raffles at such gatherings, and the mere fact that apologies and explanations are so plentiful seems to point to a consciousness that there is at any rate something very doubtful in the growing custom. We do not think that Christians should condescend to collect money for God's work by such means, and, as our correspondent points out, it is not usual to ask the Lord's blessing upon such efforts. That the practice should be spreading is by no means a healthy sign, and we trust that all who love to see everything in connection with Christian effort free even from the suspicion of impropriety will resolutely set themselves against a custom which, at its best, is unworthy, and which must in many cases necessarily create and foster a spirit of speculation.

So frequently has it been the case that unworthy motives have influenced adverse personal criticism that we should, in common justice, hesitate to take the testimony of an individual critic with regard to the alleged immorality of a stage performance; but it sometimes happens that additional testimony comes from unexpected quarters, and that it is tendered almost unconsciously. The mere fact that the play upon a Greek subject which is now being presented at a London theatre is based upon the love of a pure-minded man for a wanton speaks for itself, and it points to that downward tendency in taste which seems to be influencing very powerfully just now not merely the drama but also much of our popular literature. In the drama, as in art and literature, we are copying the French, not at their best, but at their worst. Our novels and plays, therefore, are to a large extent based upon illicit passion, and a large section of the drama has for its foundation the unholy pavement of the streets of the City of Destruction.

We have in these days of strange combinations a "Church and Stage Guild," engaged in a somewhat Quixotic defence of the morality and purity of the stage. Perhaps it would not be out of place if the labours of that association were given in the direction of influencing actresses to feel some shame in pourtraying harlots, however classical. That young people should see vice flaunting in the streets is bad enough, but that some of our licensed theatres should be places for the exhibition of unhealthy developments of passion is a grave public evil, and one which calls for a strong protest from all who would fain see purity and modesty the ordinary accompaniments of our manhood and womanhood. The censor of stage plays seems yet to have to learn that, though the language of a drama may be kept studiously free from open offence, the spirit and tendency of a play may be utterly demoralising. Those who are not, like ourselves, opposed to all theatrical representations, would surely agree that if the country employs a censor, he should at least protect playgoers from indecency.

And with regard to the recent production of a play by Shelley, about which there have been many strong and widely differing expressions of opinion. Full of passages of marvellous beauty, the story upon which the piece is based is vile to a degree, and silence respecting it would be infinitely preferable to speech. The representation of such a play can have no good effect; it would be far better to leave it for the study, if it has to be read at all, than to produce it in public, and familiarise the public mind with the contemplation of subjects revolting even to those who may have from time to time to glance at such painful evidences of depravity.

The Wild Birds Preservation Act has already done good service, and districts on the coast where it was becoming unusual to find a sea-bird are again haunted by gulls and other feathered visitants. Especially in the neighbourhood of large towns is the effect of the Bill visible, and all who love God's little creatures, and the music of the woods and fields, must rejoice at the increase of both the one and the other. At the same time it is painful to observe the re-introduction of feather trimmings, and the plentiful use of portions of plumage in ladies' costumes and head-dresses. In some cases the "ornament" resembles the half of a bird, and the suggestion is anything but agreeable to a thoughtful observer. Cannot our Christian women influence public taste by resolutely setting themselves against a fashion which involves the destruction of harmless and useful little lives fulfilling their set duty in the scheme of creation? More evil is wrought for want of thought than want of heart, it has been said, and we hope that, if some consideration is given to the matter, we shall see the foolish custom abandoned.

Mr. H. L. Hastings, who was imprisoned and fined for preaching on Boston Common (U.S.), quotes from "The Bill of Rights," the fundamental law of Massachusetts, which declares:—

> Art. II. It is the right as well as the duty of all men in society, publicly and at stated seasons to worship the Supreme Being, the Great Creator and Preserver of the Universe. And no subject shall be hurt, molested, or restrained, in his person, liberty, or estate, for worshipping God in the manner and season most agreeable to the dictates of his own conscience; or for his religious profession or sentiments; provided he doth not disturb the public peace, or obstruct others in their religious worship

Having taken his stand on this foundation-stone of American law, Mr. Hastings goes on to say:—

> We would be glad if any of the learned judges who have sentenced and fined us for preaching the Gospel would point out how, when, and where, "all men" in the city of Boston, including those who are too poor to rent pews, or pay contributions, build churches or hire halls, can exercise this "right" and perform this "duty;" since there is not an inch of "public" ground in the city where any man can preach the Gospel or even read the Bible without being liable to be arrested, dragged into the criminal court, placed in the dock with thieves and drunkards, fined and committed to Charles-street Jail until his fine is paid. We wish to enjoy our rights and do our duties. We, like thousands of others, own no pew, control no church, have no rights in any pulpit, and are arrested, fined, and imprisoned, for worshipping God out of doors. Please tell us what we may do.

Is there no limit to liberty? Has Almighty God no rights? Has the Lord Jesus, who died to save men, no claims under a Christian Government? These are questions to be answered in England as well as in America.

> It is claimed that if men are allowed to preach the Gospel on Boston Common, then atheists will go there and blaspheme. Hence to avoid the blasphemers we must jail the preachers. According to this doctrine preaching and blaspheming are equally protected by law. Is this so? Is there no law against blasphemy except a by-law that forbids speaking on public grounds? Does the Massachusetts Bill of Rights declare that "It is the right as well as the duty of all men in society publicly, and at stated seasons, to" blaspheme "the Supreme Being?" Does it declare that "no subject shall be hurt, molested, or restrained "for blaspheming God" in the manner and season most agreeable to the dictates of his own conscience?"

It sounds rather absurd when put in that way, but is not that the very idea which is becoming the accepted doctrine of some Christian men in their advanced (?) ideas of civil and religious liberty?

Faith-healing and kindred phenomena having been the subject of study and experiment by Rev. J. M. Buckley, D.D. (editor of The Christian Advocate and Journal), during the past thirty years, he was recently invited by the editor of The Century to give the result of his studies to the readers of that magazine. Dr. Buckley's article appears in the June Century (F. Warne & Co.), and is likely to attract unusual attention. He first tells how he came to take up the subject; he afterward discusses the facts, and rehearses "testimony to particulars." He then explains the facts, gives his "inductions," discusses the miracles of Christ and of the Apostles, examines the claims of "Christian Faith-Healers,"—technically so called,—and in conclusion presents what he believes to be "the Christian doctrine of answer to prayer."

NOTES FROM GERMANY.

By Rev. E. P. HAMMOND.

We recently left London for a visit to Norway, but came a little out of our way to see Hanover, Leipsic, Dresden, and Berlin. Passing through Holland for the third time, I never saw it in such a fresh gala dress as now. Last Sunday we inquired our way to the American chapel. The services are quite unsectarian. On account of the transient character of the audience there is no regular church organisation, but a committee is appointed annually to manage the affairs of the chapel.

For five years Dr. J. H. W. Stuckenberg has been acting as pastor. The audience consists largely of students. Last winter there were 123 Americans among the nearly 5000 in the University, besides large numbers who come to Berlin to study German, music, and art. Young men come here from America and Great Britain to prepare themselves for positions of prominence, and it is of importance that they have a spiritual home where they may feel someone is interested in their welfare.

Dr. Stuckenberg's excellent sermon last Sabbath morning showed that he is a large-hearted, sympathetic man. The students from abroad are not, as a class, wealthy, and it is found difficult to support the services of the chapel. I wish English-speaking people who visit Berlin would seek out this place of worship. I am sure they will be glad for having done so.

At the close of the service it was pleasant to see the people press around Dr. Stuckenberg and thank him for his earnest and comforting words of Gospel truth. When we took him by the hand, to our surprise, we found we were old acquaintances.

To-day we visited Potsdam, sixteen miles distant, and saw the five Royal residences filled with pictures and statuary, all surrounded with flower-gardens, elegantly laid out. We stood on the spot where Frederick the Great breathed his last. One of his requests was that he might be buried with his favourite war-horse and faithful dogs, as he had said many times, "They are my best friends." Alas! he was a stranger to the Friend that sticketh closer than a brother.

We were specially interested in visiting Charlottenhoff. It was there, at the invitation of the king, that Alexander Humboldt resided some thirteen summers, and wrote his "Cosmos." His table remains as he left it, with the chair beside it, made and presented to him by Peter the Great.

One of our visits in Berlin was to the Royal Library, where we saw Luther's Bible, from which he made his translation, and Guttenberg's Bible, the first book printed in movable type, in 1450. Our last evening in Berlin was spent at a meeting of the Y.M.C.A. in a grove. It was called a concert. When we received our invitation from the Secretary, we were told the Emperor would be present; but, though he did not appear, we saw Prince Bismarck's sister, who, we were told, is an earnest Christian. We met one young man of the Association who said that he had been led to Christ by Rev. Von Schluembach, who has done much good in Berlin. While walking near the Royal Palace we saw a building on which, in large, gilt letters, was the inscription, "Christliches Hospiz." On inquiry we learned that it was a Christian hotel. There are in this city of a million and a quarter a number of such institutions. Their aim is to furnish young men and families with at least a temporary home amid Christian influences. In this hotel Count Bernstorff, who is the chief mover in the enterprise, told us that a daily prayer-meeting was held. Is not this worthy of imitation?

Berlin.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—The half-yearly meeting and annual excursion of this Association will be held on Saturday, June 26, at Farningham, Kent. Early application for tickets should be made to Mr. Leonard Courtney, secretary, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C.

GOSPEL WORK ON THE THAMES.

The field of operations of the Thames Church Mission extends from Putney to the Nore, sixty miles; a large part of the river is crowded by shipping of all nations. It is stated that some 300,000 men are always afloat in the port of London. Amongst these the Mission seeks to make known the Gospel message. Above bridge there is a very important work just opening, and the imperative need for it urges us to push upwards. The missionary staff consists of three clergymen, and nineteen missionaries, who continue constantly and daily, in all weathers and in all seasons, labouring on the river and in the docks.

The story of the Mission abounds in records of the over-coming power of the Gospel. God has been pleased to give many tokens for good, and the logs of the missionaries abound with incidents of conversion and reclamation. On board every ship visited Christ is preached. In the Mission rooms, at Tilbury, at Poplar, at East Greenwich, at the Victoria Docks, and in the Regent's Canal Basin, the Gospel is plainly preached. Tract distribution is a very important adjunct of the work.

The people among whom the Mission labours are sailors, including bargemen, and river toilers of all kinds; second, emigrants and passengers; third, soldiers and navvies; fourth, cadets, and the boys of the training ships. The sailors are of all nationalities, of all forms of religion, or no religion. A colporteur, a Swede, works among the Scandinavian, Danish, and German sailors, and emigrants. English and American sailors are, of course, in the majority, and these, as a rule, hail the missionaries. Among steamboat-men, and barge and lighter-men, a good work is being done. Bargees are difficult to impress. By kindness, patience, and simple pressing home of the Gospel, the missionaries have been able to win a hearing, and have been blessed to many. At the present time, five or six barge-men come to the Mission office for supplies of tracts, by means of which they do a mission work on their own account.

We have been brought into close contact with the navvies at Tilbury, where the great docks have been in construction during the past three years. Strong drink is the special snare to the seamen; the missionary is indefatigable in temperance effort, and has succeeded in securing 861 pledges during the year. The Mission has the spiritual care of the Cornwall, the Chichester, and Arethusa, and Her Majesty's ship Worcester. These ships are visited regularly, services being conducted on Sundays, and Bible-classes held in the week. The Mission acts as agent for the British and Foreign Bible Society, selling as well as giving Testaments. The Bible Society made a free grant of £200 towards the expenses of colportage; and also gave some thousands of New Testaments during the year. The Religious Tract Society, through the Mission, places at the disposal of each emigrant, a farewell present in the shape of a packet of books.

This year has been marked by the commencement of a monthly magazine, which is making for itself a wide circulation. We ask a continued interest in the prayers and sympathy of your readers. (Rev.) H. Bloomer, Sec.

INDUSTRIAL HOME FOR BOYS.—The twenty-ninth annual report of this Institution at 119, Copenhagen-street, Caledonian-road, is largely occupied with the account of the disastrous fire last year, by which the entire south block of the building was destroyed. The Committee, however, received such substantial proofs of sympathy, amounting altogether to £705 4s. 11d., that, with the compensation (£900) from the Sun Fire Office, they were enabled to arrange for the restoration of the block destroyed, carrying into effect at the same time certain alterations which suggested themselves as improvements. The average number of boys in the Home for the eight months till September, when the fire occurred, was eighty-four, but since that date no fresh cases could be admitted, one of the dormitories having been burnt down. The general health of the boys has been excellent, and four were despatched to Canada. "Old boys," in visiting or writing, often express their thankfulness for the benefits they received. It is hoped that the new building will soon be ready for occupation.

ST. SERVAN, FRANCE.

In the month of October, 1685, Louis XIV. descended the river Rance, in barges, from Dinan, like Saul of Tarsus, breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, was met at St. Servan by the Archbishop of Rennes and a numerous retinue of priests of the Church of Rome, and escorted with great pomp under a panoply, on his way to Paris, where on his arrival he signed the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, which consigned thousands of his loyal subjects and choicest Protestants—artisans—to death or exile.

On the very spot where Louis XIV. landed at St. Servan now stands an iron hall, where the Gospel is faithfully preached three evenings a week to the French, and during the day a Protestant school is held, where children of converts and others receive a Christian education. A Sunday-school and Thursday Bible-class are also held for those who desire more direct teaching. The above is a striking coincidence, and most encouraging and strengthening to the faith of the Lord's people.

A great need is felt in this Mission of lady workers to visit the parents of the children and others, to replace two most devoted ladies who have lately left. Further information will be gladly given by (Mrs.) A. D. Fraser, La Corbinière, St. Servan, France.

A REVIVAL IN THE GERS.

At a Protestant church in the little town of Mauvezin, M. Philep has been the pastor for twenty years. His divinely given energies and love of souls could not be confined to his own parish, but they have extended through the whole Department of the Gers. In 1879, at the funeral of a youth who was drowned in the river at Fleurance, 1200 people of that little town gathered in the cemetery around the grave. For an hour and a quarter M. Philep preached to them the pure Gospel of a Saviour's love, fully conscious that power was given from on high to confirm the Word with signs following. At the close, when he put the question, "Will you be Christians?" loud responses came from the four corners of the assembly, "Oui! Oui!" That was the commencement of a new era of Gospel liberty in Fleurance. A young grocer who was converted on this occasion gave up his business, and became an Instituteur, in which capacity he soon obtained a situation at Fleurance, and took the lead in the new evangelical movement. God owned his efforts, and on May 19, 1885, a petition was signed by the heads of seventy-four families, desiring a Protestant minister and regular religious service, and authorisation was obtained. But where was the pastor to be found? M. Philep could only give them a service once a month. Messrs. Doumerque, Reveillaud, and Tournau have given special services, which have been great helps. A free library has been opened, and tracts have been abundantly distributed. Lately a Sunday and Thursday school has been opened, and the revival seems to be extending over the whole Department. Help is much needed, as the venerable pastor has already gone to the extent of his private strength and means. Will the readers of The Christian pray the Lord of the harvest to send labourers into this interesting mission field? Mary J. Waller.

AN INQUIRY.—Sir,—Until very lately the "Missions' Library," founded and managed by Mr. Suter, furnished a most convenient means for disposal of the reports, books, and papers which are continually accumulating in many houses. Whatever was readable and likely to be useful, was sent to institutions, &c., where they could be turned to good account. What was useless was, I believe, sold for waste paper, and the proceeds applied to defray expenses. The library has, however, recently been closed, in consequence, I believe, of Mr. Suter's death; and I write to ask whether any of your readers can inform me of an equally convenient and useful method of relieving oneself of the literature referred to.—Yours, Inquirer.

GLEANINGS FROM FOREIGN FIELDS.

FRIENDS' MISSIONS.

A Hindi monthly journal, entitled The Woman's Friend, has lately been started. Its loving counsel and valuable information, it is hoped, will be the means of doing much good to the women of India. No doubt Bible-women and Christian visitors will find an opportunity to give its contents to such of their pupils as cannot read.

A MISSIONARY TO LEPERS.

Whilst writing of mission-work we may be allowed to ask the prayers of Protestant Christians for a man who, though avowedly not one of ourselves, is yet, we hope, one with us in the faith of Christ. Ten or twelve years ago "Father Damen," a Romish priest, began to devote himself to the self-abnegating task of becoming resident missionary to the lepers of Molokai. Whilst unaffected with the dire disease he was able occasionally to visit other parts of the Sandwich Islands. Now he writes: "It is impossible for me to go any more to Honolulu, on account of the leprosy breaking out on me. Having no doubt myself of the true character of my disease, I feel calm, resigned, and happier among my people." Will not the more enlightened pray that as the end draws near, this noble Jesuit's faith may grow simpler end clearer; that he may find the consolations of Christ to abound, and his sufficiency to be all satisfying?

ENGLISH PRESBYTERIAN MISSIONS.

Rev. J. A. B. Cook, in his report on the Singapore Mission, says that if fresh educational effort is not made by Protestant Christians, the Roman Catholics (who are already on the field) will gain a fast hold upon the ever-increasing Baba (i.e., Straits-born Chinese) population, who, speaking both Malay and Chinese, are anxious to acquire a knowledge of English. With only lay or native assistance, and one, or at most two, visits from native brethren of China, Mr. and Mrs. Cook have laboured, with many difficulties, through the past year, and can report substantial progress. The activity and liberality of the native Christians is a cause for thankfulness and hope. The report of each of the station churches is favourable. Rev. W. R. Thompson's letter, describing his visit to the Christian communities in Northern Formosa, gives a graphic picture of the peculiarities of work and travel in the island.

CHURCH MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The position of the missionaries in Uganda is described in The Church Missionary Intelligencer as being extremely perilous. King Mwanga knows nothing of leaving vengeance in the hands of a higher Power, and, consequently, regards with suspicion the brethren of the murdered bishop. Their presence he fears; but forbodes disaster if they all depart. "He seems," writes Mr. Mackay, "to waver between detaining us as hostages, to prevent evil coming on him, and defying the whole world by killing us. The little stuff we have he covets; yet, probably, believes he will get more golden eggs by not killing the goose that lays them." Two more Christian lads have been burnt to death, but that has not hindered others from becoming inquirers or professors; while the older converts have displayed great courage and faithfulness. In spite of adverse circumstances the missionaries have succeeded in translating and printing on the spot the first portion of a Gospel in Luganda (Matt. i.—vii.) which the native Christians proudly term "their own Gospel." Seeing such good work has already been accomplished "the committee feel that a solemn obligation is laid upon the Society to maintain the mission, and strengthen it to the utmost, so long as missionaries are not excluded by the king, and so long as no distinct providential indications point to definite withdrawal."

In the summer of 1884, Rev. E. J. Peck, when on his way to England, journeyed across Labrador for the purpose of carrying the Gospel to the Eskimos in Ungava. Previously this desolate track had rarely, if ever, been traversed by an Englishman, and it necessitated much labour. Yet the eagerness of the Eskimos at Ungava to be taught the truth must have amply repaid the missionary for his toilsome journey thither. He says, "Some of them crowded in my little tent, and asked over and over again various questions bearing on the things of eternity. Surely this fact ought to speak in no silent tone to the Church of God. Where are our faith and self-denial if a people so eager to learn are left without a teacher to point them to Jesus, the fountain of life?"

LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Last year's financial sheet shows that the Mission-stations contributed, in addition to £16,365 for their self-support, £4115 for evangelistic work in other lands, the total amount making very nearly one-sixth of the London Missionary Society's entire income for the year. Surely, such a statement is eloquent for the genuineness of the work done, especially in the South Sea Islands, whence the largest share of this magnificent contribution comes.

SOUTH AFRICA.

The recent report of the Birmingham Young Men's Foreign Missionary Society, states: "From the letters received from Mr. and Mrs. Aitchinson of the Ickwezi Lamaci Mission during the past twelve months, we are glad to learn of the increasing interest taken by the native Christians themselves in the many agencies employed for their spiritual and temporal needs. The Bible and sewing classes are in full working order, and we notice with much satisfaction that Mr. Aitchinson has now added to his many other agencies a class for teaching the young men the trade of carpentering, which while proving a source of intelligent interest to many, must ere long be of great service to his pupils. Mr. Aitchinson's medical knowledge has been of much service during the year. We are hoping to be able to include in the box, which will be sent as usual in the autumn, a good supply of medicines, as Mr. Aitchinson has many opportunities offered him, whilst endeavouring to heal the bodies of men, of pointing them to the Great Physician, who alone can cure their souls of the disease of sin.

The Committee appeal, not only to the young men connected with the Birmingham Y.M.C.A., but also to those connected with the Y.M.C.A.'s in the Midland district, to join hands with them in the future carrying on of this good work.

BAPTIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

The ninety-fourth annual report of this Society is offered to the public, under cover of the The Missionary Herald for June. In India, among the many encouraging signs of the times are the spirit of inquiry abroad, the growing friendliness of the people to the missionaries, the willingness to purchase and study the Word of God, and the spread of Scripture knowledge. Then, too, it is more general now for the native churches to become independent, and this fact together with the success attending the training of young men for ministers and missionaries, augurs well for the future of Christianity in India.

The fifty-five Baptist Native Churches in the Shantung district (China) have from their founding been independent and self-supporting. Many years since, Rev. A. G. Jones wrote: "China can never be evangelised, save by fearlessly, and from the very first, letting the convert know that upon him rests the responsibility, not only of spreading the truth, but of supporting teachers of it in such a way as his spirtual instinct and appetites dictate to him." Rev. T. Richard appeals urgently to educated Christian men to offer themselves for educational, if not strictly mission, work in China, saying that the thirst for knowledge and science, if not supplied through Christian agencies, will certainly be obtained elsewhere, and it is only too probable by anti-Christian means.

In Japan numerous additions have been made to the churches during the past year. The Society has at present but two missionaries and four native evangelist. Here, where there is so much eagerness for the Gospel, and comparatively little or no opposition to it, it is distressing that the men and means to supply the need are wanting.

Notwithstanding the many losses sustained by the Congo Mission its ranks are constantly being reinforced by noble-spirited young men who have chosen for their life motto, "Africa for Christ." The Committee trust that the special precautions being taken will prevent any recurrence of such casualties in the future. Henceforth there is to be one, if not two, qualified medical men, imbued with the true missionary spirit upon the Congo staff; two special health Manuals have been prepared by competent authorities for the use of the missionaries, and the necessity for great carefulness is enjoined.

NOON-DAY SERVICES IN BIRMINGHAM.—The last of the present series of noon-day services took place on May 27 in the Assembly Rooms, Needless-alley, and was fairly well attended. These services were commenced in October, 1884, by Rev. F. W. Macdonald, theological tutor of Handsworth Wesleyan College, and have been conducted on an undenominational basis. They have been held every Thursday except during the summer months, and have been attended by ministers and members of all denominations.

PARIS CITY MISSION.

At the invitation of the Earl of Albemarle and Lady Augusta Noel, a drawing-room meeting was held at 8, Portman-square, on Thursday afternoon, to receive statements concerning the work of this Mission. Professor Yeatman, who attended as a deputation from Paris, made a lengthened and eloquent statement as to the work of the Mission, tracing its origin, growth, and present position. Admitting that the forces of evil were never so strong and rampant as now, the idea of France being beyond recovery was repelled almost with indignation. Never was there such promise as to-day. What is needed is a vast accession of devoted labourers, and adequate funds to sustain and extend the work. During the year seven missionaries had continued their regular services in Paris—visitation, teaching, &c. Towards the support of these help is urgently needed, and would be most gratefully received by the hon. sec. for England, Mr. J. M. Weylland, 31, Carlton-hill, St. John's-wood, N.W. Professor Yeatman read a letter from Rev. R. W. McAll, of which we give the most important parts:—

"Perhaps many British Christian regard this land as virtually lost to religious influences, inaccessible to the Gospel, after nearly fifteen years spent in efforts to lead the working classes, especially around us here, in the way of righteousness; I, on the contrary, am more than ever impressed with the paramount duty devolving on Christians, in more favoured lands, to seize upon the present crisis and stem the torrent of infidelity and irreligion by uplifting everywhere the standard of the Gospel. It is, alas, true that multitudes of the people are arrayed on the side of atheism in its most revolting forms; but it is equally certain that there are large numbers among them who may be said to be in a waiting posture. They have never yet been brought within the sound of the faithful declarations of the truth of Christ, and when that Divine message is explained to them they are found ready to receive it. Never did we observe a more evident disposition to hear the Gospel than at present; hundreds of hearers, many of them men, come daily to listen to it in our own mission halls, and those connected with kindred works, and I could give recent marked instances of turning to God which would gladden every Christian heart.

"Most urgently we need in Paris and throughout France a vast accession of devoted labourers. May the Lord raise them up, and incline his people's hearts to support them. The Paris City Mission, in supplying us with self-denying and earnest evangelists, who go from house to house seeking to carry home to the inmates individually the truth announced to them in the mission rooms, is rendering an invaluable service, and there is scope and need for their multiplication tenfold. In one brief sentence, the alternative for France surely is that it be flooded with the Gospel or moral, social, total ruin."

Rev. W. H. Price, also from Paris, bore testimony to the reality and permanence of the work. Canon Fleming urged the diligent use of every lawful means for influencing the children, in whom the hope of France lay. Mr. Ernest Noel, M.P., who presided, warmly commended the Society to the general support of the friends present, urging, as an additional reason, the large number of our own countrymen resident in Paris, to the spiritual good of whom the services of one of the missionaries was specially directed. Mr. Frank Bevan, Mr. George Williams, and Mr. Weylland had only time for a word or two, but they were very warm and hearty. The statement read by Professor Yeatman is shortly to be published, and will furnish a masterly and instructive review of this Society, which Mr. Bevan characterised as a child of the London City Mission.

LOWESTOFT SAILORS' HOME.—This has been a refuge, in the twenty-two years of its existence, to no less than 2419 shipwrecked seamen from 353 vessels. Fortunately, the past year was comparatively free from shipwrecks, but the Home has to be kept in readiness for any emergency day and night. Seamen and fishermen frequenting the port find a home here at all times, and last year nearly five thousand visits were paid to the rooms, while lodging was provided for a number of fishermen at a cheap rate. Bibles in different languages were sold during the year, and to each shipwrecked man a copy is given, and the manager, Mr. William Johnson, upon whom the whole responsibility devolves, and whose services are given without charge, appeals for an increase of public sympathy and help. His address is "The Home," Commercial-road, Lowestoft.

THE SALVATION ARMY CONGRESS.

Last Thursday evening the final public meeting in connection with the Congress took place at Exeter-Hall, which was exceedingly crowded, large numbers being unable to gain admission. General Booth said there had been little opportunity during the week to explain the Salvation Army, its objects and progress, but he was sure the Army explained itself. There had been a great deal of talk lately about the federation of the Empire, and it seemed desirable that the Empire of Great Britain should be federated. Let them but get together and love one another, and such a federation must be a good thing; but the federation of the wide world in Christ would be a great deal better. They saw on that platform the beginning of the federation of the world, in which they should realise the brotherhood of men. The Salvation Army was as powerful as ever, and was going to revolutionise the world. He was sanguine, it was said, but he would be of no use if he were not. Considering his enemies, and the character of his friends, he contended that the Army had, indeed, done something. The Army wanted to go to St. Paul's Cathedral, the Church of the nation, to hold a great thanksgiving, but the authorities were afraid that something would happen, and desired that they would not go. But the day would come when the people would say, "This Church belongs to the nation; why didn't you let us go in?" They hoped, by the exercise of the same zeal, to do far better in the future than they had done in the past.

In connection with the Congress, thirty-six meetings would have been held by Friday night, which they computed would have been attended by 128,000 persons. The General announced that £1,300 had been received, beyond expenses, towards a thanksgiving fund; and towards the second thousand pounds Mr. Corry, of Cardiff, has promised £100. During the evening songs were sung and testimonies given by several of the foreigners. The gifts included two of £50, one of £25, and a silver tea-tray, value £40. The General announced that next week the "International" would make a tour of the country, visiting most of the large towns and cities. An "all-night of prayer" at Clapton on Friday night brought the Congress to a close.

From a long and discriminating account of the Congress in The Record, we extract the following notes of one of the meetings:—

TROPHIES WON.

"He is able to save unto the uttermost all that come unto God by Him," was the thought that pressed upon my heart as I heard the testimony of "trophies won" that was given at the thanksgiving meeting held in Exeter-hall on Wednesday night. Rarely before has the front row of the platform been occupied by such men and women as were there then. Converted thieves, drunkards, prize-fighters, runners, rogues, and vagabonds of every description were present to tell of a work of grace in their souls. Their testimony certainly did not sound like "bunkum," and as far as one could judge, it seemed perfectly genuine. There was no attempt to make themselves appear worse than they really had been, no apparent glorying in their past shame. The simplicity of one and all was their chief characteristic. One of the most remarkable testimonies was given by a "converted solicitor," who had been an habitual drunkard, and had been confined in a retreat, but to no purpose. He had sunk so low that his family entirely cast him off, and he felt forsaken even by God. He longed to reform, and at last sought a Salvation Army meeting. Here he was received with great kindness, and he became a changed man, but when the craving for drink returned he fell away. The good friends of the Army, foremost amongst them being Dr. Heywood Smith, prayed with him and helped him, and one night he solemnly vowed that by God's grace he would give himself to God if He would take away the craving for drink. God heard and answered that prayer, and the man has been kept ever since by the power of Divine grace, and his one desire is now to live for the glory of God.

"Black-pudding Lucy," whose drunkenness had brought her down to a bed of straw, said she has for four years been a happy soldier in the Salvation Army. "Jack-the-Stoker," who had "tried his very utmost to be a blackguard," also testified to blessing received from God through the Army. "The Gipsy Lass" from Yorkshire sang a capital little song, with which she said the Lord God of Heaven had inspired her. She told us the story of her conversion very simply but effectively, and said there are now nine members of her family all in the Army. "The Midget," a little woman forty-five years old, just over four feet in height, and weighing four stone, reminded one by her appearance of Charles Dickens's "Miss Mowcher." She also spoke of blessing received through the Army. Harris, "the converted convict," rejoiced in the blessing of pardon in his heart, which was better than having it on his back. An amusing story he told us must not be passed over. An ungodly man doubted that he had ever been a thief and asked for proof. After a pause Harris said, "Before I give you proof perhaps you'll tell me the time." The man felt for his watch and it was gone. Harris had taken it, but of course restored it, and the man doubted him no longer. It was now four years since he had become a converted man, and he received that blessing through the Salvation Army.

Then that "notorious trophy," as he is called, "the converted Seal," spoke. The story of his life was very touching—how he had been stolen away when a child by circus people, and had for many years led a most miserable life. He had been exhibited as a seal in every city of the United States. When he gave up circus life he went from bad to worse, and narrowly escaped being a murderer. He was converted to God eighteen months ago, and has "for God's sake and the Salvation Army's sake been in prison five times since then." "Fish Eliza" was on the point of making away with herself two years ago, when she was rescued by the Army. The experiences of "Jack O Neil, the converted prizefighter," a veritable Bill Sikes, were, of course, very sickening, but he is a changed man now, and for the last fifteen months he has been a Salvation soldier.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF.

The usual monthly meeting of workers and friends was held on Friday last, Mr. Robert Paton in the chair. Rev. J. Ossian Davies gave a stirring address, in which he rejoiced at the unsectarian character of the work carried on at the "Rest," remarking that we had sects enough, and to spare, already. What is needed to raise the masses of London is personal contact rather than pulpit contact. Only those who feel the Gospel can preach the Gospel with power. Pentecost proved that the Gospel of Christ could meet the need of the human heart, when men of many nations heard it at Jerusalem, and went away rejoicing. And it is proved again at the "Strangers' Rest," where, quite recently, men of eight different nationalities, including Arabs, heard or read the Gospel in their own tongue on one and the same evening.

Mr. Isaac, the secretary, reminded the friends that additional workers are always welcome, and that funds are needed to carry on the work. It is to be hoped that some may be moved to send help. Testimony followed from sailors and workers as to the blessing given in the work.

MR. SPENCER WALTON AT SANDGATE.

A most successful ten days' mission by Mr. Walton has just been conducted at Miss Papillon's Soldiers' Institute, Sandgate. A remarkable spirit of inquiry was manifested throughout the meetings. The afternoon Bible-readings on "The Christian Life" were largely attended, and were most helpful. Free teas, through the kindness of friends, were given to the soldiers on six nights, and were largely attended. It was noticeable how all seemed constrained to remain, not only to the Gospel preaching, but also to the after-meetings, when numbers of anxious souls were dealt with by the workers, many of whom kindly came out from Folkestone to help.

The blessing extended to the coastguard, and many civilian friends, and the last Sunday meetings (indoor and out) will not soon be forgotten by the large numbers present.

But the great work of all was among the militia, just up for their annual training. These men seemed literally to drink in the "wonderful words of life," and many at the time, and since, in letters to the "Home," thanked God "that ever they came to Shorncliffe." Prayer is asked that the good work may go on and prosper, especially amongst the military, for whose benefit the institute was started by the late Miss Papillon twenty-eight years ago.

THE GOSPEL IN SICILY.

On May 27, at a meeting in the National Club, Signor Varnier gave some account of his work. Having a yearning desire for the conversion of his countrymen in Sicily, he returned from India to that island. Selecting Messina as a centre of operations, he began a work of evangelisation. Soon he had the joy of bringing to the true faith a priest, who joined him as an evangelist, and they have since been greatly blessed in their work. A great change has taken place in and around Messina, and on the east side of Sicily. A "Protestant" no longer means to them, as they had been taught, one who seeks to destroy Christianity, but one who protests against error and sin. Prejudices are breaking down. The evangelists are welcomed in the towns and villages where they go, and there is a widespread preparation for a reformation when the Lord's time arrives.

Signor Varnier gave a most touching account of a visit lately paid to a village near the foot of Mount Etna, where dense darkness reigns. On arriving at the village inn, and sitting down at the public breakfast-table, they were observed saying grace. This aroused some questioning as to who they were; then followed some animated conversation about the Gospel. Gradually a crowd collected outside, and the evangelists preached to them. Signor Varnier concluded his stirring address by an earnest warning to us in this country against the insidious encroachments of the Romish delusions.

It may be added that Signor Varnier's address at the Missionary Conference at Mildmay, in 1878, made such a favourable impression that a small committee was formed to sustain these two men in their work of evangelisation. For seven years the committee has supported them, with the help of the Evangelical and Continental Society, and a few generous friends. But these drop off, and the committee scatters, so that some re-organisation with the infusion of new friends is now needed. Communications may be addressed to the Hon. Secretary, D. Matheson, Esq., 120, Queen's-gate, London, S.W.

A REVIVAL IN CONNECTICUT.

Revival services began at Higganum, Connecticut, with the Week of Prayer, though the activities of the Church had for some time been quickened in various ways. It was a union work, and the glorious results could not have been secured in any other way, so far as we can see. The manifest presence of the Holy Spirit was universally recognised. The work seemed at times independent of human agency. Throughout the entire community people were under conviction of sin who had attended none of the meetings. One in advanced life, who had absented himself from church for years, surrendered to God alone in his own house. A word was sufficient to bring others. Husbands and wives often came together, and at once established a family altar. In one family five have united, or are to unite, with the Church, to wit: the grandfather, the father and mother, and three children.

The visible and beneficial effects of the revival throughout the entire community are very marked. Profaneness has been banished from the factories and streets. In some of the roughest shops in the village cursing has literally given place to praise. Work is enlivened by religious songs. Drunkenness has ceased. The moral uplift has been general. The saving power of the Gospel has been demonstrated beyond gainsay.—(Boston) Congregationalist

CRIPPLES' HOME AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL FOR GIRLS.—The report gives a satisfactory account of the condition of this invaluable institution. There are 109 inmates, twenty-nine fresh cases having been received during the year, while a corresponding number left. Eight went into service, nine were apprenticed, seven returned to their homes, four left on account of health, and one died. Extracts of letters received from some of these show how well cared for they were during their stay in the Home, and how good the training they received there. The educational Inspector says of the school that it is doing a very good work, though the girls are for the most part very ignorant when admitted. Special reference is made to the Convalescent Home at Bognor, an absolute necessity for such a Home, the expenditure in connection with which exceeds the income by about two-thirds. It is a cheering feature that the Home Industrial Account shows an increased profit (£250 this year, as against £189 last). The Home is at Northumberland House, 17A, Marylebone-road, near Marylebone Church.

DUBLIN BELIEVERS' MEETINGS.

(From a Correspondent.)

NEVER before, during the twenty-four years of our annual Dublin meetings, have we met in such momentous times—in times when each day seems big with the coming changes for our land, in which, too, the clouds seem to gather portentously for the rapidly advancing storm. And yet it would be wrong to say that Christians met in a state of alarm. The lava stream of Etna has not been moving down on Nicolosi this week more steadily than the revolution in Ireland has been for well-nigh twenty years coming down on the scattered population of the loyal, and yet, as "the feet of the priests stood firm in the midst of Jordan," though the accumulating waters roared above their heads, the children of God stand firm by faith, and vent their anxieties in confiding prayers, or drown them in a flood of praises for past mercies.

Prayer for Ireland was the prevailing plea; help, encouragement, and guidance for suffering Christians in Ireland the prevailing ministry. And now, at the end of our four days, it is with a very full heart that we turn to record a little of the goodness of the Lord to us, of pastures rich with his provision, of cups running over with the fresh waters of the Spirit.

The opening meeting for prayer was on Monday night, the last day of May, when Mr. Thomas Pigott broke in upon the flow of prayers for the averting of evil days, by the record of how Sir T. Wade had refused to give English protection to the missionaries in China, and exacted a promise from Hudson Taylor that he should not demand it, and how, ever since, God has been their preserver, and, in wonderful instances which he gave, had turned aside the wrath of man in the moment of threatened murder, so that no harm had befallen the lonely men and women of the Mission in their distant journeys.

The following day the work began in earnest, and each day was well filled with meetings, four, five and six each, the capacity of the earnest companies never seeming to be exhausted. The addresses at the first noon meeting were given by Dr. M'Killiam, of Blackheath, Mr. Henry Groves and Mr. Bennet, of Yeovil, and to some, at least, this seemed the best meeting of the series. Mr. Groves pleaded hard for peace and fellowship on the subject of the Lord's Coming, and pressed this blessed hope in its bearings on the conscience and walk of saints, intimating from Luke xxi. 36 his belief in the possibility that some Christians might be left to endure the pains of the tribulation on account of their unfaithfulness. He did not wish to express certainty, but rather to suggest the view he mentioned.

The principal address, by general consent, the same evening was Mr. George Soltau's, in which he earnestly deprecated a feeble, doubtful method of dealing with anxious souls, in which men treat the matter of faith rather as an education, a gradual growth, a question of prayers and hopes, instead of going in the power of John xiv. 12, expecting to do the works of Christ as the representatives of Christ (xiii. 20), with all the authority, completeness and promptness of his own healing, saving work. He was followed by Mr. Walter Wills on John vii. 37, illustrated by the braven laver of the Temple pouring forth, to north, south, east, and west, through the bodies and mouths of the twelve oxen on which it rested, the living waters of the great reservoir for the service of the Sanctuary. Mr. Grattan Guinness gave some striking thoughts on the great Apostasy of Christendom.

On Wednesday, at noon, after the requests for prayer, Mr. Alexander Stewart, of Glasgow, lifted all hearts by his moving words upon Matt. xvi.—an address of which it is impossible to say more than that it showed the reasonableness of cross-bearing, the power of faith to carry us through it, the need of giving the cold shoulder to self in everything, and the sadness of spending our little life with no career for God even begun, wasting our energies in the gold mine, by working at the vein of sand just beside the precious ore. Mr. Varley followed in the same strain of teaching.

The eight o'clock meeting of Wednesday was signalised by Mr. Reginald Radcliffe's beautiful and strengthening address on his great theme—the Evangelisation of the World. The burden of his burning sentences was that we must not be satisfied with driblets, but look for floods, of blessing. That was God's method as seen in the Acts, and would be his method still were He not limited by our unbelief. "Put in the scythe," he cried, "not the sickle, and reap, and when you feel opposition of men be sure that God is going to work."

On Thursday, "Mission Work" was our business. From 8 a.m. to 11 p.m. the meetings continued with only the barest intervals for meals. A wonderful day it was, too. The Bible-carriage work had advocates in such workers as Leonard Weaver, J. Grove, and C. Lepper, in Ulster, and independent witnesses of its value were found in Messrs. Strain, Lloyd, and Perrott. Messrs. Varley and Wharton spoke of the negroes in Southern States of America, M'Clean and M'Cann of good work in Ulster, the latter specially referring to the Y.M.C.A. work of evangelisation. Mr. Baron delighted all his hearers with records of work among the outcast of Israel, and Mr. Pigott, by his earnest and deeply impressive words of zeal and love for the lost souls of the heathen, would stir up many volunteers for China, whose vast extent he showed by a large map with puny, insignificant England in its corner.

The Railway Mission was first heard of on Irish shores from Mr. Spencer, and then Miss Smyly told of the truly wonderful work of the Irish Church Mission among the children of Dublin. To many present it was perhaps new to hear that the Mission, though hated by the priests, is well received by the people, and that not to make Protestants merely, but to lead their young souls to Christ in true conversion is ever sought, and not seldom attained; also, that there are 700 children in the Homes and 1400 continuously under instruction.

To the large evening meeting in the well-filled floor and gallery of Merrion Hall, Dr. Barnardo narrated, with all his intense pathos and reality, the tales of London waifs rescued and transplanted to happy homes across the sea, with which many of your readers are familiar; and after a few short but memorable sentences from R. Radcliffe on the sin of spending our millions on beautiful buildings while Barnardo's boys and China and Africa's perishing multitudes are left to die in the dark, he turned the meeting into a prayer-meeting, which soon developed further into a solemn scene of personal heart-searching and consecration never to be forgotten.

Friday has been given to a Conference of workers, and amid short addresses from several of the previous speakers, Miss M'Pherson, relieved from her terrible anxiety as to the safety of her ninety children in the Sardinian, supposed to have been wrecked in an ice-floe, spoke of Bible and tract work in the street fairs of London. And thus this happy week is closing. Cheer and hope and strength for the way have been ministered to hundreds of tired and anxious children of God. The work of saving souls, and of large faith and expectation in this, has diverted thought from political and financial worries. The hope, bright and blessed, of His coming whose right it is to reign, has lifted the weary eye and heart; everyone looks for rich results of blessing in their homes and surroundings, for their dear native land; for Great Britain, too; and, in widening circles of faith and desire, for blessing far away in the world at large, as the outcome of these believers' meetings.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—Last Thursday the annual sermon on behalf of the Open-air Mission was preached in Portman Chapel, Portman-square, by Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe, from Eph. iii. 10, 11. The sermon was a mastery exposition of the passage, and in closing the preacher commended, without any reserve, the work of the Mission, as affording the best way of reaching the masses. He emphasised his recommendation by stating that he owed his conversion to a tract given him, accompanied by a kind word, on Derby race-course thirty years ago. He had gone to the races to drown his religious convictions, and God thus met with him and saved him. The collection amounted to £30 4s.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

AT the Military Barracks, Hounslow, temperance work is being vigorously conducted.

IN the Coal Mines Regulation Bill, just issued, a clause prohibits payment of wages in public-houses.

AT Chesterfield workhouse, in the past year, the drink expenditure was only 3d. per head. At Derby it was 5s.

THE Government of New South Wales has issued a Royal Commission concerning the evils of the drink traffic.

A TEMPERANCE SOCIETY has been formed under the auspices of the Glasgow Policemen's Christian Association.

A NEW-ZEALAND ALLIANCE has been formed on the model of the United Kingdom Alliance, and for the same objects.

IN Tennessee no liquor may be sold within four miles of any chartered educational institution, except in corporate towns.

THE report of the Dublin Temperance Society, recently issued, shows that during the past year much valuable work has been done.

THE Baptist Total Abstinence Association reports a prosperous year. Out of 1900 pastors 1100 are members and many who are not are abstainers.

IT appears that "spirit hawking" at railway stations is still largely practised, to the detriment of travellers, and the annoyance of temperance people.

NEARLY thirty representatives of "the trade" were recently in the House of Commons lobby trying to, secure the defeat of the Durham Closing Bill.

A MEMBER of the Aberdeen School Board told the electors, recently, that the chief cause of absence of scholars from the schools of the city was drink.

DR. CUYLER has been re-elected President of the American National Temperance Society. The annual meeting was most enthusiastic. Mr. Sankey was present and sang several solos.

A GREAT French acrobat, interviewed by a Pall Mall Gazette reporter, stated that in training he had to avoid drink and smoke as much as possible, for the eye and the hand were delicate organs.

THE Governor of the State of Iowa has warned all drink-sellers that any future violations of the drink laws will be sternly punished. He appeals to ministers of religion, and to all private citizens, to help to rid the State of the traffic.

MR. STEVENSON's amendment to Clause 1 of Sir Joseph Pease's Sunday Closing Bill was carried on Friday, June 4, by 115 to 100. The aim is to secure entire Sunday closing throughout the whole of England except in the metropolis and the metropolitan suburbs. But the Bill has yet to be dealt with by the Peers.

AT a Free Church missionary breakfast at Glasgow recently, Rev. Mr. McCall, Canada, said he had seen more drunkenness in High-street on the previous Saturday night than for a twelvemonth in Montreal. In Canada no minister dare speak against the temperance cause, and there was scarcely one not an abstainer.

Y.W.C.A., NEW YORK.—The new building of the Y.W.C.A., one of the finest buildings in New York, is rapidly nearing completion in East Fifteenth-street, near Fifth-avenue. All women of Protestant denominations over sixteen, whether married or single, are eligible for membership. Boarding places are found for all those who desire, and outsiders who can furnish proper reference are given the same advantages. In the new building there will be free classes for cutting and fitting, draping, free-hand drawing, plain sewing, German and French, and singing by note. These will all be under the care of efficient teachers. The building, when completed, will cost £25,000, the whole amount having already been collected. An extensive library of several thousand volumes is one of the attractions of the Association.

A BIBLICAL MUSEUM is now forming at the Church of England Sunday-school Institute. It is an attempt to gather together a permanent collection of articles calculated to throw light upon the Scriptures, or to attest their historical accuracy. The Museum contains diagrams and pictures, models, casts (of the Rosetta and Moabite stones, the Siloam inscription, &c.), facsimiles of Bible coins, objects from Egypt and the Holy Land, articles illustrating the customs of modern Jews, &c., &c., written explanations accompanying each exhibit pointing out its illustrative value. The Museum is free, and is open from ten to five; Saturdays, ten to two. Any contributions or offers of suitable objects should be addressed to Rev. J. G. Kitchin, Sunday-school Institute, 13, Serjeant's-inn, Fleet-street.

JUVENILE EMIGRANTS.—An interesting spectacle (says The Liverpool Journal of Commerce) was witnessed at the Exchange Station, Manchester, when a party of children left en route for Canada from the Emigration Home in connection with the Boys' and Girls' Refuge, Strangeways, Manchester. The party, consisting of thirty boys and girls, each with a complete outfit and full equipment for the voyage. sailed from Liverpool in the steamship Lake Huron, of the Beaver Line. A number of gentlemen witnessed their departure, and a few kindly words were addressed to the little emigrants, who were in excellent spirits. The children are received at a branch Home, with which the Strangeways institution is connected at Bellville, Ontario, whence those who are old enough go to situations, and the younger ones are sent for adoption into Canadian families.

Anniversaries.

Indigent Blind Visiting Society.

The annual meeting of this society was held last week, at 37, Portman-square, by the kind permission of Lord and Lady Leigh. There was a numerous attendance. Lord Ebury occupied the chair. The Secretary read the annual report, which stated that 891 blind persons are now being regularly visited and relieved by eleven blind visitors. At the Jubilee meeting of the Society in 1884, at the house of the late Earl of Shaftesbury, it was decided that £5000 should be raised if possible and invested, in order to meet the loss of income arising from the cessation of a terminable annuity given by an anonymous donor in 1873. The Gardner Trustees have promised £500 if the whole £5000 is raised within the present year, and of this £2000 has already been received.

The Chairman said he believed this was one of the most valuable societies in the metropolis. Mr. T. E. Armitage remarked that the Society had been the means of raising the blind from the miserable condition in which they were found, and of improving their education and social condition. Rev. H. F. Hobbins cited several instances of blind persons whose life had been made happy through the instrumentality of this Society. Rev. Dr. Campbell Strickland also testified to the great good, religiously and socially, that was being done by the Society to the blind, both in the East and West-end of London.

Monthly Tract Society.

There was a crowded meeting of the friends of this Society to celebrate its forty-seventh anniversary within the council chamber of Exeter Hall. The chairman was Mr. George Williams. Admirable addresses, says The Methodist Times, were delivered by the speakers, and a hearty spirit manifested to aid more than ever a Society which is employing means entirely novel to reach what may be called the "unreachable classes," and perhaps constituting the only channel through which the blessed truths of the Gospel can flow to vast numbers of the more influential sections of the community. The annual report, by Mr. J. M. Mackenzie, showed excellent progress. A special appeal was made on behalf of Spain.

The Chairman said: Think, if some of those who have immense fortunes should receive the light of the Gospel through one of the tracts. See what a blessing they might become to this country. Many are scattering these tracts, and it is impossible to say where a tract is going to do good. Go on scattering the good seed. I cannot help thinking that all of us here may lay it to heart whether we may not do something to help poor down-trodden, priestridden Spain. As we enjoy the liberty with which Christ makes his people free, may we not be anxious that our Spanish brethren and sisters should be free also? Sir R. N. Fowler, M.P. said: The rich do not like to be spoken to about these things, and it is a great thing to have a Society like this which sends tracts to them in which the Gospel is so faithfully set forth. Rev. W. Burnet, Crimplesham, regarded the Society as a very important one, although it does not take a foremost rank in regard to the extent of its operations. For forty-seven years it has been seeking to put into circulation a very large number of publications, all more or less calculated to bring Christian truth and the great essentials of the Gospel before intelligent and cultivated minds.

Rev. Burman Cassin said: The Society picks every month individuals, especially of the upper classes, and sends to them evangelical tracts suited to their capacity of mind, intelligence, and taste. It is impossible to exaggerate the importance of such a monthly messenger as the Society is. I know of nothing more difficult than dealing with what are called the upper classes. I dislike the term, because I do not think that a man's real position is decided by his belonging to what are called the upper, or, what is most improperly called, the lower classes. Mr. J. G. Alexander said: We need to reach not only the aristocracy, but the upper, middle, and educated classes. In our tracts we try to present the Gospel in such a way that there will be nothing to offend cultivated ears. We are anxious to go into Spain. Knowing a little of the circles of France, and having assisted the splendid work of Mr. McAll, I believe there is no better way of working on the continent than through the post. Rev. W. Frith, Rev. G. D. Hooper, and Mr. Stabb, late secretary, also spoke.

Christian Evidence Society.

The annual meeting took place recently at Exeter Hall, Lord Carnarvon in the chair. An abstract of the fifteenth annual report was read by the Secretary, Rev. C. Lloyd Engström.

The Chairman expressed his concurrence with the hopeful tone of the report, though he deplored the deficiency of income. He gave his own experience of the grand work of the Oxford House Mission at Bethnal Green.

Bishop Titcomb said there was nothing new in the attacks of modern infidelity. Christianity had been assailed in succession by persecution, superstition, a cold Deism, a black Atheism, and, lastly, by the Rationalism of this century; but these all had failed. He offered some detailed replies to two questions of an earnest doubter, by showing that there certainly were prophecies in some disputed passages of the Old Testament, and that the Divine nature of Jesus Christ could be established by the Synoptic Gospels alone.

Principal Cave, of Hackney College, referred to his own experience of sceptical difficulties, and his personal knowledge of the work of the Society. He gave his testimony to the ability and wisdom of the agents of the Society in halls in his neighbourhood and in Victoria-park. He earnestly pleaded for a much larger income. The two leading present forms of unbelief derived their strength from love of humanity and zeal for scientific truth. Jesus was the life and centre of the enthusiasm of humanity, and there was no more certain fact than that of personal conversion; the missionary might fail in his arguments, but the story of his own conversion was convincing. Underneath the fair surface of infidelity were sadness and despair, and Christian optimism should come to the relief of German pessimism. Nothing could stand in the place of the preaching of the Gospel, but this Society, like John the Baptist, "prepared the way of the Lord."

Rev. A. J. Harrison, Neuilly, Paris, stated that such great scientific men as Professor Balfour Stewart and Professor Gamgee would endorse the opinion that the tide of infidelity was ebbing. He spoke feelingly, being himself a converted sceptic. He had received hundreds of letters from really earnest doubters, and knew of hundreds who had been converted from infidelity in the North of England. He named the case of a man who was led to believe in Christianity by reading the Gospels twice over, first marking what he could not, and then marking what he could, accept. This man was carried on from acknowledgment of the moral miracles of the Gospel to accept the really lower marvels of miracles commonly so called. It was essential that Christian Evidence lecturers should combine exact logic with high spiritual aspirations, and this combination needed not only earnestness, but training and experience; hence the absolute, necessity for a Christian Evidence Society.

Professor Elmslie, of the Presbyterian Theological College, London, gave an address of a most earnest, cultured, and devotional character, which completely entranced the attention of the audience. He said that unbelief always brings a reaction, because the devil, when he is seen in his true colours, is sure to repel. He thought it was not difficult to discover why so many good Christian people held aloof from the Society, though he deeply deplored the fact. Their own beautiful Christian belief, their certainty of their knowledge of God and of Jesus Christ, made it almost impossible for them to understand the sincerity of doubters; hence they cared not to sympathise with efforts to bring light and comfort to the latter. There were many infidel adventurers, but there were many others who had fallen among thievish doubts, and who sorely needed the helpful kindness of a "Good Samaritan." The Christian Evidence Society was as necessary as a regular army, though voluntary work was not to be despised. It ought to have greatly increased funds to publish any practical and simple evidential works that might from time to time be called for, his own experience showing the great need of more of this literature for earnest doubters. He referred to the utter collapse of all the Rationalistic theories, so that the last effort of Rationalism was trembling on the verge of orthodox belief; thus the examination of false explanations one by one showed that the only means open was that of acceptance of the supernatural origin of the Bible. Again, the Rationalists had established that the only Apostolic theology was that revived at the Reformation. We might be thankful that Rationalism had drawn our attention to the true humanity of Jesus Christ, while its efforts to rob us of belief in his divinity had wholly failed.

Mr. William George, Rev. J. F. Kitto, and Prebendary Row also spoke.

Evangelical Continental Society.

The annual meeting of this Society was recently held at the Lyndhurst-road Church, Hampstead. There was a very large attendance of friends and supporters. Rev. R. F. Horton, M.A., presided. The European Continent, he said, was now open to the efforts of evangelical Christianity in a manner altogether new in its history. There was a breaking away in many countries from the superstitions of the Roman Catholic Church, and certain readiness to receive the old Gospel. He hoped one result of the meeting would be to induce those who visited the Continent in the coming summer to make themselves acquainted, by means of Mr. Ashton's little handbook, with the work that was going on.

Rev. R. S. Ashton, secretary, submitted the annual report of the committee. The Society's operations had been carried on with unabated energy. In France, never was there more activity in the various departments of Christian service than at the present time, but never was the need of this more manifest. The evangelistic stations established in Brussels two years since through the help of the special fund, had been vigorously maintained. In Italy, the question of union between the Waldensian and Free Churches is not yet settled. Meanwhile, the two Churches have pursued their work of evangelisation, and with a fair measure of success. Religious liberty is still allowed on a very restricted scale in Austria. There is nothing like the open field for work that exists in Spain, nor is there the same readiness to listen to the claims of the Gospel. Notwithstanding this, the Society's agents speak hopefully of their work, and are able to report progress. The special fund has enabled the Committee to make a small grant towards a movement in Germany, which they trust is destined to effect much good.

Rev. Henry Simon said the needs of the Continent of Europe, at the present time, were very deep, and were constantly deepening. Last October he went to Italy, and he found the people there were very difficult to get at. He was very much interested in the work he saw going on at Rome. Here Mr. Wall, the Baptist minister, was doing a similar work to that carried on in Paris by Mr. McAll, only on a much smaller scale. As far as he could see, there was widespread poverty in Italy, and he wished that the sentiments of the Peace Society would reach the Italians, the English, and other nations, so that there could be a thorough disarming of European powers. There were millions in North Italy suffering from a disease that was caused by the want of nutritious food. And yet it was trumpeted all abroad that Italy was building another ironclad.

Professor Elmslie said the question was asked, Why could not the Churches abroad do their own work and pay their own ministers, without coming to England and asking for our help and aid? His answer was: Because Protestant England held quite a unique position, that was at once our pride and responsibility. It was partly due to the material, political, and social position of England as a nation in the world's economy. England was the centre of wealth; England was the centre of Europe's finance; England was the centre of manufacture and industry; England was the centre of shipping; England was the centre of colonisation—by centre he meant holding the first central place—England had been the centre of philanthropic enterprise all the world over; England was the great civilising agency; and, therefore, it followed that England, to a large extent, was the moral and religious centre of the evangelical world. England was the centre of Bible distribution; England was the centre of the great missionary enterprise. In England Protestanism was dominant and the Church of Rome was in the minority. Moreover, the Protestantism of England had had a peculiar history that had given to it powers and faculties that were denied to Protestantism all over Europe. The Protestant Church in Roman Catholic countries had not had a chance of growing into health. Therefore, they had a right to come to England and ask the strong to bear the infirmities of the weak. The Roman Catholic Church understood the position. Cardinal Manning had said: "England is the key to the situation; paralyse Protestantism in England and you paralyse it all over the world." Therefore we were bound to play the part of head of all the sister reformed Churches on the Continent. Those Churches might not be as liberal as they might be; that was their misfortune. England had had an education in giving that no other country had had. Woe betide England when it failed in the part it had been called on to play — that of the large-hearted elder brother giving freely as God had given to it; and the claim on England had never been so pressing as at the present day. He ventured to prophecy that this Society must grow in magnitude and do a larger work than it had done yet in carrying the Gospel to the Continent. We must help to evangelise Europe if we would do the best to preserve our own evangelical faith in England. Rome understood the meaning of victory in England. Ten years ago, when he was living in Rome, an Italian who had studied the history of the English Nonconformist Churches, said to him: "Popery is making progress in England, and nowhere else in Europe, and it is because you have had three centuries nearly of immunity from priestcraft, tyranny, and papacy. Popery is getting weakened in Italy. It is being replaced by freethought and infidelity in France, but it is making progress in England simply because you don't know it." And this was true. Rome was concentrating all its best forces on England. It sent over here its best and most cultured representatives, while her agents in those countries where she was unassailed were but mean and ignorant. It was a favourite principle of war to carry a force right through into the country of the attacking foe, and to stir up an insurrection. That was the purpose of this Society. It was carrying on the struggle in the darkest corners of France, and Spain, and Germany, and compelling Rome to look nearer home. Self-defence commanded this line of action, and they should, therefore, do all they possibly could to strengthen its operations.

Rev. Alfred Norris said England had suffered from the Continental Sunday, and from the lax morality of the Continent. Upon these considerations, we ought to return good to the Continent. This Society was doing that, and it was entitled to the support and approbation of the Christian Churches. Mr. R. C. Morgan said Roman Catholicism was an idolatry and a tyranny. He felt more and more every day that Rome was a greater hindrance upon the Continent than was idolatry in any heathen nation. Rome enslaved the conscience; it came into all domestic life and poisoned it, and the advancement upon which they were congratulated in the resolution as to the continued facilities for evangelisation were just in proportion to the declining power of Rome. Signor Varnier, from Sicily, remarked that Romanism, as it existed in England, had barely any relation to Romanism on the Continent. There it was perfect idolatry, worse than the idolatry of India.

Zenana Medical Mission School and Home.

The annual meeting of this Institution was held on Wednesday last week, at Exeter Hall. Mr. R. N. Cust, who presided, said there were 125 millions of women in India, who could not be reached by any of the ordinary missionary organisations. They were, however, being reached by the Zenana visitation and girls' schools, by lady doctors and medical treatment, and by women's meetings in the villages of Northern India. The first and last of these had done excellent service, but it was reserved for this Society to establish and propagate medical work among them, and God had blessed its efforts in a most marked manner.

Dr. G. De G. Griffith, hon. secretary, read a report. During last year 27 students left the College, making 71 who have gone forth into the mission field since the founding of the Society in 1882. Wherever women only can act as doctors, there the agents of the Society are found labouring, including India, China, Africa, and Ceylon. Some of them, in addition to Zenana work, have established schools for the training of native women in the science of medicine. The Committee are anxious to affiliate the College with a London general hospital so as to constitute it a recognised medical body for missionary purposes; and for this object £2000 is needed.

Rev. Dr. Bennett, Mr. De Cobain, M.P., Rev. W. Gray, C.M.S.; Rev. Dr. Landsell, Rev. J. Hiles Hitchens, and Rev. E. Jenkins spoke on behalf of the objects of the Society.

Princess Louise Home.

The fifty-first annual meeting of the friends and subscribers of the Princess Louise Home and National Society for the Protection of Young Girls, was held last week at Exeter Lower Hall, Lord Brabazon in the chair. The report set forth that since the foundation of the Society nearly 3000 young women and girls had been helped, and of these the institution now known as the Princess Louise Home had sheltered 1457 girls. Like most charitable institutions throughout the kingdom, the Home had felt severely the effects of the great commercial and agricultural depression which had existed during the last few years. Necessity had compelled them to dispose of a considerable amount of stock, the greater part of which had been used for the erection of a laundry. As many as 1083 of the girls admitted to the Home had been sent to service, and 250 had been restored to their friends. The total income for the year was £2496.

The Chairman remarked that of the great value of the institution they could not have better proof than the fact that the contributions of friends and relatives of girls who had been in the Home amounted to over £600, or three times as much as the donations received from the public. His Lordship dwelt upon the importance of teaching girls not only to be able to gain their own livelihood, but to make the homes happy and attractive which would afterwards be their own. He had lately been to America, and had been much interested in the schools established there for the training of young girls in this particular manner. He hoped to see the American system adopted here.

Mr. E. Thornton, Archdeacon Philpot, Mr. C. Wood, and others, pleaded the cause of the Home.

National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute.

The annual meeting of these valuable Institutions for Homeless and Destitute Children, on Friday evening last, filled Exeter Hall to overflowing with an audience of sympathetic friends. For more than forty years now the Society has been at work, adding Home after Home, taking in hundreds of fresh cases year by year, and to-day there is as large a scope as ever for the work of mercy which has so successfully been carried forward. The anniversary, and the sight of a new President, in the chair could not fail to remind all of the great loss which the Institution had sustained by the decease of the Earl of Shaftesbury; but it was gratifying to find so cordial a reception given to the Earl of Jersey, who has taken the place of the honoured dead. About an hour was spent in listening to the children of the various Homes sing a good selection of pieces under the direction of Mr. Proudman. They sang very well, and did great credit to their masters and mistresses, whose patience and tact in their respective Homes in prepairing for the great annual display at Exeter Hall should receive a word of hearty recognition.

The annual report, presented by Mr. W. Williams, the secretary, showed that during the year nearly one thousand boys and girls were under the care of the Institution. Last year there were gathered from the streets no less than 322 boys, and 60 girls were also received. There were sent out 402 to fill places, either on sea or land. The receipts from all sources amounted to £23,491 14s. 4d., and there was this year a deficiency between the receipts and payments of £69 14s. 2d. The secretary also reminded the subscribers that the deficiency in the accounts of the last three years, amounting to £5860, is still owing.

After some warm words from the President, Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser said the words "home" and "refuge" were eminently Christian words, and he earnestly asked all present whether they had found the "home" of their affections in God, through Him who is the "Refuge" set before us in the Gospel. If they had, they could not forget the beautiful beatitude, "Blessed are the merciful, for they shall obtain mercy."

Mr. Bompas, Q.C., asked his audience to try and realise what a wonderful thing a good man or a good woman really is. And this Institution seeks to make good men and good women.

Rev. Jackson Wray excited great interest by reading and commenting upon several letters which had appeared in the report from young men who had made their way in life, and who had not forgotten the old Homes in which they were trained. Lord Leigh said he was glad of an opportunity of supporting this evening his relative in the chair.

THE Y.M.C.A. AT PLYMOUTH has purchased one of the finest sites in the town, including two public-houses, for a building for the Association.

MR. TOYE AND HIS ORPHANS.—In our recent notice of the good work carried on by Mr. Toye, we omitted to state that the address of his Orphanage is Lewisham-road, Greenwich, S E.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—June 13, Acts iv. 23–37; June 14, v. 1—16; June 15, v. 17—32; June 16, v. 33—42; June 17, vi. 1—15; June 18, vii. 1—16; June 19, vii. 17—29.

FOREIGN GOVERNESSES AND THE HOLIDAYS.—Dear Sir,—You have formerly assisted us in procuring holiday engagements for foreign governesses. May I ask you again to do so by informing your readers that we are ready for applications from families. With many thanks, yours truly,

C. F. Ryffel, Directress.

The Book World.

The June issue of The Monthly Interpreter (1s. T. & T. Clark) sustains the reputation this periodical has acquired as an exegetical help of the first order. The article on "The Promise of Revelation," by Dr. George Matheson, is specially suggestive.

The Queen's Resolve. By Rev. Charles Bullock, B.D. 2s. 6d. "Home Words" Office. Loyal subjects could not have a better memorial of Her Majesty's jubilee than this handsome volume The author's name is a guarantee of its intrinsic worth and literary ability.

Miss Lamblion's. By Richard Rowe. 3s. 6d. T. Woolmer. A sparkling story of a small boy's school life, with plenty of the adventures, mishaps, and romances that are popularly associated with the career of a boarding-establishment, and which are shared by pedagogues and pupils alike.

"They Two;" or, Elijah and Elisha. Being Addresses by Maria Louisa Charlesworth. Edited by H. M. Barclay, 4d. James Nisbet & Co. These addresses, marked by simplicity of diction, tenderness of touch, and deep spiritual insight, should do much to perpetuate the influence of their saintly writer. To read them is to profit by them.

Present-day Tracts: The Doctrine of the Atonement. By Rev. John Stoughton, D.D. 4d. Religious Tract Society. We heartily commend this treatise as an admirable example of multum in parvo. It is crowded with facts, and expounds the fundamental doctrine it discusses with skill and fidelity. The mode of presentation is worthy of the matter.

The Background of Sacred Story. By Rev. Frederick Hastings. 3s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. The editor of The Homiletic Magazine gives here a series of graphic sketches of the minor Bible characters. He wields a graceful pen, and brings to his task the resources of wide reading and profound thought. We hope to give a specimen extract.

The New Princeton Review (May number). 2s. Hodder & Stoughton. This American magazine grows in interest and ability. The number before us ranges over a wide field of timely topics, and speaks out on some important subjects with no bated breath. Its record of progress in literature, science, and art gives it permanent value for reference. On a preceding page we refer to the article on novels.

Medical Prize Essay on Temperance. The Moral and Physical Advantages of Total Abstinence. By Herbert A. W. Coryn. National Temperance Publication Depôt. This striking and comprehensive estimate of the evil wrought by strong drink, won the prize of a hundred guineas offered by the British Medical Association. It is strongest, as might be expected, in the physiological aspects of the question.

Eastern Wanderings (Illustrated). By Theodore Walker, F.R.G.S. 2s. Partridge & Co. This book will be read with great interest as a well-written account of three months spent in Egypt, Palestine, Turkey, and other Oriental countries. The author's descriptions throw a good deal of light on many passages of Scripture, and he takes advantage of his opportunity to impress a few homely truths upon the hearts of his readers. This is his first literary venture, and we wish it success. The price places it well within popular reach.

Sermons and Sayings by Rev. Sam P. Jones. Edited by W. M. Leftwich, D.D. R. D. Dickinson. The fame of this American evangelist, which some months since crossed the Atlantic, will be enhanced by the republication here of this volume of sermons. They reveal his intense earnestness, scathing denunciation of sin, and pithy way of putting truth. His quaintness and racy colloquial style lend a charm to his sermons absent from those of duller divines. The good taste of the expressions he sometimes uses may be questioned, but his sincerity is beyond doubt.

The Acts of the Apostles. Part ii. From chapter xiii. to xxviii. By Professor Lindsay, Glasgow. 1s. 6d. T. & T. Clark. Teachers of Bible classes and private students will find here, surely, all they want. The chief value of the book will be found in his commentary on the latter chapters of the Acts. The Bible student will find it truly a multum in parvo; teachings that are terse but never trite. The substance of larger works is condensed into a small compass, although, not infrequently, the notes are copious and full. These pages abound with helpful spiritual teachings, applicable to the development of Christian character and the guidance of common life.

A very trenchant and outspoken pamphlet, Women and Priests (1d. Kensit, 18, Paternoster-row) may be commended to notice in these days of "priestly vagaries and mediæval mummeries"

In The Evangelical Magazine for June there is published an excellent photographic portrait, with biographical notice of Rev. R. Robinson, the respected late Secretary of the London Missionary Society.

Messrs. Griffith & Farran propose, under the title of "The Ancient and Modern Library of Theological Literature," to issue a series of volumes which will do for Theological Literature that which is now being done for general literature in various publications, and shall present to the public in handy 1s. volumes, well printed and bound in cloth, examples of the works of the greatest writers of the Christian Church; and some of those books of meditation and devotion which have in every age ministered to the spiritual life of Christian people.

On Saturday last, June 5, The Graphic issued as a supplement a series of maps of Ireland, printed in red and black, giving interesting statistics of the country, which will prove of great value at the present crisis. The maps show at a glance the districts of the greatest and least density of population, the greatest intelligence, the areas in which the Roman Catholic and Protestant populations prevail, the annual value of the agricultural produce of each county, the wealth as estimated by the rateable value of property, and the relative pauperism of each county, together with the districts of worst agrarian crimes.

Letters to the Editor.

"BEHIND THE SCENES."

Sir,—The title of your paper should afford a sufficient guarantee that when any development of evil is attacked in its pages, it will be in a Christian spirit and with lawful weapons. When the Archangel Michael is described in the Epistle of Jude as disputing with the devil about the body of Moses, it is expressly recorded that he brought no railing accusation, but merely said, "The Lord rebuke thee." In your notice of Lord Montagu's book, I read as follows:—"Lord R. Montagu adds 'that' (namely, that he would be wanted in Opposition to take up a high Protestant position) 'was doubtless the reason why Mr. Gladstone wrote his pamphlet on Vaticanism.' And elsewhere he quotes the opinion of a far-seeing Roman Catholic that they were written 'as a blind.'"

Here is the deliberate use of an unchristian weapon, a poisoned arrow, namely, the imputing of a base and deceitful motive to an action. To accuse one of Mr. Gladstone's nobility of character, who so so far from resorting to "blinds" alienates his own supporters by his bold endeavour to apply, as he deems it, one of the leading principles of the Sermon on the Mount to practical politics—to accuse him of an elaborate, laborious, deeply planned lie, is, in my opinion, slander of the deepest dye. I am in a position, moreover, to state positively that the eminent Roman Catholic ecclesiastic referred to did not at the time consider the articles on Vaticanism "as a blind." I heard him myself speak of the articles in terms of the severest, and obviously most genuine, condemnation.—I am, &c.,

Deanery, Southampton. Basil Wilberforce.

Canon Wilberforce appears to have taken statements which were extracted from the book reviewed as if they were assertions made by the reviewer, which they were not. No "railing accusation' has been brought against Mr. Gladstone, but attention has been called to what Lord Robert Montagu has written on a subject as to which he has had, as a Roman Catholic, exceptional opportunities of being well informed.

As to the particular point complained of, it was not "the eminent Roman Catholic ecclesiastic" to whom Canon Wilberforce refers, but "an Irish Roman Catholic gentleman, who was profoundly versed in politics, and intimately acquainted with the aims and workings of the Jesuits and their adherents," who announced to Lord Robert Montagu "that Mr. Gladstone had written his 'Vatican Decrees,' and other pamphlets as a blind" (p. 55). This is not "the imputing of a base and deceitful motive," but the record of the opinion of one who intended to commend Mr. Gladstone thereby, as the context clearly shows.

The "nobility of character" to which Canon Wilberforce appeals would much more effectually refute any such charge, if Mr. Gladstone's public acts in dispensing ecclesiastical patronage did not show so notorious a sympathy with the Romanising party in the Church of England; the last especially, which appointed to the Ecclesiastical Commission the Chairman of the English Church Union, who openly advocates union with Rome as the goal to be aimed at by Churchmen.

At a time when Rome is making such efforts (as Cardinal Manning plainly tells us) to overthrow Protestantism in England, and so throughout the world! it is surely well to keep our eyes open to all that throws light upon the subtle working of those Jesuit conspirators in whose hands statesmen, even though they be of noble character, may sometimes be found to be but tools.

The Reviewer.

DIVINE SOVEREIGNTY.

Dear Sir,—While acknowledging the truthfulness and importance of many of the statements made by Mr. McComb in The Christian of May 27, and cordially sympathising with his general aim, I venture on a criticism which, though in form it is verbal, yet seems to me not unimportant. Mr. McComb places in antithesis with each other Love and Justice. I would suggest that the more correct antithesis is Justice and Mercy. Love, I humbly think, is too comprehensive a term to be used as Mr. McComb uses it. We are told that God is Love. We are not told that God is Justice, or that God is Mercy. Are not Justice and Mercy two different aspects of Love? Is not Justice Love in its character of contrariety (hatred) to Unlovingness? Is not Mercy Love in its character of pity towards unloving persons? To make Mercy and Justice, rather than Love and Justice, the two opposing terms of the antithesis, seems to me not only more Scriptural, but also more in accordance with the language of older theologians. See, for instance, Francis Quarles's exquisite poem on the subject in Quarles' Emblems, book iii. 10.—Yours faithfully,

Chi Kappa.

THE FATHERHOOD OF GOD.

Dear Sir,—May I add one or two annotations on the letter of J. W. F. to those which you have already made.

Your correspondent refers to Acts xvii. 28 as proving that men are by nature united to God in a bond of sonship much stronger than that which exists between human parents and their children. But the language of the text does not bear out this conclusion: Γένος, rightly translated offspring, is unquestionably a word of lower and broader signification than sons or children. It embraces the relationship which exists between the lowest of living creatures and their progeny, where none of the obligations or privileges of sonship exist. Neither do the words, "In Him we live and move and have our being" imply anything more than that we are on all sides surrounded by God's presence, and our natural life at all times sustained by his power. If Paul had meant all that J. W. F. supposes him to mean in this verse, how could he have written to the Romans, ix. 7, 8: "Neither, because they are the seed of Abraham, are they all children: but, In Isaac shall thy seed be called. That is, They which are the children of the flesh, these are not the children of God: but the children of the promise are counted for the seed." How could he have told the Ephesians that the unconverted are "dead in trespasses and sins," and "alienated from the life of God"?

Your correspondent admits that the wicked are children of the devil, but holds that they may be children of God at the same time. But neither our Lord nor St. John allows the existence of such a two-fold parentage. "If God were your Father, ye would love Me" (John viii. 42), said Jesus to those whom he called children of the devil; and St. John is equally distinct as to this. "In this," he writes (1 John iii. 10), "the children of God are manifested, and the children of the devil: whosoever doeth not righteousness is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother."

If the physical fact of our existence being derived from God were enough to constitute us his children, then indeed no misconduct on our part could obliterate our sonship. But on the contrary it is an act of pure condescension on God's part to call any one of his creatures by the title of son; and this title, with all the privileges attached to it, is therefore just as capable of being forfeited, as the title of a nobleman or the rank of an officer in the Queen's service.—I remain, Sir, sincerely yours,

Woking. Horace Noel.

REQUESTS.—PRAISE, for special blessings attending a series of mission services conducted recently in Colby, Norfolk.——PRAYER, for much blessing in connection with open-air evangelistic services in Lennoxtown, near Glasgow.——For Gospel services in the Baptist Church, Dunoon.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL, MILE END ROAD.—The work here goes on with unabated interest. During the past month Mr. Charles Inglis has been preaching there; and it has been a glorious sight to see nearly 5000 people crowded into that hall on Sunday nights to hear the Gospel from our brother's lips. Many have been under deep conviction, and not a few have found Christ in the after-meetings.

SUNDAY, JUNE 13.—I SAMUEL V.

Although the Israelites by their superstitious treatment of the ark of God had lost it from amongst them, and betrayed it into the hand of the enemy, yet the Lord would not suffer it to be permanently kept by them, or while with them to be dishonoured, as at first was the case, when "they brought it into the house of Dagon, and set it by Dagon."

3.—Dagon was fallen upon his face to the earth.—"As if worshipping the superior majesty of the Lord, according to Ps. xcvii. 7, 'Worship Him, all ye gods.'"—Sp. Com.

4.—Only the stump of Dagon was left to him.—The margin reads for "stump" the "fishy part," but there is no separate word in the Hebrew to represent one or the other. It is simply "only Dagon was left by (or over) him," which some render "by himself alone, without head or hands." —Sp. Com. But Keil points out that Dagon is derived from "dag," a fish, and is known to have been an image of "a human body with head and hands and a fish's tail;" hence Dagon in this sentence may mean "the fishy part" (as the margin suggests) or "the fish's shape."

6.—Smote them with emerods.—"A corruption for 'hemorrhoids.' It is mentioned among the diseases with which God threatened to punish the Israelites for disobedience (Deut. xxviii. 17)."—Sp. Com.

12.—The cry of the city went up into heaven.—"Ekron was visited even more severely than Ashdod and Gath. The longer the Philistines resisted and refused to recognise the chastening hand of God in the plagues inflicted upon them, the more severely would they necessarily be punished, that they might at last be brought to see that the God of Israel, whose sanctuary they still wanted to keep as a trophy of their victory over that nation, was the omnipotent God, who was able to destroy his foes.—Keil.

MONDAY, JUNE 14.—I SAMUEL VI.

1.—And the ark of the Lord was in the country of the Philistines seven months.—The LXX. (the Greek translation) has a curious addition to the end of this verse, "and their land brought forth swarms of mice." This may have been added as an explanation to account for the allusion to mice in the trespass offering described in verse 4.

5.—Ye shall make images of your emerods, and images of your mice that mar the land.—"It was a prevalent custom in heathen antiquity to make offerings to the gods expressive of the particular mercy received. Those saved from shipwreck offered pictures of the shipwreck; slaves and captives, in gratitude for the recovery of their liberty, offered chains to the Lares; retired gladiators their arms to Hercules; and in the fifth century a custom prevailed among Christians of offering in their churches gold or silver hands, feet, eyes, &c., in return for cures effected in those members respectively in answer to prayer. This was probably a heathen custom transformed into a Christian use, for a similar usage is still found among the heathen in India."—Sp. Com. In Roman Catholic countries the custom still prevails, and betrays its heathen origin by the offerings being made at the shrine of some particular saint (corresponding to the gods of the heathen), who gets the credit of having wrought the cure so commemorated.

12.—The kine took the straight way to the way of Beth-shemesh.—"Milch kine had been chosen on purpose to make the sign more significant. Nature would obviously dispose the kine to go towards their calves; their going in an opposite direction was therefore plainly a Divine impulse overruling their natural inclination. And this is brought out more distinctly by the mention of their lowing, which of course was caused by their remembering their calves."—Sp. Com.

TUESDAY, JUNE 15.—I SAMUEL VII.

2.—All the house of Israel lamented after the Lord.—"The phrase 'to lament after God' is taken from human affairs, when one person follows another with earnest solicitations and complaints, until he at length assents. We have an example of this in the Syrophenician woman, Matt. xv. (compare especially ver. 15, she crieth after us')."—Schmidt. Kimchi explains it, "Not that all Israel grieved for the absence of the ark, but that all Israel turned to the Lord with weeping and lamentation." A national repentance preceded the coming national deliverance.

6.—Drew water, and poured it out before the Lord. —The explanation given by the Targum is the most satisfactory: "They poured out their heart in penitence as it were water." Compare Ps. cii. (title), "A prayer of the afflicted when he poureth out his complaint before the Lord;" also Ps. lxii. 8, "Pour out your heart before Him." An illustration of the Oriental mode of expressing inward feelings by outward acts, of the same kind as Pilate washing his hands to express his innocence, though it may be hoped of a more genuine character.

7.—They were afraid of the Philistines.—Though their repentance may have been genuine, their faith as yet was very weak. Hence the fear spoken of here, and also their trusting rather to Samuel's intercession for them than to the Lord Himself, expressed in the words, "Cease not to cry unto the Lord our God for us, that He will save us out of the hand of the Philistines." To this Samuel wisely responds by sacrifice, making "the Lamb of God" rather than himself the interceding power; and he succeeds by doing so, for ver. 9, which begins with "And Samuel took a sucking lamb," ends with "and the Lord heard him," or better, as in margin and R.V., "answered him."

17.—And there he built an altar unto the Lord.—"Whether this altar was in connection with the tabernacle or not we have no means of deciding, since we are in complete ignorance as to where the tabernacle was at this time, or who was high priest or where he resided. It is quite possible that Samuel may have removed the tabernacle from Shiloh to some place near to Ramah; and it is improbable that, brought up as he was from infancy in the service of the tabernacle, he should have left it. At the beginning of Solomon's reign we know it was at Gibeon, close to Ramah (1 Kings iii. 4; 2 Chron. i. 3—6).—Sp. Com.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 16.—I SAMUEL VIII.

3.—His sons walked not in his ways.—Strange that in Samuel we should find the same sad falling off in his sons as in the case of Eli, though the Lord had through Samuel rebuked Eli for this very evil (iii. 13). The words "he made his sons judges" look as if there was the same paternal partiality as in Eli's case. Certain it is that his sons' evil conduct afforded Israel an excuse for their grave sin of asking for a king: see verse 5.

6.—The thing displeased Samuel.—"I.e., his feelings were hurt by the slight put upon him by the request for the king. The Hebrew phrase 'it was evil in the eyes of,' almost always implies that the thing spoken of caused anger, indignation, or some revulsion of feeling (see Gen. xxi. 11, 12; 1 Sam. xxix. 7; 2 Sam. xi. 25; Jonah iv. 1, &c.). The answer of the Lord, 'they have not rejected thee,' shows that Samuel's personal feelings had been hurt."—Sp. Com. This was probably the way in which the Lord chastened him for his appointing his ill-conducted sons to be judges. Samuel should not have forgotten God's word to Eli (ii. 30), "Them that honour Me I will honour," &c., spoken in reference to his "honouring his sons" above Him

20.—That we also may be like all the nations.—How strange and perverse is Israel's forgetfulness of their peculiar calling, which was to be unlike all the nations, "for what one nation in the earth is like thy people Israel?" (1 Chron. xvii. 21). Forgetfulness, too, of the command, "Ye shall not walk in the manners of the nation, which I cast out before you, . . . and ye shall be holy unto Me: for I the Lord am holy, and have severed you from other people, that ye should be mine" (Lev. xx. 23, 26). So Christians by conformity to the world not only disobey the command, "Be not conformed to this world," but forget their peculiar calling, which is, "they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." "Who gave Himself for our sins, that He might deliver us from this present evil world" (Gal. i. 4).

THURSDAY, JUNE 17.—I SAMUEL IX.

1.—Now there was a man of Benjamin.—"The sacred historian now tracks, as it were, another stream of events which were to concur in working out God's providential purpose of giving a king to Israel."—Sp. Com.

2.—A choice young man, and handsome.—R.V. and others omit the word "choice" as not expressed in the Hebrew. "From his shoulders and upwards he was higher than any of the people." Such a figure as this was well adapted to commend him in the eyes of men, but not to God; for when Samuel was sent to anoint David (xvi. 7) it was said to him, "The Lord seeth not as man seeth; for man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart."

16.—That he may save my people out of the hand of the Philistines.—This purpose of the Lord in granting Israel's request for a king was only partially attained under Saul, who himself fell in battle under the Philistines (xxxi.), but seems to have been reserved for David, the king after God's heart. "The reason here assigned for the establishment of a monarchy is by no means at variance with the displeasure which God had expressed to Samuel at the desire of the people for a king (viii. 7); since this displeasure had reference to the state of heart from which the desire had sprung."—Keil.

20.—On whom is all the desire of Israel?—"The sense rather is, "Whose are (or shall be) all the delectable things of Israel? Are they not for thee and for thy father's house? As king, Saul and the house of his father would be honoured and enriched. What need had he, then, to care for anything so insignificant as the asses?"—Sp. Com. So R.V.

FRIDAY, JUNE 18.—I SAMUEL X.

1.—And kissed him.—In token of homage, as in Ps. ii. 12, "kiss the Son." Is it not because the Lord hath anointed thee?—"Anointing with oil was a symbol of endowment with the Spirit of God. Hitherto there had been no other anointing among the people of God than that of the priests and sanctuary (Exod. xxx. 23; Lev. viii. 10). When Saul, therefore, was consecrated as king by anointing, the monarchy was inaugurated as a Divine institution, standing on a par with the priesthood. Through this anointing the king was set apart from the rest of the nation as 'anointed of the Lord' (xii. 3, 5, &c.), and sanctified as the 'captain,' its leader and commander."—Keil.

2.—When thou art departed.—"To confirm the consecration of Saul as king over Israel, Samuel gave him three signs, which would occur on his journey home, and would be a pledge to him that Jehovah would accompany his undertakings with his Divine help, and practically accredit him as his anointed. These signs, therefore, stand in the closest relation to the calling conveyed to Saul through his anointing."—Ibid.

12.—But who is their father?—"The LXX., some copies of the Vulgate, Syriac, and Arabic versions, all read, 'Who is his father?' as a further enhancement of the wonder. Who would have expected Kish to have a son among the prophets?" —Sp. Com. But Keil prefers the Hebrew text, and explains it to mean that if the prophets had received their gift of prophecy from the Lord it was equally possible for the Lord to communicate the same gift to Saul.

20.—The tribe of Benjamin was taken.—"As the result of the lot was regarded as a Divine decision, not only was Saul accredited by this act as king in the sight of the whole nation, but he himself, also, was more fully assured of the certainty of his own election on the part of God."—Keil.

SATURDAY, JUNE 19.—I SAMUEL XI.

The King must now be proved to be not only the ruler over Israel, but the captain whom God had appointed to lead them to victory.

1.—Nahash the Ammonite.—It is significant that the first opponent of God's anointed King should be named Nahash, which means "serpent," and that Saul should be confirmed in the kingdom (see ver. 14) by his brilliant victory over this self-confident enemy of Israel (see ver. 2). It is the more interesting as following so closely the two last verses of chap. x., where a vein of mystic truth may be seen in connection with Saul (God's appointed king) going to Gibeah, which means "high place." There follow him "a band of men, whose hearts God had touched," whilst "the children of Belial" doubt his power to save, despise him, and bring him no presents.

6.—And the Spirit of the Lord came upon Saul.—"This time (see x. 6, 10) the Spirit of God came upon him, as upon the Judges before him, as a spirit of supernatural energy and power."—Sp. Com.

12.—Who is he that said, Shall Saul reign over us? —It was Israel who said of Jesus, "We will not have this man to reign over us," so that the magnanimity of Saul in sparing those who had rejected him at first, seems to shadow forth the return of Jesus as King when "all Israel shall be saved."

13.—To-day the Lord hath wrought salvation in Israel.—A noble confession that his victory had not been wrought by his own prowess or power, but by the Lord Himself. Saul's beginning is good, his end is sad.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most important that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

BALLS' POND.—The Coultas' family have been holding special Gospel services in the Balls' Pond Mission Hall. A correspondent states that they have been made a great blessing to the poor of the neighbourhood.

THE BRIGHTON OPEN-AIR AND CHRISTIAN MISSION commenced the present season's open-air work on the beach, by the lifeboat house, on Sunday evening, May 23, when there was a large attendance of people, who listened attentively to the addresses.

"THE TRUTH."—Mr. F. E. Marsh has consented to receive subscriptions to Dr. Brookes' (of St. Louis) magazine, The Truth. His address is 23, Oakland's-grove, Shepherd's-bush, London, W. Friends in England who desire to become subscribers, or to obtain occasional numbers, or specimen copies, can do so by addressing him.

BOW, E.—The 8.30 o'clock Sunday night services for the people conducted at Bow, by W. Evans Hurndall, M.A. (of Harley-street Chapel), were concluded for the season on Sunday week, when the large hall of the Bow and Bromley Institute was densely crowded, large numbers having to stand. About two-thirds of the audience remained to the after-meeting.

BRIGHTON HOME FOR FOREIGN GOVERNESSES.—The hon. lady superintendent of the Home heartily thanks the kind friends whose generous liberality has mainly contributed to make it, for twenty-one years, a comfortable resting place for many a toil-worn teacher, as well as a safe refuge for young foreigners on their first coming to this country; she regrets to inform them that the Home is now closed.

LONDON CITY MISSION.—On the invitation of the Princess Louise and the Marquis of Lorne a meeting in aid of the special missionary work of the London City Mission was held on Saturday afternoon in the grounds of Kensington Palace. The Marquis of Lorne expressed the great pleasure which the Princess Louise had felt in offering the use of the Palace grounds for the meeting. Warmly commending the work of the Mission, he said it was in no spirit of patronage that they wished to help their brethren in the poor parts of London, but simply as Englishmen and Englishwomen, as brothers and sisters, and because the poor strove so hard to help themselves. Rev. H. Webb-Peploe commented on the need felt by the Society for at least 200 more missionaries. Rev. Dr. D. Fraser, Mr. Billington, missionary in Bermondsey, and Mr. Charley, missionary at Islington Cattle Market, also spoke.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday, June 5, 1886.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

SICK CHILDREN'S DINNER TABLE.—It would be difficult to estimate the amount of real blessing dispensed by such an institution as this. The twentieth annual report tells us that the number of dinners supplied during the last year was 1990. We get a pleasant picture, indeed, of a number of little ones sitting down three times a week to a feast of roast beef, potatoes, and bread, and of the bright influences by which they are surrounded during the dinner hour. By no means slight are the moral influences, the cheerfulness, cleanliness, and order, and the kindness, which come as a new light into their young lives. Many have been saved for careers of future usefulness. Last year a further effort was made, and some children from the neighbourhood of Lisson-grove were sent off to Convalescent Homes in the country. The address is 47, Earl-street, Lisson-grove, W.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

Amongst the gratifying results of Missionary Work in the Metropolis and Country Towns is the rescue of large numbers of Friendless Girls from immoral surroundings. From January 1st of this year to the 31st ult., FIVE HUNDRED AND FORTY-EIGHT have been brought to the Office, representing all classes and conditions of the Friendless and Fallen; and of these a considerable proportion were quite young girls—fatherless, motherless, or even worse; and to extend the Christian hand to these is indeed a solemn obligation resting on those who profess to be the followers of Him who laid down his life in order that He might save to the uttermost.

Parson's Green Homes.

About ten years ago the Committee of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution secured, by purchase, the freehold of the property as it then stood. Within eighteen months one Home was rebuilt to accommodate thirty inmates. Subsequently, another part of the property was adapted for thirty more—specially young girls. Now the work of extension is being carried on by the rebuilding of the remainder—which will make accommodation for eighty inmates at this Branch of the Institution.

This extension will involve an outlay of about £1,550, and the freewill offerings of the Lord's people in aid of the above are most earnestly solicited.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Annual Meeting of the Institution will be held in the Gardens in the rear of the Parson's Green Homes, on Saturday, the 19th instant.

SIR ROBERT N. FOWLER, BART., M.P.,

will preside at 3 o'clock, supported by Frank A. Bevan, Esq., and the Revs. J. L. Forster, F. A. C. Lillingston, W. H. J. Page, John Shaw, J. S. Sinclair, and H. W. Webb-Peploe.

At the close of the Annual Meeting

MRS. FRANK A. BEVAN

will lay a Memorial Stone to commemorate the further extension of the Preventive Homes.

Tickets of admission not necessary.

Tea will be provided in a Marquee.

The Parson's Green Station on the District Railway is within three minutes' walk of the Homes, and friends may book to that point from almost any part of the Metropolis.

Donations, either for the proposed extension, or the maintenance of the Homes in general, will be received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; The Bankers, Lloyds, Barnetts, and Bosanquets, 60, Lombard-street, E.C., and 54, St. James's-street, S.W.; Francis Nicholls, Esq. NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY
INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
BRONCHITIS merging into PHTHISIS.
CASE of Mrs. S. A. SMITH, of HALIFAX.

This patient came to me first nearly three years ago. She had lost her father with lung disease. About twelve months before her visit, severe cough had come on, following an attack of pleurisy, There was a great deal of dark expectoration. Pains extended from the chest to the back. The breathing very short, the appetite bad. She had lost flesh and strength, but, having begun my medicine, she was already improving.

[This was evident on examination, though there was still great delicacy of the lungs, with much chronic bronchial irritation. There was also every indication of arrested phthisis. Prior to her commencing with my medicine the pains had been felt in both sides severely, and all over the chest and down the arm. The breathing also had been very difficult and spasmodic. The secretions had all been thoroughly wrong, but were now improving; and palpitations and irregularity of the heart's action were also somewhat better.]

After this visit she continued my treatment, gradually improving, using also a magnetic appliance. I will not trouble the reader with extracts from the long letters which passed, but will only refer to the last, received from Mr. Smith in February of this year. He says:—

"With the blessing of God the means were instrumental in the complete recovery of my wife, whom I did not expect to live many weeks. I believe her restoration would have been effected earlier by attending more carefully to your instructions. The price is much less than any medicine that I know of. I have pleasure to bear this testimony unsolicited. You can use my letter as you please."—Thomas Smith, Siddal Works, Halifax.

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

ARRANGED AS A
MUSICALLY ILLUSTRATED SERVICE. By FREDERICK BRETT.
WITH BOTH OLD NOTATION AND TONIC SOL-FA IN ONE BOOK.

There are many persons who are acquainted with Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's quaint and striking tract of "The Man who Spoiled the Music." By the Author's kind permission the story has now been produced as in which form it is expected to prove both acceptable and profitable. It is hoped that many who—like "Jack," of whom this story speaks—have been too long accustomed to spoil the music in their own hearts and their own homes, and to spoil the music also in the lives of others, may experience the same change of thought, feeling, and purpose through which "Jack" passed; and then, like him, having learned the New Song, set themselves to work to bring back both music and sunshine into the hearts and lives of all around.

The WORDS of the Hymns of this SERVICE OF SONG may be had SEPARATELY on a Sheet,
PRICE ONE PENNY.

"Would that in the darkness of this world's night we were all awake! The Lord Jesus expects that His people shall form a chain of watchers, extending from Jerusalem, the scene of His triumphs, to the very ends of the earth. He would have them kindle their responsive signal fires amid the gloom, till tidings

"Of that renowned and glorious conquest,
Once achieved on Calvary,"

shall have reached the savage Ethiop, the Makololo, and red Kaffir, on the south; the Laplander and the native of frozen Siberia on the north; till, on the west, the glad tidings shall have coursed through the kingdoms of Europe, bounded across the ocean, and swept over the three Americas, from Greenland's icy mountains to the flaming Andes, and thence to Fuegia's inhospitable shore; and till, on the east, the song of liberty shall have burst from the lips of emancipated India, shall have been caught up by the millions of awakening China, shall have been echoed back in strains of gratitude from the isles of the wide Pacific; and till the tiny Norfolk Isle, with its pines and tree-ferns, and vast Australia, with all her gold, consecrate their service to the Lord."—Page 13.

Variety, Unity, Activity.
An Address
By Rev. A. N. SOMERVILLE, D.D.
of Glasgow.

"It is probable that the profuse variety in the development of grace in different individuals is due in part to the diversity of natural constitution with which grace comes in contact. Here we find Abel with his righteousness, and Enoch with his holy walk; Noah, with his stedfastness; Abraham, with his faith; Sarah, with her wifely reverence; Melchisedec, grandest, as I take it, of the sons of Ham; the servant Eliezer, with his conscientiousness; Isaac, with his fear of the Lord; Rebecca, with her alacrity at the call of God; Jacob, with his power in prayer; Joseph, with his filial and fraternal love; Job, the Gentile, with his patience; Moses, the lawgiver, with his meekness; Aaron, with his stillness under the rod of God; Miriam, with her timbrel of praise, and all her 'jubilee singers' by the sea; Joshua, with his courage; Jethro, the Midianite, with his sagacity; Caleb, with his full following of the Lord; Phinehas, with his zeal; Rahab, of Jericho, who received God's messengers with peace."—Page 4.

In this remarkable address Mr. Somerville enumerates and gives the characteristics of nearly one hundred Scripture persons.

MR. WILLIAM WHEATLEY,

The Friend of Discharged Prisoners.

SPECIALISM is one of the outstanding characteristics of this age, whether in the walks of secular life or in the broad fields of Christian endeavour. The proverb about being "Jack of all trades and master of none" was never truer or of more general application than in these times of high-pressure competition and enlarged discovery. So we have specialists in law, in medicine, in literature, in theology, and most of all in that science of applied theology which we call Christian work. One man cares for poor or orphaned children. Another devotes his life to the welfare of those who go down to the sea in ships. A third strives to compass the cure of dipsomaniacs. One woman takes as her hobby the finding of honest work for her poorer sisters. A second is fascinated by the red-coats, and nobly earns the appellation of the Soldier's Friend. A third seeks and finds her life-work in what is perhaps the most arduous of all Christlike service—the lifting up of the fallen.

(From Photograph by Mr. H. T. Reed.)

Scarcely less arduous is the sphere chosen by the worker whose portrait we give to-day, and who truly deserves the title of the friend of discharged prisoners. Mr. WILLIAM WHEATLEY necessarily pursues his mission in the shade, but his name is deeply engraven to-day on many a heart, from which, but yesterday or the day before, hope had well nigh fled, leaving as its reversionary tenant nothing but a deep and dark despair.

Most of our readers will recollect that the St. Giles's Christian Mission, one branch of which embraces this work among the criminal classes, has for its devoted superintendent Mr. George Hatton, whose portrait we gave last December. As we then stated, Mr. Hatton's health is anything but robust. It is fortunate for the work in which he is so intensely interested, that he has in Mr. Wheatley such an experienced and well-qualified second self. Before giving some details of this truly noble mission of rescue, we may say a word or two about the man himself. From reasons of limited space they must be few, but we gladly refer the reader for fuller details to Mr. Holden Pike's recent book,* which gives an excellent account of the life-labours of Mr. Hatton and Mr. Wheatley. It is a singularly interesting circumstance that Mr. Wheatley was converted through the faithful preaching of Mr. Hatton, whose comrade in Christian work he afterwards became. His conversion was of the soundest possible sort, for we find that he immediately showed signs of the new life by assiduous efforts to relieve the sorrows of the poor, and carry to them the light and consolations of the Gospel. His trade is that of a goldbeater. In the day season he hammered away at the yellow metal, while in the evening time, on the Sabbath days, and, in short, as often as he could, he wielded on human hearts the hammer of God's Word, and manufactured out of very rough material the fine beaten gold of the sanctuary—repentance, faith, hope, and other graces of the Spirit. As time wore on, the goldbeating receded more and more into the background, and now, for some time, Mr. Wheatley's connection with this skilled art has been of the most slender description. He finds congenial and unremitting occupation in the art that needs an access of more than human skill—that of turning the pariahs of society into honest men, who, as the poet has assured us, are "the noblest work of God."

Considering the many occasions on which we have referred to this rescue work during the past eight years, it may be presumed that our readers are more or less familiar with the methods employed by Mr. Wheatley and his helpers in their Samaritan work from day to day. They meet the prisoners as they emerge, at the expiry of their sentences, from the London prisons at Wandsworth, Holloway, Pentonville, and Millbank. The work was commenced at Coldbath Fields, but that famous place of free entertainment opens its grim portals to "Black Maria" no more. Morning after morning, be it fair or foul, these men and youths, with the criminal taint fresh upon them, are met and invited to a frugal though hearty breakfast. They are talked to kindly but seriously, invited to sign the temperance pledge, urged to ask God for pardoning and restoring grace, and in due course, on subsequent personal application at the Holborn office, are helped in every conceivable way to return to the paths of sobriety, of honesty, and of happiness. The only condition demanded of them is a genuine repentance for the past, and a desire to lead a new life. This condition, alas! is by no means always evident. Much experience of the cunning devices of the hardened criminal, and the hearing of many of his specious stories, have made Mr. Wheatley preternaturally acute in detecting the insincere, who soon find out that a tale is not swallowed at Brooke-street because it hangs together fairly well and is glibly told. But our friend never forgets to mingle mercy even while he unmasks the hypocrite; and to the truly penitent his heart, tender as any woman's, goes out in unfailing sympathy and unwearied effort.

* SAVING TO THE UTTERMOST: The Story of Twenty-five Years' Labours in St. Giles. 2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton.

This Mission is indeed one of the most remarkable illustrations of the power of grace, as contrasted with that of law, in turning the sinner from the evil of his ways. It was the writer's privilege one morning last week to stand in front of the frowning gates of the prison at Wandsworth as the clock chimed half-past eight, the hour of daily release to those who have paid the penalty of their crimes. The sight that meets the spectator's eyes on these occasions is in many respects a very pathetic and suggestive one; but the prevailing idea that comes home to the mind is this—that though punishment may be a wholesome deterrent from future crime, it is next to worthless as a reformative factor in the soul of the criminal. As we watched the straggling line of figures that came out of the little wicket-gate, and drew their first breath of liberty after a sojourn in durance vile, we could scarcely detect a solitary symptom of softness of spirit, or sorrow for the wrong they had done. There was the jaunty air of indifference that found vent, in one case, in a jocular remark about the "fine college, and no mistake," from which he had just been released. A youth, still in his teens, was met by an elderly woman, presumably his mother. All the greeting she got was a gruff "Get away!" several times repeated—not a very hopeful omen for his future good behaviour. One or two had their "pals" in waiting with a change of outer garments; they speedily vanished from the scene, and what might be the next act in their life's drama one could only conjecture. Some thirty were set free on that morning, and we were more than surprised to find twenty-seven make for the little Mission-hall near the gates. From their demeanour we had not expected more than half a dozen to breakfast. In former days Mr. Wheatley used to stand outside the portals, and gave away the invitation tickets as the prisoners appeared. Now, however, the authorities are so convinced of the value of this work that they permit the tickets to be handed to the prisoners inside. On both sides of the gate, indeed, the police seem heartily to befriend the workers. One asked a policeman on duty in front of the prison the way to some place whither he was bound; the constable gave the information, but at the same time kindly advised the man to "go and have his breakfast first."

It is only bread and butter and coffee that are provided, but on this occasion, at any rate, the company set to work with an evident appetite, sharpened probably by prison fare. As they ate and drank, Mr. Wheatley read from Psalm li., and spoke to them in a conversational tone with wonderful wisdom and skill. He seemed to know exactly what stops to touch in order to find the key to their hearts. He awoke dormant recollections of early training, and said some plain things about the shame and disgrace they were causing their relatives. He preached the Gospel of the three R's with a simplicity and effect that many a D.D. might have envied. He was peculiarly happy in some of his illustrations. Speaking of Christ as the Door, he said that a man might enter a house by the window instead of the door, but it would be a very improper and illegal method of entrance. He had, indeed, heard of people going out of a house by the window when there was a policeman not far off. The little audience quickly saw the point of the remark, and no doubt it served to fix the truth in their memories. As our earnest and sympathising friend spoke of the grace of God in Christ, of his willingness to forgive the repentant, of the sorrow that dogs the footsteps of the transgressor, and of the joy unspeakable that comes from a sense of sins forgiven, all eyes—even those of the youth who seemed so hardened—were suffused, and many a furtive tear had to be wiped away. We could not but feel that that ten minutes' brotherly talk had done far more to set these poor fellows on the right track than ten years of penal servitude could have done. Mr. Wheatley was very faithful in his advice about the drink, and out of the twenty-seven, the odd seven willingly signed the pledge. We were glad to notice, on referring to the daily record of attenders at breakfast, that the proportion of signers is frequently much larger. It was with much satisfaction we learned that the custom of the "County Arms," hard by the prison gates, has gone down considerably since the Mission began its operations at Wandsworth.

As we have already said, the morning's work at the prison gates is but a small part of Mr. Wheatley's daily round. From noon, onwards, he is busy at the office in Brooke-street, Holborn, attending to the large and varied correspondence; seeing those who call with a view to start out afresh in life; laying tracks for getting them employment, and keeping touch with the thousand and one intricate details of such a widely ramified work. He is fortunate in having been able to gain the ear of many employers of labour, and it is really astonishing what success attends his efforts to launch his protégés once more on a life of honest industry, either at home or abroad.

We have alluded to Mr. Wheatley's relations with the powers that be. At Scotland Yard, we may say, and down through all the ranks of the responsible officials, his aid is eagerly welcomed as a go-between in furthering the future welfare of these discharged prisoners. Long service men from Portland, Dartmouth, and elsewhere have their money, earned by work and good behaviour, paid to them through the St. Giles' Mission. The City and other magistrates continually avail themselves of Mr. Wheatley's advice as to the fate of those brought before them for judgment, particularly in the case of boys charged with a first offence. Many a time and oft, through this intervention, the blessed prerogative of mercy is exercised, and those who have yielded to temptation in some evil moment are helped back to better ways without the fatal stigma that sticks to a "gaol bird." The services thus rendered by the Mission and by Mr. Wheatley as its factotum, cannot be adequately described here, but they are enough to entitle him to a place among the real benefactors of the nation.

One other point we must refer to in thus briefly sketching this work among law breakers. While he is tender and pitiful to those who confess and forsake their evil deeds, Mr. Wheatley is as stern as abstract law itself in cases where he finds that the transgressor is of set purpose pursuing his career of crime. He naturally becomes the possessor of many confidences from those whom he befriends, and these are most righteously used for the protection of society. What with these confidences, and his equally confidential relations with the chiefs of criminal police, Mr. Wheatley probably carries in his breast more of the secrets of "shady" life in London than any man outside the innermost sanctum at Scotland Yard. Thus he renders valuable aid at one time in breaking up a gang of coiners of counterfeit money; at another he gets on the track of a determined band of suburban burglars; while he now and then has the genuine satisfaction of lending a hand towards the release of one who has been unjustly convicted, and bringing the real criminal to book. A case of this kind cropped up last week on the very day which we partly spent in Mr. Wheatley's company. An elderly man had been sentenced to a term of imprisonment for a crime that he never committed, and was released at the end of three months, when his innocence was established. Mr. Wheatley found him work, and last week we accompanied him to one of the City courts of justice, where he added a strong link to the chain of evidence that will probably consign a young, but artful and heartless, criminal to five years' incarceration for a cruel perjury.

We have only been able to give our readers a passing glimpse of the good work that is done by the St. Giles' Christian Mission, not only on behalf of prisoners themselves, but of the general public. We have said enough however, we feel certain, to establish our proposition that Mr. Wheatley and Mr. Hatton are national benefactors, by picking these fallen men and lads out of the gutter of vice and crime, and implanting in them new hopes and aspirations — thus thinning the ranks of the dangerous classes, and adding many trophy gems to the crown of King Emmanuel. On a former occasion, when advocating this work, we expressed the opinion that the Mission well deserved to be subsidised out of the public purse. We hold that opinion more firmly than ever; but those who hold the purse strings of the nation are not always free to unloose them as they like. Anyhow, this noble work of restoration and prevention among the lost and lapsed members of our great community, ought to be the peculiar charge of all the Churches, by whatever name they are known among men. It warmly deserves support, and just now we believe it greatly needs it—though no word of that kind was breathed to us by Mr. Wheatley. If our readers could have seen even the little of its working we have seen, that support would, we are certain, be given with a liberal and unstinted hand.

PAUL'S QUESTION AT EPHESUS.

A MEDITATION FOR WHITSUNTIDE.[*]

The early history of the Christian Church at Ephesus is full of interest. This far-famed city, whose Temple of Diana became, by its colossal magnificence, one of the world's wonders, has won a still more vivid and enduring renown from its prominent association with the establishment of Christ's kingdom in Asia. In Ephesus was founded the first episcopal see, held by the model bishop, Timothy. One of the most descriptive chapters in the Book of Acts is occupied with the stirring scenes in its splendid temple, when the makers of shrines for Diana found that the worship of Jesus was putting their craft in danger; to the elders of the church at Ephesus those most touching valedictory words of Paul were spoken, when, going up to Jerusalem, he knew that they would see his face no more; and it was an Ephesian (Trophimus) who is the only compagnon de voyage mentioned on that eventful and, as some would say, disastrous journey. After the curtain had dropped for a time on the struggling spiritual life of that infant church, it is raised again in the vision at Patmos, and, as we hear the "voice as of a trumpet" dictating solemn messages to the seven churches in Asia, Ephesus stands first, receiving such commendation as would make any modern church more than satisfied, and giving us some idea what the fervour of its devotion must have been before it "left its first love."

It was to this church, at a very early stage of its existence, that St. Paul came on his second visit to the city. He had left behind him on his former visit Priscilla and Aquila, those noble lay-helpers in the Christian Church, and from them it is probable that he now heard of a small group of disciples, taught, perhaps, by Apollos, when he as yet knew only the baptism of John (Acts xviii. 25). However this may be, something in their manner and conversation when he "found them" caused him, in his abrupt manner, to ask the question, "Have ye received the Holy Ghost since ye believed?" It is very noticeable and admirable that they showed no annoyance at this close dealing; we hear no remonstrance about the "sacredness" of such subjects, and the great danger of intrusion on delicate ground, or of instituting a "confessional." The men were earnestly "following on to know the Lord," and so they welcomed this wise teacher, and before he left them they had received both the ordinary and the miraculous gifts from the Holy Ghost, of whom he taught them.

We have no Paul now, flashing into our midst with his searching question, his own soul so filled with spiritual power as to carry a blessed infection along with it. We shall have to deal personally with ourselves, our own hearts asking the question, our own consciences giving the answer; but, oh, let it be done solemnly and with much prayer; for, if we could all grasp the momentousness of this subject and be profoundly in earnest about it, another day of Pentecost might soon dawn on the Church of the nineteenth century. "Have ye received the Holy Ghost?" "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost." Ah, but we cannot say that. We look back to the upper room in Jerusalem, where, surrounded by his disciples (the number of those men was also about twelve), the Saviour sat with the great weight of sorrow on his heart at having to leave these poor defenceless ones to face the storm of the world's hate and persecution. But we think we see his countenance brighten as He begins to tell them that they will not be orphans, that He is going to receive for them a gift so great that it will more than compensate for his absence. And, as we follow those wonderful parting words, we find the promise of the Holy Ghost shining through them like a sunbeam, telling of comfort, teaching, enlightenment, a wealth of spiritual blessing which, if we read with the same eagerness to know the mind of the Testator that we would show towards any earthly will and testament, must convince us that the Lord Jesus has made ample provision for our need, and that all we have to do is to receive it.

And to encourage us we find in the records of the early Church abundant confirmation of his words. The Holy Ghost was sent, and was received, and we read in the Book of Acts of the mighty consequences. The odds seemed tremendous; a handful of weak, socially uninfluential followers of Jesus on the one side, and on the other a hostile world, with imperial power, and edicts, and "cruel mockings and scourgings" at its back. But those feeble ones "had received the Holy Ghost," and they were equal to every occasion, and the chronicle in the 11th chapter of the Epistle to the Hebrews tells of their noble bravery in such terms that we are ready to endorse St. Paul's burst of praise, "Of whom the world was not worthy!" Can we realise that these early confessors were of like passions with ourselves? as prone to doubt and inconstancy; and that the one thing that made them more than conquerors, was "the love of Christ, shed abroad in their hearts by the Holy Ghost."

If we come to modern times, the same facts meet us. Amidst the terrible indifference and formalism and unreality of Christian profession in general there are splendid exceptions. Men and women who, as ministers, or evangelists, or lay-workers, or in the unostentatious quiet of the home circle, exercise a power that cannot be fully accounted for by anything they do or say. In many instances they are not specially eloquent, or gifted, but their path is a path of blessing, and it is impossible to know them without longing to be like them. What is the secret? Do we not know? They have, by simple faith, received the Holy Ghost, have yielded themselves unquestioningly to his dealing, and He has, at different points in their experience, convinced of sin (John xvi. 8), shown unto them Jesus as a Saviour (14), and sealed the believing heart with the joyous sense of pardon and sonship (Eph. i. 13 and Gal. iv. 6), causing it to know the things that are freely given of God (1 Cor. ii. 12). And in the life thus consecrated as his temple are seen to grow the beautiful fruits (Gal. v. 22) that no earthly husbandry could ever produce.

These are parts of his ways, but it would be a profitable study to search out all that is told us in the New Testament of his wonderful working, and then again ask ourselves, "Have we received the Holy Ghost?" And is that all that is necessary on our part? All, and yet not all. He does the work; but we can mar it by resistance, or pre-occupation of the ground in which He is to work. We all know how the slightest film of grease over a sheet of paper will baffle the best penman in his attempt to produce clearly-written characters. And if the plate that is prepared for the camera by any means receives the impression of any other object but the one to be photographed, the operator's skill is foiled. So we must keep our hearts unspotted from the world, if we would be manifestly declared to be the epistles of Christ, written, not with ink, but with the Spirit of the living God (2 Cor. iii. 3), or would have Him photograph there, as "a living, bright reality," the image of the Lord Jesus.

If, in points of practical difficulty, we wish for safe guidance, it is most important to claim the Holy Spirit in his office of teacher; and yet in the present day it is mournful to hear questions of this kind—for instance, worldly amusements, and the godly training of the young—discussed with little reference to Him; but almost entirely on the lines of worldly expediency and human reason. "If you keep your children from dancing and cards, &c., it will make them long for the forbidden fruit all the more." "Young people must have amusement, and if you do not provide it for them, they will snatch it, in a more objectionable manner for themselves." These and countless other specious arguments perplex the parents who are earnestly seeking, by God's help, to train their children for Him, and meanwhile the Scriptural barrier of separation between the Church and the world is overthrown, and hidden with flowers, and danced upon, and practically obliterated.

And yet, as we look round with an almost despairing wonder whether in this matter we shall be able "to keep his commandments or not," we see that there still is a narrow path, and that those who "walk in the Spirit" are found there. And, praise God! the promise is to them and to their children that they shall find it to be "a path of pleasantness," and, as the redeemed walk there, "everlasting joy shall be on their heads," and in place of the pleasures which, at the Divine bidding (2 Cor. vi. 16, 17), they renounce, "they receive joy and gladness," and in the increased faculty for enjoyment of all legitimate "good gifts" (such as literature, beauty of nature, Christian communion and service, &c.), they prove that "where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty."

SCRIPTURE READERS FOR THE ARMY.

The annual meeting of the Army Scripture Readers' and Soldiers' Friend Society took place in Exeter Hall, on the evening of Monday, June 7, under the presidency of Rev. J. C. Edghill, D.D., Chaplain-General of the Forces. A social tea preceded the formal gathering.

The report was read by the Secretary, Mr. W. A. Blake, who also presented the financial statement. Unusual interest attached to this anniversary. The rev. chairman eloquently and emphatically endorsed the principles of the Society, and the readers availed themselves of the occasion to place in the hands of Mr. Blake a token of gratitude and goodwill. Having purchased a beautiful sideboard clock, with handsome ornaments, they asked Col. J. W. F. Sandwith to make the presentation. This was done, and suitably acknowledged in a few graceful sentences amid the enthusiastic plaudits of a large audience.

Able addresses were delivered by Rev. W. H. Bullock, General Sir Charles Warren, Rev. J. Mactaggart, Major Owen Hay, R.H A., General Sir Robert Phayre, K C.B., and Major John Smith.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—The report of the committee for the past year shows that fifty-one meetings were held, attended by upwards of 2500 fallen women and girls, many of them not out of their teens! Arrangements are being made for extending the work, both in London and the provinces which is urgently needed by the cry "Come over and help us." The state of our income, however, suggests a deaf ear being turned to this cry, unless the Lord's stewards will furnish us with the means of answering it. We have efficient machinery, and only want funds to set and to keep it in motion for the eternal good of those now ready to perish.

SPEAK GENTLY.

Speak gently to the child who smiles upon you in love, who looks to you in confidence, and to whom you stand as in the place of God. Tell him of Jesus and his wondrous love, and try to win his affections. He is like a lovely flower, full of beauty, but fragile, and he may soon be cut down by the hand of death and removed to a brighter clime. Should he live long in the world, he will remember you in years to come and bless your memory.

Speak gently to the young. They are simple, unsuspecting, full of confidence, uncorrupted by sin, not yet hardened by evil influences: overflowing with love, ever looking round for some object on which to fix the heart's fondest affections, and to whom the future is all bright. Clouds will gather, storms arise; evil days will soon come; the world will be to them very much as it has been to you—very flattering and deceitful. Speak gently to them. Your kind words will follow them through life, will cheer them in many difficulties, support them in many sorrows, and be remembered by them in hoary age, when they are going down into the valley of the shadow of death.

Speak gently to the aged. They have borne the heat and burden of the day; they have toiled long and hard for themselves and others; have fought many battles, and endured many afflictions, bereavements, and trials. It may be that your parents have grown old. They have loved you, cared for you, wept over you, toiled hard and worn themselves out for you. They are old now; their day is drawing to a close. The shadows of evening are gathering around them, and they will soon be gone. Be kind to them; speak gently, and grieve not their care-worn hearts. Let their last days be in peace, blessed by your gentleness.

Speak gently to the poor. Theirs is a hard lot. They have many wants, but few comforts, and are often despised, downtrodden, and overlooked by those above them. The disciples of Jesus, whom He has called, and made rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom, are mainly from the poor. It is to the poor that the Gospel is preached. Like the Master, be kind to them, speak gently, use no harsh words when fond and gentle ones will do, break no bruised reed, quench no smoking flax; but seek to strengthen the one, and increase the light of the other.

Speak gently to the afflicted. They have many pains, much weakness, and great weariness of the flesh. "Months of vanity and wearisome nights are appointed unto them," and sometimes heart and flesh are ready to fail. The struggle to maintain faith and patient submission to the will of God is a hard one. Speak gently to them, sympathise with them, and enter into their griefs and sorrows. Tell them of a better world, of the promises and the faithfulness of God. "Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth, and scourgeth every son whom He receiveth." "Our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." Tell them that, as the Son of Man was with the three Hebrews in the fiery furnace, so is He with them, and will not leave them till He has performed all his good pleasure concerning them.

Speak gently to the erring. You know not the pangs they feel, nor the inward grief, the self-loathing, the condemnation they are the subjects of. You know not how often they have struggled to rise, and fallen back again, nor what promises and vows they have made and broken. Speak gently. One kind word, one gentle look may win them back to the paths of rectitude and virtue. Should this not be the case, you will have the satisfaction that you have done what you could to guide them into the right way. Everywhere, in all places, under all circumstances, and to all people, speak gently. Let the law of kindness be on your lips, and beautify and adorn your life.

Speak gently, 'tis a little thing
Dropped in the heart's deep well;
The good, the joy that it may bring
Eternity shall tell.

JEHOSHAPHAT.

By Rev. JOHN PEARCE CLARK, M.A.

THE NATIONAL PRAYER MEETING.

2 Chron. xx. 1—13.

The scene is sketched in words few and bold, which, once read, can never be forgotten. We are told of the awful danger suddenly arising, of the near presence and overwhelming numbers of the cruel foe, now within a day's march of Jerusalem, and of the absolute helplessness of the people. Then comes a singularly suggestive and pathetic touch: "Judah gathered themselves together, to ask help of the Lord. . . . And all Judah stood before the Lord, with their little ones, their wives, and their children." All that was strong and tender in love, whether national or conjugal, parental or filial, was then seen and felt in keenest activity. None knew but to-morrow's sun might see their beloved land a prey to the heathen, and their fair homesteads laid low; it might perhaps look down on the ghastly corpses of husbands or wives, children or parents. What a vast multitude of pale, tear-stained faces, filled the Temple court that day! That was, indeed, a prayer-meeting to be remembered, especially that supreme moment when a single man, the King, stood forth to speak to God in his people's name. We have the words of that grand supplication recorded; but how we should like to have heard the living voice, as it urged the plea of a perishing nation.

The simple mention of that national fast and prayer-meeting is instructive,—the bare fact that as soon as the King had been advertised of the danger he "feared, and set himself to seek the Lord, and proclaimed a fast throughout all Judah." No sooner did he hear of the impending danger, than he gathered up all his energies for the work of uniting his people to seek the Lord in special reference to this trouble. He neither sought strength from without, nor did he settle down in apathy, accepting the situation as a great, but unavoidable, mystery. There was nothing of the fatalist in him. He was full of holy energy, which he concentrated on the double work of rousing both himself and his people to press nearer to God, their refuge and strength.

Are there not many who need such an example as this? Sometimes we meet trouble with nerveless, almost prayerless, apathy. We talk piously of "accepting it;" which means that we regard it as the work of some awful and mysterious fate which cannot be avoided. We suppose it is sent for some good purpose, for is it not written that "afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruit of righteousness"? True: but why leave out the very important addition, "to them that are exercised thereby"? Sorrow does not necessarily yield the peaceable fruit of righteousness. The promise is given only to those who carry their trouble to God. Unexercised souls, those who are either practical fatalists, or slothful, or both, may bear pecks of trouble, and be nothing the better, but rather the worse. The Christian's troubles belong to one of two classes. Either their purpose is to exercise faith and make room for some glorious deliverance, as in the instance before us, or to exercise patience, and bring forth the fruit of righteousness, as was the case with Paul and his thorn. But if Jehoshaphat had not fasted, the victory would have been either marred or lost; and if Paul had not besought the Lord thrice, the rich consolation of the Spirit, "My grace is sufficient for thee," would not have reached him. "See that you do not lose your affliction," was the wise advice once given to a suffering Christian friend.

But it is time for us to examine the King's prayer. At once we are struck with its noble objectiveness. Unlike very many of our modern prayers and hymns, it turns away from the suppliant's own feeling, asks no questions of his faith, whether it be weak or strong, but concerns itself entirely with certain great facts of revelation. Forgetting self, it goes out of self, and fastens upon God and his word. Herein lies one of the great secrets of power in prayer. But observe more particularly some of the facts on which his faith fastened.

(1) God's power (ver. 6)—"Art not Thou God in heaven . . . In thine hand is there not power and might, so that none is able to withstand Thee?" It is one thing to make the general admission that God reigns, and that He is able; it is a very different thing to stay my heart in the settled conviction that He can help me just here and now. We often admit that He is able, when we are very far from trusting his ability.

(2) Judah's covenant—relationship—to God (verses 6 and 7)—"O Lord God of our fathers," "our God," "the seed of Abraham thy friend." They had no doubt of their relationship to the fathers: they had as little doubt that God had covenanted Himself to the fathers and to their seed for ever. This covenant was especially made with Abraham, God's friend. When, therefore, they pled their cause as "the seed of Abraham thy friend," and addressed the Most High as "our God," they made an appeal to Divine faithfulness which nothing could withstand.

Substitute Christ for Abraham, the new birth of the Spirit for that natural birth by which a Jewish child entered the Abrahamic covenant, and you get the Christian believer's position. It is parallel to Jehoshaphat's, but infinitely higher. Abraham was his covenant head; Christ Jesus is ours. He stood in the covenant of "Abraham thy friend;" we stand "accepted in the Beloved." "God of our fathers," was his cry; "God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ," is ours. He climbed the rock of covenant relationship to God in Abraham, and proved it to be a glorious prayer-platform. Our prayer-platform, that of covenant relationship in Jesus Christ, lifts us up higher still, even to the great Father's heart. Blessed shall we be if we avail ourselves of our greater privileges as simply as Jehoshaphat enjoyed his lesser one.

(3) The special appointment of the Temple as a place of prayer, verses 8 and 9. Again we are reminded of our higher privilege. What the Temple was as the appointed meeting-place between God and his ancient people, Jesus, the Antitype of the Temple, is to all believers. It is written, "If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it."

(4) The mighty plea of dependent weakness (ii. 12)—"We have no might, . . .

neither know we what to do; but our eyes are upon Thee." Our greatest obstacle to success is some persuasion of might, less or more; but when we come down low enough to say, "we have no might," then "God's opportunity" has come, and the shining forth of his power is sure. It never is a question of his power; the only difficulty is, our submission and dependence.

This verse has a history. The late Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton wrote to his daughter immediately after one of the great divisions that gave victory to the anti-slavery movement, telling her of their glorious success. He went on to say that if she took his Bible it would open of its own accord at 2 Chron. xx., so often had he turned to this page and urged afresh Jehoshaphat's plea of no might. He added, that they had entered on the recent debate with no clear idea of its issue. Leaning on Divine help, they went forward blindly, taking each step as occasion required, but seeing nothing beyond, until at last a sudden and splendid triumph crowned their faith with thanksgiving. "To them that have no might He increaseth strength."

WHAT SHALL WE DO FOR THE PEOPLE?—2.

BY LADY HOPE.

LAST year, in the bright month of May, I was taying at Montreux—that loveliest of Swiss towns, with its sloping terraces and drooping willows upon the very margin of the Lake of Geneva. We had been paying an early visit to the picturesque market-place of Vevey, for the purpose of distributing tracts and little Gospels to the peasants who make it their rendezvous on one day in the week. The bright sun was shining on the busy scene, as we turned towards the pier, intending to make our way home. A small steamer came puffing down the lake, which, reflecting the blue sky in all its glorious brilliance, looked like a mirror of those peaceful heavens. A long range of mountains tipped with snow completed the picture. Our attention would have been entirely absorbed by the beauty of the scenes around us, had we not noticed a tall, active-looking man step into the steamer, his coat ornamented by a blue ribbon.

I could not resist acknowledging a courteous salute from him by the question—

"Are you a Temperance man?"

"Yes, Gospel Temperance," he replied, with a pleasant smile.

Of course we instantly made friends, and I was not long in discovering that I had found an ardent worker in the cause. The deck of the steamer became a centre of special interest, as he pointed out the tiny villages glistening in the distance on the mountain-sides, and said of one and another—

"We have a mission there—and there—and there!"

My new friend was a resident in Vevey, an earnest evangelical Swiss; and a man who was exercising Christian influences around his neighbourhood.

Presently he started forward.

"Wait!" he said, "my Lady, will you speak with an old man who is on board? He is yonder, by the side of the ship. I will call him."

In another moment, an old man, with bent frame, and long grey locks, his hands resting upon a knotted stick, was coming slowly towards us, and was introduced by our blue ribbon friend as—

"The oldest abstainer in Savoy! He comes from the valleys on the other side of those mountains. And he would be glad to speak with you, for he knows you well!"

"Knows me?" I answered: "I am a stranger here."

"Yes," said the old man, taking off his hat, while the breezes played with his long, grey locks. "I know you, Lady Hope, and am very glad to see you."

He spoke in his own patois, and my friend interpreted my answer of surprise and questioning as to the acquaintance of which he spoke.

"Ah," said the old man, smiling, "I have read your book, 'Our Coffee Room.' Yes, I have read it three times. And now I am reading it in the light evenings to the peasants in my valley yonder."

"The French translation, he means," our interpreter interposed.

"And how is the old shoemaker?" the aged man now asked—"the one who took the pledge, of whom you wrote. Is he alive?"

"Oh, yes," I said; "you mean old F——, who on his knees gave up the drink in his little cobbler's shop. Yes, he is alive and well, and has travelled to New Zealand and back again since then."

"And does he keep firm?" the old man continued, coming closer to me, and watching earnestly for the answer.

"Yes," I replied only too gladly; "thank God, he has been kept firm ever since. He has never tasted a drop of drink since that day when he renounced it for ever; for the Lord broke his chains and set him free."

"Thank God!" the old man echoed fervently, as he bowed his head; and then lifted his wrinkled hand in benedictions. "God bless you! God bless you! and God bless the old shoemaker!" These were the parting words of the Swiss peasant, as we parted at the Clarens pier (for he was going to address a meeting of working-men there), and I saw him no more.

But the recollection of our short interview is to me a very bright one. Is not our world girdled with faith? and do we not find it in its beautiful results wherever we go? Gleams are shining everywhere; rays are streaming from the Sun of Righteousness. Oh for the day when no clouds shall intervene—when every mountain mist shall be cleared away! that the fulness of our Saviour's beauty may appear to every eye, and without the shadow of a hindrance anywhere.

The question, "Does he keep firm?" was an important one. Had I been obliged to say "No, he has relapsed into his former sins," would not a sad breath of failure have been carried back amongst those lonely villages? to bring a painful disappointment to those who were learning how to trust in Jesus for their daily strength, and the keeping power their souls so needed in the daily temptations that must be met, though without a tithe of the privileges we have known.

And here I must remind my friends who are reading this short account that the means used for the strengthening of F——'s resolve was neither more nor less than the four walls of a coffee-room, with its garnishings of life and light, and its cheery warmth, both literal and spiritual; evenings of occupation, and intercourse of friends, with kindly words that told each day, taking the place of horrible jests and ill-timed words, that might have made havoc of the old man's early faith. Our happy coffee-room became a nursery for hundreds of beginners in a similar case. They were strengthened here to fight upon the right side of life's unceasing battle; they found a power in the Gospel of our Lord that helped them as nothing else could help, to resist the fierce attacks of drink, temptation within their hearts, and outside them, too; and they have proved victorious through the power of Jesus ever since. Just at first they needed every particle of encouragement they could get, and some of them say they need it now! Many working men, who have found the benefit of these sheltering places, have told me they could not live where there was no coffee-house, so dependent have they become upon the meetings, conversation, and general homeliness of these resorts, when combined with mission work, and pleasantly arranged for the benefit and use of working men. While a coffee-house can never supersede the charm of home, it often is the means of creating that charm. It originates in the thoughts of the public-house frequenter a better aim and higher aspirations. In our rooms he learns to love his wife and children, and to care, as he never did before, for their present and eternal good.

Two years ago the readers of THE CHRISTIAN launched a little boat for me of this very kind. I want to tell them of its ups and downs, the currents and the tides that hindered it and drove it back again to shore, and now of its present welfare; or, rather, let me turn back the page of hindrances, and merely say, "The prayers of many friends have now been answered, and we HAVE at last a coffee-house, and that in London, ten minutes' drive from the Marble Arch, and three doors from the station at Notting-hill-gate.

THE GOLDEN BELLS.

So now, in the name of the working men of this neighbourhood, I heartily thank the friends who have brought our undertaking to the point at which it stands, and earnestly hope that many of our sympathisers may visit us, and see for themselves the benefit this work must bring. Before this month has closed we hope to open our coffee-palace; and our earnest wish is to do so FREE OF DEBT! For this reason I once more beg of my friends to give me the remaining £350 that we require for the expenses of cleaning, decorating, and generally repairing the details of the house that we have taken. "The Notting-hill-gate Coffee-palace has long been known under this name. We have now rented it, and it will in future bear the sign of "The Golden Bells," our desire being that it should ring out many a peal of mercy and blessing to the passers-by. We want it to become increasingly a centre of mission work; and we know that Christians will rally round us to aid in these labours. We shall be most truly thankful if our friends will relieve us of this burden of necessary payment before we open our new work, that we may devote ourselves without hindrance to its success. To any donors of the sum that we now require we shall indeed be very grateful; and in making this appeal, I would venture to say that, as my little books have helped others in their Gospel Temperance work, I ask them, for the sake of Christ, now to help me in so opening this fresh volume—not of speech, but of action—that it may also prove an encouragement to many who are labouring for the same Master.

[Letters may be addressed to Lady Hope, 12, Great Cumberland-place, W.]

AMERICAN BAPTIST MISSIONARY UNION.

DEAR SIR,—We have been greatly pleased at the progress of the work in our Congo Mission, and hope you will insert the following little information for those who have for years followed our work with tears, prayers, and help. Five converts have just been baptized at the station of Mukimbungu, about 200 miles inland from the sea; they came up out of the water testifying to the grace in their hearts, and giving glory to the Lord.

The work is going on nicely at our Equator Station, 700 miles inland, north of the equator. Twenty-five children are in schools, and the cannibal men and women of that place hear the Gospel with much satisfaction. They have family worship every day in the Nkundu language, and translations of the Scriptures have been begun by Brother Eddie.

These tidings are glorious, and our souls magnify the Lord.—Yours in Jesus,

A. SIMS, (late) Congo Inland Mission.

BIRMINGHAM.—The last report of the Birmingham and Suburban Evangelical Mission, Palmer-street, says that during the winter about one thousand quarts of soup and nine hundred loaves of bread were distributed, besides coal, clothing, dispensary and hospital notes, &c. A savings bank for the children of the Sunday-schools, and a sick dividend society for the working men, have been established. The open-air field and waste-ground camp meetings were attended with a good measure of success. Special missions were held occasionally in the neighbouring districts besides in the three branch rooms of the Mission. It is a purely Gospel mission, and seeks to benefit all classes of society. The superintendent is Mr. J. Stead, 221, St. Andrews-road, Bordesley, Birmingham; the treasurer, Mr. A. A. Fardon, Glover-street, Birmingham.

A NEW ROMISH SAINT.*

The publication of an edition in English of the life of Sister Emmerich gives to a wider circle an opportunity of judging how important a place credulity must necessarily fill in the mind of the Romanist, from the highly-educated aristocrat, such as was pictured by Disraeli, down to the unlettered Connemara peasant, in whom it would be reasonable to look for a largely developed element of wonder. To state that the biography is a surprising one is only to say that it is a not unworthy addition to its predecessors which bear the name of "Alban Butler." When we add that a Romanist review has in plain terms blasphemously claimed for Sister Emmerich participation in the vicarious sufferings of Christ for the salvation of mankind—"the sacred signs of the Saviour's passion," exhibited in her person "with appalling vividness," testifying that God, "who never leaves Himself without a witness before the eyes of men," had chosen her to be "a victim of expiation"—it will at once be anticipated by those who are familiar with Roman Catholic literature that Sister Emmerich was a stigmatica, and that the volume contains a narrative of such agonies as those described by Theresa, by Catherine of Genoa, and many others whose names are held in high veneration in the Church of Rome. Coming to the book in this expectation, the reader will not be disappointed, for the volume overflows with wonderful stories not at all likely, however, to fulfil the expectation of the reviewer to whom we have referred, and "confirm the faith of waverers in the truths of religion."

Briefly narrated, the chief "facts" in Sister Emmerich's remarkable life, as recorded by her biographer, are these:—The child of poverty-stricken Westphalian peasants, she was baptized when only a day old, and "even then," says her biographer, "she seemed to realise the privileges to which baptism admitted her, and leaning from her nurse's arms, she dipped her tiny hand into the holy water font in order to obtain its beneficial effects." At two years old she commenced vocal prayer, and her visions began, and when a hermit was describing Rome and Jerusalem, she openly taxed him with falsehood, and depicted the scenes correctly. The Latin prayers of the Mass were perfectly intelligible to her, though she had no knowledge of the language, and when she was six years of age, not content with the "voluntary and self-imposed sufferings she offered to God in expiation of her own sins," she performed many "for the sake of others whose spiritual needs had been revealed to her, since even at this early age the idea of expiating in her person the sins of her fellow-men had begun to be clearly manifested to her." The enemy of mankind was ruthless and determined in his attacks upon her, a fact which, as the writer says, "no one who possesses even a rudimentary acquaintance with the Christian life, will be surprised to hear." Many such will certainly be astonished to learn that Satan appeared to her "as a horrible and repulsive creature, resembling a dog with a large head," when, a mere child, she went to pray by night at a rustic crucifix. Even in her babyhood "she knew how to make spiritual communion," and, strange admission on the part of a Romanist, "no offences were more rigorously expiated by her than those committed by priests."

When five years old she received her first call to a religious—that is to say, we suppose, to the conventual—life; and it is noteworthy that "she saw no human probability of being able to fulfil her promise." With singular candour, the biographer has allowed it to appear manifest that her poverty, and not her sanctity, was considered in after life when she endeavoured to enter several convents, her parents on one occasion "representing her weak health and poverty as insuperable obstacles." Ultimately apprenticed to a milliner, she needed not to learn the duties. At eighteen "her mission of vicarious suffering was more and more clearly revealed to her. The corporal maladies which from this time unceasingly attacked her bore the stamp of expiation under the most varied forms," and it was made known to her that "in the sight of God she held the place of Holy Church, and she was to bear the same wounds, incur the same dangers, and undergo the same persecutions that menaced either the whole body or its individual members," so "she expiated the spiritual maladies of such members by unspeakable sufferings, and she atoned by patience for those whose infidelity, negligence, or immorality would have drawn down upon the Church the chastisements of Divine Justice, if not appeased by some such suffering."

Strange to say, however, with all this sanctity, her biographer, with charming frankness, admits that, intense as was her desire to embrace the conventual life, "her poverty and bad health caused her to be refused at the various convents to which she applied." At length, when in her twenty-eighth year, the Poor Clares at Münster consented to receive her, it was only on condition that she learned to play the organ, and she failed to do so. This is a remarkable admission, seeing that she is set down as having previously been able to dispense entirely with the ordinary means of acquiring knowledge. The organist, who is blamed for "treating her as a common servant," instead of training her, had a daughter who was an accomplished musician, and would not permit this daughter to enter a convent where her musical talent was required, unless Anne Emmerich also was taken in, and it was therefore arranged that the two should be received. Here the biographer has another singular admission, for he records that when Anne went home to bid her parents farewell, her father, a devoted Romanist, said, "I would gladly pay for your funeral if you were to be buried to-morrow, but not one penny shall you get from me towards going into that convent." She duly entered the convent, and "never, surely, had a maiden entered so poor in earthly goods, or so rich in spiritual goods."

Shortly before this step was taken, however, she "had received from our Lord a precious and distinguishing mark of his favour." With much attention to detail, the biographer narrates how the Saviour appeared to her, in the figure of a youth, holding in one hand a garland of flowers, and in the other a crown of thorns, and upon her choosing the latter, He laid it lightly upon her brow. She put up her hands to press it firmly down, and from that instant experienced indescribable pains in her head, though no marks appeared until next day, and the blood did not commence to flow from them until some time after her entrance into the convent. These indescribable pains remind one of the "terrible martyrium" of Maria Vela, and the "indicible tormentum," of Catherine of Genoa, or of the worse agonies which St. Theresa set down as divine visitations, but which a deep thinker has classified as hysteria, cramps, and nervous seizures, of that family of mental distempers which the cloister breeds, and which are elsewhere unheard of. In Anne Emmerich's case, to these pains the unexpected one of suspicion and dislike on the part of the sisters was added, her "perfection" being a reproof to the laxity round about her. But other consolation was given her. Referring to this period of her life she has recorded, "I often thought I had the Infant Jesus in my arms for hours at a time." A little while afterwards, however, and for reasons which our author has thought it wise to conceal, the convent was suppressed, and Anne was removed to a small room in the house of a widow at Dulmen. Seeing what visitations she laid claim to, it is remarkable to find it stated that "she grieved above all to leave the vicinity of the blessed Sacrament."

A few months more and she became a confirmed invalid, and never again left her bed. Then began her experiences as an ecstatica and stigmatica, with marks upon her hands and feet, and a double cross upon her breast, which, several priests testified, bled every Wednesday and Friday. Her own immediate relatives appear to have thoroughly disbelieved in her, especially a sister, to whom apparently was given the task of waiting upon the sufferer. Without going so far as these relatives did, in affirming that the case was that of a shameless deceiver, it is not difficult to relegate the case to its proper place in that borderland into which modern scientific knowledge has made some few sure steps. The Prussian Government instituted an inquiry, but the report was not of much value, as it simply stated what for long had been the public opinion, that there was in the case "either a miracle or a fraud." For twelve years, what her biographer designates "her expiating mission" continued, and many details respecting it have been furnished by a Clement Brentano, called "The Pilgrim," by Anne Emmerich, who constantly visited her, and received from her accounts of her visions. Certain matters which are recorded point almost unmistakably to the conclusion that Brentano had great mesmeric force. Though his querulous complaints were very trying to her, "she submitted to all with the sweetest patience, seeing in him only the instrument of God's inscrutable designs." The whole narrative of her visions and sufferings is remarkable, but it becomes less mysterious when it is borne in mind that, as the biographer puts it, her narratives, those of an uneducated woman it must be borne in mind, are always "in perfect accordance with the teachings of theologians and fathers of the Church, with the decrees of councils and the rules of faith."

Strange to say, unlettered peasant as she was, Brentano records her learned discourses and disquisitions upon mesmerism and clairvoyance. Of the possession of the latter faculty she certainly gave many practical illustrations. For her confessor "she obtained the grace of a holy and blessed death, and after his decease, she had a vision in which she saw him with a number of other priests, in a fair and celestial garden." For "long years her only food was the Blessed Sacrament, her constant companions the saints of God." And then she herself passed away, "the vicarious sufferings," her biographer says, "being carried on at an accelerated pace during the last months, as if, knowing she had but a brief period in which to labour for others, she desired to do all she could in that time." After this statement it is not surprising, though it is shocking, to find it asserted that "her bodily pain frequently expiated the spiritual sickness of those who were to be converted and saved by her means." On the morning before her death she said, "The thief on the cross had not so much to answer for as I have, for he had not received the same graces which have been granted to me. Many good people are deceived in me, and think too well of me. Tell them all I am a miserable sinner." Afterwards she added, "Charity, patience, and the other virtues, ensure salvation," and with this sample of Roman Catholic theology we may bring to an end our summary of the volume.

In a court of law the chief difficulty with an untruthful witness frequently is that of restraining him from stating too much; and the writer of this biography, in his anxiety to make good the astounding claims put forward on behalf of Anne Emmerich, has taken away entirely the value of the testimony as regards the marks in the hands and feet, and upon the brow, being duplicates of the Saviour's wounds, by asserting that if Sister Emmerich in her visions saw a martyr tortured, or if, as on one occasion, in an ecstasy, she knocked against a stake, the marks of injuries at once appeared upon her. This admission enables us to admit that she was a veritable stigmata, and at the same time to deny that, therefore, there is any ground whatever to claim for her that the appearances upon her hands and feet were "tokens of the Saviour's love and predilection for her."

And why do we give in the columns of The Christian this summary of a volume which cannot have any value in regard to the development or deepening of the spiritual life? Simply because, in these days of weak toleration, it is openly asserted that the differences between Romanism and Protestantism are such as can easily and properly be bridged over by a little exercise of charity, instead of being, as they are, radical and vital. What stronger proof is needed than that which is afforded by this biography that it is not merely the tendency of Romanism, but one of its essential rules of practice, to undervalue and depreciate the atoning sacrifice of Christ, and to substitute in place of it symptoms of self-righteousness and developments of spiritual disease. "I am on the cross," said Sister Emmerich, and such a feeling necessarily must be that of each Romanist who puts his or her own "expiatory" acts in the place of the finished work of Jesus.

* Life of Anne Catherine Emmerich. From the German of the Very Rev. K. E. Schraoeger, C.S.S.R. Burns & Oates.

In another respect, too, the volume may be of use, for it shows clearly what a Romanist is expected and require to believe. Doubtless it is difficult, as priests say it is, to understand some portions of the Word of God, but surely it is less hard than it must be to accept such a mixture of dreams, diluted science, and wonder stories as that given in the life of this new saint. Educated Romanists, however, have to put the Bible aside and to take the other. J. B.

THE ROMISH TENETS OF "FATHER IGNATIUS."

By Rev. W. FRITH.

Pastor Chiniquy has said that there is no man in England doing so much to injure the Protestant cause as the so-called "Father Ignatius," alias Rev. J. L. Lyne. This testimony is valuable; and all the more so because it comes from one who is so competent to pass an opinion, having been himself a "priest" of the Roman Apostacy. He has also said that it is the incumbent duty of every true Christian to withstand his teaching.

This can be done by leaflets and lectures; and, if we would be faithful and consistent, we must "withstand him to the face, because he is to be blamed" (Gal. ii. 11). To do less is to disregard the Holy Spirit's injunction in Jude 3, and to ignore the warnings of Paul in Gal. ii. 11, and Phil. i. 27: Contrast the teaching of Mr. Lyne (the "monk of Llanthony") with God's own Word:—

(1) Head of the Church.—"We love and reverence the bishop of Rome, as the most powerful bishop in Christendom."—Sermons, vol. i. p. 31. (See Eph. i. 22, 23; Col. i. 24; Matt. xxiii. 9; 1 Peter ii. 25).

(2) The Voice of the Church in place of the Word of God.—"It is no use to say that the Bible is the standard of faith, because we know very well it is not, for a very large number of Protestants deny that it is the Word of God."—Sermons, vol. i. p. 15. (See 2 Tim. iii. 15; Col. iii. 16; 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17).

(3) Images in Churches.—"I am told that the Roman Catholics in Buddhist countries have images of Buddha in their Churches, and treat them with great respect. I myself would gladly do the same." —From Jesus and the Palm Boughs, p. 20. (See Exodus xx. 4, 5).

(4) The Reformation.—"That terrible epoch of blasphemy, rapine, and murder, called the Reformation—the blasphemies and impertinences of a lot of unscrupulous cut-throats." (See Rev. ii. 5; Heb. xiii. 8).

(5) Monasticism.—"To kneel and kiss the hem of the Sacred Habit, if done from love to Jesus, and reverence to the habit of the consecrated life, a great blessing will be received."—Little Manual of Devotions, p. 6. "The monastic life is the backbone of Chrisianity."—Sermons, vol. i. p. 4. (See John xvii. 15; 1 Tim. iii. 2; Matt. viii. 14; 1 Tim. iv. 1—3).

(6) The Virgin Mary and the Saints.—"I do not hesitate to say that I hold myself just what the Roman Catholic Church holds about the Virgin Mary and the Saints, i.e., the teaching expressed in their authorised standards of faith."—Sermons, vol. i. p. 22. (See 1 Tim. ii. 5; John xiv. 6; xvi. 23).

"Reader! Jesus said, 'Search the Scriptures' (John v. 39). Paul said the Bereans were more noble than the Thessalonians, because they searched the Scriptures daily (Acts xvii. 11). Here is an exclusive standard of appeal—the Bible. Here is personal responsibility in relation to it. Here is implied rejection of whatever is not contained therein" (Jude 3).

BIBLE STUDIES.—19.

GOD'S THOUGHTFULNESS ABOUT LITTLE THINGS.

(1) Concerning holiness. "Bringing into captivity every thought to the obedience of Christ" (2 Cor. x. 5). "Thou canst not stand before thine enemies, until ye take away the accursed thing from among you" (Josh. vii. 13). (The sin of one brought defeat on the host.) "Take us the foxes, the little foxes, that spoil the vines" (Cant. ii. 15).

"It was but a little darkness,
A scarce acknowledged sin,
I forgot the real question—
'Shall Christ or Satan win?'
But one look up at Jesus Brought victory within."

(2) Conduct. "Be courteous" (1 Pet. iii. 8). "The tongue is a little member . . . a fire, a world of iniquity" (Jas. iii. 5, 6). "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment" (Matt. xii. 36). "Speak not evil one of another, brethren" (Jas. iv. 11). "Keep the door of my lips" (Ps. cxli. 3). "Whether . . . ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God" (1 Cor. x. 31).

(3) Life. "The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord" (Ps. xxxvii. 23). "Even the very hairs of your head are all numbered" (Luke xii. 7). "Take no thought . . . what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet . . . what ye shall put on . . . for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things" (Matt. vi. 25, 32).

(4) Service. "Whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple . . . he shall in no wise lose his reward" (Matt. x. 42). "Under the . . . charge of the sons of Merari shall be . . . sockets . . . pins, and . . . cords" (Num. iii. 36, 37). (Consecration was needed for this, as much as for what seemed to be higher work.) "A poor widow . . . threw in two mites . . . Jesus saith . . . she hath cast more in than all" (Mark xii. 42, 43). "Because thou hast been faithful in a very little, have thou authority over ten cities" (Luke xix. 17).

(5) Children. "Whoso shall receive one such little child in my name, receiveth me. But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea. Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones; for I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven" (Matt. xviii. 5, 6, 10). "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God . . . And He took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them" (Mark x. 14, 16).

(6) Order and thrift. "And he commanded them to make all sit down by companies . . . and they sat down in ranks, by hundreds and by fifties" (Mark vi. 39, 40). "Gather up the fragments that remain, that nothing be lost" (John vi. 12).

AGED PILGRIMS.

The seventy-ninth report of the Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society is an eminently satisfactory one. There has been a steady continuance of that prosperity which has marked its progress. Instituted in 1807 for the purpose of giving life-pensions to the aged Christian poor of sixty years of age and upwards, and commencing with three pensioners of five guineas each; last year it distributed £7000 amongst 1118 pensioners. The Society has now four Homes, in which 180 pensioners have peaceful abodes.

It is rather remarkable that only 155 recipients of these pensions, which vary in amount from five shillings per month to five, seven, and ten guineas per year, are men, while the majority of the women are widows, mostly needlewomen, whose pitiful struggle gives them a great claim. In a great number of cases the pension, even though of the smallest class, enables the poor people to keep their little home together. Upwards of 800 of the pensioners are over seventy years of age, and of this number 245 are over eighty, and fifteen over ninety; the majority are resident in London, but 465 live in the country. It is indeed a blessed work to care for and comfort so many of the aged poor, and one which must appeal loudly to the sympathies of all.

"ERIN'S ONLY HOPE."

At a time when Ireland is engaging so much of the world's attention, and is the subject of hot contention in the sphere of politics, it is well to be reminded, as we are by the motto on the cover of the Sixty-fifth Annual Report of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland, that in the circulation and making known of the Scriptures lies the greatest hope for the troubles that afflict that fair land. Happy, indeed, would it be if our statesmen grasped this truth, and applied themselves to the solution of the problems before them, under the illuminating influence of the light thus gained.

The distinct aim of the Society is to bring the Word of God to the hearts and homes of "all sorts and conditions of men;" and this is done by means of fifty Scripture-readers, who have been chosen for this work because of their piety, and because they are able to bring from the Word of God the very truth most applicable to the character and condition of those with whom they come in contact. Twenty of these are engaged in the district extending from Portrush to Armagh. Stress is laid on the fact that for a sum of from £30 to £60 a Reader might be sent to any part of Ireland, and, as in every part there is now an open door, by the liberality of a few individuals, in various districts, the light of the Gospel might be fully shed abroad in their midst. By means of itinerating Readers, and of Bibles, Testaments, and portions sent for distribution among the people where no agents are at work, an effort is made to cover this ground.

The reports of the Scripture-readers are of the most gratifying character, the people, as a rule, receiving them very gladly, and even Roman Catholics listening with attention as God's way of salvation, so different to that put before them by the priest, is opened out. One Reader states that in one place there were 175 Roman Catholics to whom, in confidence, he could speak plainly about salvation through Christ alone. This fact, added to a great mass of accumulated evidence gathered from all places wheresoever the Word of God has been freely circulated and preached, shows that it is by this instrumentality, and this alone, that the darkness of superstition and infidelity is to be swept away, and ignorance made to give place to light and truth Divine.

A good deal of mission work is also done amongst soldiers and sailors, and altogether we feel, as we close the report, we cannot be too thankful for such a work as is being carried on by the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland. The income of the Society last year was £3701 5s. 1d., being an increase of £567 0s. 6d. over the previous year, an increase which, at this crisis in the affairs of Ireland, it is more than ever important should be not only maintained, but increased. The secretary is Captain Kearney White, 27, Lower Pembroke-street, Dublin.

REDRUTH TOWN MISSION.

The twenty-fourth report of this Mission speaks of the ready acceptance of the word by the Cornish miners, and of good work done in the common lodging-houses, the union, the hospital, and by means of Sunday evening services in the mission hall, where also mothers' meetings are held. A Sunday-school and a Band of Hope further attest the activity of the workers. Many of the poor people on their death-beds have testified clearly of their hopes of eternal happiness. When we note that this good work is carried on at the small cost of £120 annually, it behoves Christians, we think, to see that its needs are met. Mr. and Mrs. Wilson are the missionaries.

MILITIA AT HOUNSLOW.—We are beginning our seven weeks' mission among the militia on Hounslow Heath. If your readers will kindly send to us suitable tracts, leaflets, &c., for circulation among them, they will be rendering good service to a class of men greatly needing it. We are expecting nearly two thousand in camp.—Yours most truly, Samuel Wesley,
Wesleyan Chaplain to the Forces.

WORK FOR YOUNG WOMEN.

Of all the branches of the Y.W.C A., none seems to us to be more important than that which aims at providing young women with employment. Protection and Prevention are the two motto words of the Association; while it cannot by any means be said that a young woman who fills a comfortable situation needs no protection, still it is true that those who are out of employment run the most serious risks of falling into some of the snares that are laid for their feet.

The Employment Agency of the Y.W.C.A. is a department of the work, therefore, that ought to have the widest possible publicity among all who require good women servants of any kind. It has done splendid service in the past, and will do still greater service, we trust, in the time to come. Nearly two years ago Miss Annie Gough took charge of it at 17, Old Cavendish-street, and since then it has greatly developed. The secret of this success may be found in the fact that Miss Gough's whole heart is in her work. One forenoon recently our representative looked in at Old Cavendish-street in order to get a few facts about this excellent effort, with a view of awakening the interest of our readers. "I like the work," said Miss Gough; "it is so interesting finding people employment." No trouble appears to be spared. We have lately heard much about registry offices in London that is not creditable. Even where they are not misleading and dangerous, they too often fatten on the helplessness of those who seek their aid. The Employment agency at 17, Old Cavendish-street, desires, of course, to pay its way, but its great and primary aim is the benefit of the young women, and this it accomplishes in various ways. Sometimes a word of Christian, sisterly sympathy, counsel, and advice is of more value even than the provision of employment. The records of the branch show that the solicitude shown by Miss Gough and the Hon. Superintendent, Miss Wingate, has called forth much gratitude from those whose names are placed on the books. The satisfaction felt extends to mistresses as well as servants; for we read in one of the reports that "the increase in the work is largely due to ladies having recommended the agency to their friends." This increase during the last two years has been something like 150 per cent.

The scope of the agency embraces all sorts of domestic employment, from charwomen to housekeepers and lady companions; but it extends further even than that. Miss Gough has frequent applicants for the post of matron at charitable institutions, and for mission work of varied kinds. She is specially anxious at present to find places for governesses, housekeepers, lady helps, matrons, trained nurses, and Bible women, many of whom are on her books waiting for situations.

It is a very interesting fact that out of this agency a distinct branch of the Y.W.C.A. has grown. It is called the Scattered Members Branch, and now numbers some 160 young women resident in the United Kingdom, France, Holland, Switzerland, India, Australia, &c. Miss Wingate and Miss Gough keep up a constant correspondence with these protéges of the agency, and they are thus kept within the circle of good influences. As many of the young women in London who are looking for employment come direct from the provinces and abroad, the agency is glad to advise them as to apartments, &c. Indeed, it was largely in connection with this work that the need for the "Travellers' Aid" Branch was seen and acted on. Of that most valuable preventive movement (which now embraces the London Docks as well as the great railway termini) we hope in a subsequent issue to speak. Meanwhile we commend this Employment Agency to our readers, and hope that all ladies at the head of households, or otherwise, who can forward it in any way, will place themselves in communication with Miss Annie Gough, 17, Old Cavendish-street, W.

DR. MUNHALL IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Dr. L. W. Munhall, one of America's successful evangelists, has been spending the winter on the Pacific Coast, and has closed a series of evangelistic meetings in San Francisco, which have been very beneficial in their results. The services were held in connection with thirteen of the evangelical churches and the Evangelistic Committee. All the churches uniting in the effort have received additions to their membership. A greater love for the study of the Word on the part of church members has been the natural outgrowth of the series of Bible-readings given every afternoon in one of the largest churches in the city. The city was divided into four districts, giving two weeks in a place. There were special evangelistic services every night, except Saturday, and special meetings for young men or young people every Sabbath afternoon at three.

The opening meeting was held in the largest hall in the city, and was for young men only between twelve and thirty-five years of age. The address was a confidential talk on three great evils which are stalking abroad in the land: intemperance, licentiousness, and greed for worldly gain. The hall was packed to its utmost capacity, and the notes of warning from Dr. Munhall were timely and to the point. About 700 remained to the after-meeting, and 300 rose for prayers, desiring to commence the Christian life. It was one of the grandest religious services for young men ever held in San Francisco.

The Doctor has laboured in the following cities in California: Los Angeles, Sacramento, San José, and San Francisco, and spent four weeks in Portland, Ore. He sailed on the June ship for Australia, and will spend a few weeks in Honolulu en route to the Colonies. At the closing meeting in San Francisco, resolutions were unanimously passed commendatory of his labours in the metropolis of the Pacific Coast.

A WAYSIDE EXPERIENCE.

Dear Sir,—The paragraph in The Christian, referring to "Young Women at Restaurants," brought to my remembrance something that occurred to me more than twenty years ago. I had a long detention at a small station in South Wales, and after reading all that interested me in a daily paper, I handed it to the attendant at the refreshment stand. She thanked me, but presently said, very simply, "I have something better than papers now; I have found Jesus, and He is my Saviour." No train was due for some time, we were alone in the station. I asked her to come and sit by me, and we had an hour's talk which I can never forget.

She told me her experiences—the doubts, and fears, and then the power to cast herself, and sins and burdens, on One mighty to save. Her bright young faith, in all its freshness, refreshed and strengthened me more than I can say. She poured out her heart to me—her sister in Christ, telling me her troubles, difficulties, and the dangers of her position. She spoke of the free remarks of fast young men as most disagreeable, saying, "We none of us like it, though we are obliged to put up with it;" and added, "Even good men will think nothing of saying a light word to a girl at a refreshment stand. They little know how we dislike it, or how glad we are when anyone says a good word, or gives us a little book or tract, as some do."

This struck me very much; I felt it would require courage, real love to Christ, to speak a word for Him to persons of her class. It may be, as she said, Christian men, in the excitement of travelling, may in an unguarded moment say an idle word to the one who hands them refreshments at a railway station. Should this meet the eye of any who have done so, they will be sorry, and I trust will do so no more.

The young person of whom I speak obtained a suitable situation, and wrote to me some months after our interview, telling me she was very comfortable, and happy in the Lord.

Yours very truly, R. W.

WHAT IS DEATH?

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."
Rev. xiv. 13.

'Tis but the breaking of a shell;
For, like a bird set free,
The soul doth soar to realms of love,
And fadeless ecstasy.

'Tis but the springing of the flower
Above the dark, cold sod;
The rending of the veil that hides
From us the living God.

'Tis but to cast a worn-out shroud
Of dust and earth aside,
And wear the glorious marriage robes
Of Christ's beloved bride.

'Tis but the golden sunrise glow
Gilding the hills of time;
The dawning of eternal day,
Effulgent and sublime.

'Tis but the infant spirit clasped
Unto its parent's breast;
The landing of the storm-tossed bark
On shores of tranquil rest.

'Tis but the sweet awakening kiss
Of angel friends above;
To share with them the rapturous joy
Of Jesu's perfect love.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

The Grand Hotel, Melbourne, Australia, is to be turned into a coffee palace.

A large temperance café has been opened at the Shipperies Exhibition, Liverpool.

In connection with the British Medical Association, there are now 341 medical men who are abstainers.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson is to be the Liberal candidate for Cockermouth Division of Cumberland at the next election.

Plebiscites on the direct Veto, in thirty-five places in Scotland, give the following totals:—For, 53,073; against, 4628.

The proprietors of the Clyde steamers are said to give every facility for the sale of drink on board, for the sake of the profit.

After a recent service on one of the Orient steamers, conducted by Rev. H. Bloomer, of the Thames Mission, twenty-five men signed the pledge.

The Dublin Prison Gate Mission reports a successful year. Earnest efforts have been made to induce discharged prisoners to sign the pledge.

Neal Dow writes to Mr. Barker, of the United Kingdom Alliance:—"The effect of prohibition is to render drinking disreputable, and to make drinkers lose caste in society."

In the annual report of the Baptist Total Abstinence Association, a number of cases are cited of conversions resulting from the labours of Rev. J. M. Hewson, travelling secretary.

The Scott Act was recently adopted in Portland, New Brunswick. On the same day it was rejected in the city of St. John, and on the day following it was carried in the county of St. John.

In the May number of The Missionary Herald there is an acknowledgment of "£5 for Congo, saved by giving up stimulants." If this practice became general, Christian missions would not languish.

The South African Wesleyan Conference has informed Government that no settlement of the Transkei liquor traffic not in accordance with the original convention with the tribes will satisfy either the natives or their ministers.

The Queenstown (Africa) Free Press states, drinking is fearfully prevalent at Kimberley. One small canteen every Saturday night sells about one thousand small bottles of a spirit called Cape Smoke. Deaths from drink are frequent.

The American Medical Temperance Association met at St. Louis, in May, and about two thousand physicians were present. Strong resolutions were passed against the use of alcohol, and in favour of scientific temperance teaching in State schools.

The Edinburgh Gospel Temperance Union has just issued a very encouraging and hopeful annual report. Rescue work and raising the tone of the Church on the subject are the chief aims. The leading temperance reformers of the city are active members.

SOUTHSEA.—We have commenced tent work on Southsea Common, Portsmouth. We have had good meetings with manifest blessing. There is a wide field for Gospel effort here, especially during this month, as there is to be a large exhibition from June 24 to 28. Close by are our Gospel tent and Bible carriage, but we are in need of labourers. If any Christian workers should be coming to Portsmouth and would like to help in Gospel work I should be glad to hear from them.

THE BLACK DIAMOND.

"Only a poor little black diamond!" it said to itself, and it sighed as it looked across at the rows of beautiful white diamonds, which lay so near, sparkling in the sun. "Now, if I had been one of those lovely white diamonds, how useful I might have been, perhaps set in a rich gold ring for some fair lady's hand; or, best of all, even in the crown of a king or queen; but what can a black diamond do? I am afraid I am of no use at all."

Presently there was a bustle in the place; a very rich gentleman, who was owner of several gold mines, had come in to make some purchases. The white diamonds were laid before him, in all their dazzling brilliancy; but, strange to say, to-day he wanted none of these.

"Have you no black diamonds?" was his question to those who were so busy in showing him the white diamonds, and in dwelling on their high value. So the little black diamond was brought to him among some other black ones, which the gentleman at once purchased. They were packed up together, and put into his carriage to be conveyed to his residence. A long journey the little diamond had with its companions, for the owner of the mines lived at a great distance from the place where he had bought the diamonds.

"And now will you tell me, what you want black diamonds for?" said a friend who had accompanied the gentleman to the shop. Why did you not buy some of those beautiful white ones, instead of these ugly black ones? What use can they be to you?"

"Wait for a little while," answered the owner, smiling; "and you will see how very useful my black diamonds are to me."

The friend left him then, but some weeks afterwards he went to pay a visit to his friend, the owner of the diamonds. As they were out one day, looking at the mines and the machinery belonging to them, the owner brought his friend to a spot where he had never been before.

And there, instead of going down the long, dark chimney-looking shaft, in a kind of bucket as they had to do in their visits to the other parts of the mines, was some machinery laid above the ground, which, when it was worked, sent down tubes, many, many feet into the hard stony rock, bringing back with it each time it was drawn up, a large piece of the rock, or strong quartz, and when that was crushed, several specks of precious gold.*

"But how can the iron tube make its way through the hard rock?" was the question of the friend, as he looked in surprise at the pieces that were brought up.

"Now I will give the answer to your question of some weeks ago," replied the owner, smiling, "as to what use the black diamonds were to me. At the end of the iron tubes are fastened the black diamonds you despised so much; and they cut their way through the hard rock and stone, as nothing else could do, so to me the black diamonds are of the greater value and use; they will bring me thousands of pounds worth of gold."

How thankful was our little friend, the black diamond, as it heard its owner's words; it had only longed to be a fair, but perhaps useless, ornament, but now, far more joy than it had ever dreamed of, it had been made of such priceless use and value to its loved owner.

Dear children (I mean those of you who really belong to the Lord Jesus, having received Him as your Saviour), does not the story of the little black diamond teach you some lesson? You may not be rich, nor beautiful, nor clever. You may say, "I am only a poor plain little child; what can I do?" But if you are one of the diamonds or jewels belonging to the Lord Jesus, you are as dear to Him as if you were rich, or beautiful, or clever. And you can be just as useful in any work He gives you to do. You can be kind and loving in your own homes; obedient and helpful to your parents and teachers, affectionate and gentle to your brothers and sisters and companions; if you are like the Lord Jesus in your daily life, you are far more beautiful in his eyes than if you merely had a pretty face. And how very useful you may be in trying to lead other little children to the Saviour.

But, first be quite sure that you are one of his diamonds; your soul washed white in his precious blood, for that is the only way in which you can become one of his jewels. In Malachi iii. 17, his children are spoken of as jewels, which means his special treasure. Think of being a special treasure to the Lord, and all his believing children are such. And, in Daniel xii. 3, we are told that those who are the means of "turning many to righteousness," that is, of leading them to the Lord Jesus for salvation, "shall shine as the stars for ever and ever."

May the Lord grant that each of you who read this story, may not only be a diamond of the Lord Jesus, but also the means of winning many to Him.

STARVING IN SUMMER.

Dear Sir,—I find that many people quite fail to remember the condition of the destitute when the weather clears and the temperature rises. It looks as though they imagined it was rather a pleasant thing, on the whole, to starve on a warm, bright, summer's day. Liberal help reached me during the winter, but now the tide has almost ceased to flow. Yet the distress continues to be very acute. People come to me staggering—not through drink, but through exhaustion for lack of food. I can help them only as help comes, which is now in homœopathic doses. Our eight missionaries and small army of district visitors bring numerous cases of genuine distress. To some of these I have to say, with bitter heartache, "No." Women are being forced out upon the streets that they may eke out their wretched earnings, if they are fortunate enough to have any. Emigration cases, which ought to be carried through, fall to the ground altogether, and the candidates must remain at home to compete with their hard-pressed fellows, and so still further lower wages. A mass of sickness is the legacy of the terrible winter just passed. Must one say to these sufferers, "I cannot help?" The doctor orders "plenty of nourishment;" says some cases should be sent to the seaside, and that poor sickly bairns must have a little country air! What can we do?—Yours in sadness,

W. Evans Hurndall.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.

On Wednesday, June 9, this Mission held its annual summer tea and Gospel meeting at the Conference Hall, Mildmay-park. It was the Jewish Day of Pentecost, and suggested in speech and prayer the earnest desire for another great outpouring of the Holy Spirit on Jews. The Jewish children of the night school were accompanied by their teachers; then flocked in numbers of Jews and Jewesses, till we had got more than 550 Jews, Jewesses, and their children. This was the largest number the Mission had ever gathered at one time.

After tea, the meeting was held in the grounds. Mr. Wilkinson gave a word of hearty welcome in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. Rev. D. B. Hankin gave an earnest Gospel address, winning attention by telling them how much he was indebted to their nation for his Bible and Saviour, and in proportion to the preciousness of both to his own heart, he desired the Jews to possess the same blessings he had found. Mr. Tod followed with another address, full of Gospel truth. Various brethren prayed, and Gospel songs were sung by the night-school children.

There was much innocent play both before and after the meeting, and much conversation with Jews in groups, many confessing openly before their brethren their faith in Jesus as Messiah and Saviour.

SHELTERING HOMES, LIVERPOOL.—Mrs. Birt writes that she is about to sail for Canada with the third band of young emigrants this year. "For a brief season I shall be away from this side of the work, and shall be busy visiting, counselling, and cheering the young people I have taken out in former years. The third band consists of boys and girls, some of the nicest we have ever taken in, and it is almost certain they will be successful in the new land."

CHILDREN ON THE CONTINENT.

In the recently issued report of the "Foreign Fund" of the Children's Special Service Mission, many encouraging facts are given as to the success that attends the distribution of the Picture Leaflets. We give the following specimen extracts:—

FINLAND.

During last year the publication of a series of forty of our Picture Leaflets in the Finnish language, translated by Mr. Mäkinen, was brought to completion, 200,000 in all being printed. An earnest lady worker, Miss M. Sahlberg, of Helsingfors, writes:—

"I had eight meetings for children, and in each I distributed about 200 of the Picture Leaflets, about 150 to children, and 50 to grown-up people who attended the meetings. I wish you could see with what joy they received the little tracts! Many of the children came from very far distances in snow and cold to the meetings, but I am sure the little leaflets were to them a great reward. The last meeting I had was on a Sunday afternoon, in a little cottage in the wood, far away from any village. The owner of the little house had asked me to come there, because his house, and some other peasants living in their little cottage in the wood, had so very long distances to the places where the meetings had been before. I went, but as I knew the place, how far away from other people they lived, and as it was this day just a dreadful snow-storm, I did not expect many attendants. But as I came to the place I was almost moved to tears to see the little house full of people, young and old. And as I went home, sitting comfortably in the sledge, a good horse bringing me quickly on my way, I passed many of the children who had attended the meeting, standing and walking in snow up to their knees."

In another letter the same lady says:—

"You cannot imagine how much joy the Finnish Picture Leaflets cause. There is such a great demand for them over the country, pastors and other workers for the Lord send for them, so I have sometimes the hands full of work with all the letters and questions I have to answer. But I am very thankful to be permitted to serve in this way, and I am sure the Lord sends his blessing with the tracts, so that his name will be glorified also by this work."

BULGARIA.

Sixteen of our leaflets have been translated into Bulgarian, by Rev. J. A. Tonjoroff, of Philippopolis, Eastern Roumelia, and 80000 have been printed. Another series would have been printed before now, but for the recent war. Mr. Tonjoroff wrote in one of his letters:—

"There are thousands of Bulgarian boys and girls who can read, but have nothing so interesting. There is only one book in Bulgarian with pictures for the children, translated by an American lady missionary; but every child cannot find a shilling to buy it. I cannot see any reason for the leaflets not being introduced in our schools. They will do an excellent work in our schools, whether by distribution or selling. Not only our Protestant booksellers will be able to scatter them, but even the orthodox (Greek Church) Bulgarian booksellers will be glad to sell them with a proper percentage. Our children are very fond of pictures, and I hope by such they may be led to read and be interested in that glorious work of salvation which Jesus has done for all. And who knows how many little ones will bless the Lord that he sent them these beautiful leaflets?"

In another letter Mr. Tonjoroff says:—"Only God knows the good these leaflets have done to many hearts, where they have been distributed. But the demand is very great. My wife took some hundreds yesterday to be distributed among the little girls of the central Bulgarian Girls' School in the city. They have been received very thankfully. To-day I send some 2000 the other side of the Balkans. Let us pray that the good Lord may bless these to bring many a wandering little one into the fold of the Good Shepherd."

CHRISTIANIA.—Rev. G. Hubert writes:—"Mr. Hammond's meetings have been wonderfully blessed. Souls have been converted, and we are hoping for still greater blessing."

BACK NUMBERS WANTED.—In answer to your paragraph on page 13 of The Christian for June 3, you would greatly oblige by stating that any quantity of back numbers of your paper would be most thankfully received, and distributed to hundreds of railwaymen, by a Christian fellow-workman, in Manchester, and his colleagues in surrounding towns, if forwarded, carriage paid, to wait till called for, to the Y.M.C.A., 56, Peter-street, Manchester. E. H. Lander.

Notes and Comments.

NEXT week we hope to give portraits and sketch of Canon and Mrs. Josephine Butler.

Monday last being a Bank Holiday, we have had to prepare this issue for press earlier than usual. Communications received after Friday morning will be acknowledged in our next.

A report has gained some currency that Mr. George Müller had died in New Zealand. We are thankful to be able to contradict it. The report arose from a lady misreading a letter, which informed her of the death of Mr. George Walker, which she mistook for Mr. George Müller.

In the columns of the Roman Catholic Universe there is a singular advertisement with reference to the Pilgrimage to Lourdes, from which it appears that "all who promise prayers or good works" will be accepted as associates, and will have the right to participate in all the spiritual benefits attached to the pilgrimage. We do not need to specify either the benefits or the works, but it is curious to note that the associates are exhorted to send their petitions and not to fear giving trouble by sending too many.

> The petition may be made out in the form of a prayer to Our Lady: it need not bear the name of the writer, and may be sent in a closed envelope as a private and confidential communication. All will be deposited in the Grotto at Lourdes near the altar, close by the sacred spot where the apparitions of our Lady took place.

It is also announced that at a certain chapel in London "a general petition to our Lady of Lourdes may be signed on Sundays." Yet this has been termed a sceptical age! Could imposture and credulity further go?

At a recent meeting of one of the solemn, learned societies, a paper was read "On the Game of Hop Scotch." According to the report of the proceedings which appeared in The Athenæum, the author traced "the origin of the game to a period anterior to the introduction of Christianity, and showed that in early Christian times children had some rough idea of representing in this game the progress of the soul through the future world, and that the division of the figure into seven courts was on account of the belief in seven heavens." This would be very amusing, if it were not pitiable. Speculation is all very well in its way, but when it goes in directions such as the above, and it is remembered that the mental effort is that of a number of grown up men representing a society many members of which profess to be unable on scientific grounds to believe in the Bible account of the origin of man, we are reminded of the Saviour's reference to those who strain out a gnat and swallow a camel.

Sir Charles Cameron, the officer of health of the City of Dublin, has stated that in the Irish Metropolis 140,000 people live in tenement houses, and that the worst clothed poor population in the United Kingdom is in Dublin. There is a very high mortality from diseases, which have their origin in constitutional causes, including defective nutrition, and want of proper clothing and housing. Sir Charles laid much stress upon the fact that the Sanitary Association has only eighteen lady officers, and that these ladies visit in couples, the latter portion of the remark being amplified by Rev. F. Carmichael, who added that the ladies went in pairs—a Roman Catholic and a Protestant—"that they might watch each other."

We are by no means disposed either to under-value Protestantism or to exalt Romanism, but surely it ought to be possible where only sanitary matters are concerned to put religious discussion aside, and to go about doing good without bickering. A whitewash brush crusade should not necessarily imply the accompaniment of heated discussion or of proselytising, and it is difficult to understand a condition of things which seems to involve both the one and the other.

It is, however, easy to get at the reason of the overcrowding and rags, for Dublin is literally full of whisky shops, and thousands of men and women spend in alcohol that which ought to be expended upon food and clothing. Perhaps in no other city in the world is so much spent upon drink by so poor a population, and the difference between the glitter of the spirit bar and the miserable gloom of the slums and courts in which the consumers live is more striking than it is elsewhere. Drink and poverty and dirt go hand in hand, and it is useless attributing to defective drainage that which is due to the dram shop and the distiller.

The posthumous poem, by Victor Hugo, which has been published, is a very remarkable one, both as regards subject and execution. Based upon the Sacrifice of Calvary, it would have been lamentable had there been in the work any signs of irreverence or irreligion. Perhaps in the passages relating to the Saviour's entry into Jerusalem, the scene before Pilate, and the sentence of Christ, there is not anything above the medium level of much of Victor Hugo's verse; but the portion descriptive of the wanderings of Barabbas after his release—wanderings which at length bring him at nightfall to the cross from which the body of Jesus of Nazareth had been removed—are full of power and pathos. Of equal force is the passage in which Barabbas, recognising that Jesus was the "rejected of men," apostrophises the human race with regard to its choix formidable entre Satan et Dieu. It not only shows strong imagination, but also, so far as a writer's words may be taken as representing his own feelings and real opinions, shows that, at any rate, Victor Hugo believed in the Divinity of Christ, and that more than one of his followers had misrepresented him as holding Unitarian views.

It cannot be too strongly insisted upon that the real differences between the High Church and the Evangelical parties are based not upon a few trivial forms and ceremonies, but upon important and vital doctrines. Of late there has been a revival of the Tractarian heresy of the efficiency of prayers for the dead; and if the disgraceful scene which, it is stated, recently occurred at the porch of a Cheshire church, when the clergyman called a parishioner "a scoundrel" for having removed from the church walls notices requesting the congregation to pray for the souls of the departed, has the effect of calling public attention to Ritualistic teachings, it will be not altogether deplorable. If the parishioner is wealthy enough to take the matter to the Law Courts, and it is said that he is, we may have another Gorham case, and another judicial definition of the doctrines which clergymen of the Church of England are required to teach.

The following passage from The Friends' Missionary Advocate (American) is well entitled to be reproduced:—

> Think of the awful responsibility of allowing nearly two thousand years to go by, after our Lord said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature;" and yet Christendom stands idly facing a lost world; grudgingly sends less than ten thousand workers into the world-field; grudgingly gives ten millions of dollars a year for the work; and then lazily swings in silken hammocks, spun out of fine theories and speculations about "second probation" and "final restoration;" sinks into calm repose with the surfeit of Gospel privileges, fed from repasts whose crumbs would feed a starving world; and ventures into the presence of God, to face a whole generation of lost souls, for whose salvation no personal effort has been practically made.

It is interesting to learn that while the Friends numerically remain stationary, they are increasingly successful in their educational efforts. In adult school work they have been pioneers, and their adult scholars grow more than do those who are children. In Yorkshire, since the returns were made in 1883, forty-two per cent. increase of adults have been brought into Quaker schools. This steadily advancing work, outside their own communion, is a very valuable contribution to the welfare of the people.

A Wesleyan layman in The Nonconformist traces the decrease of members in Methodism to undue honouring of wealth, and to a receding from early teaching in laxity of life. Among Irish Congregationalists a merchant —Mr. Callender Campbell, of Londonderry— has pressed the inquiry whether widespread commercial depression is not the result of unchristian business practices, and has ably contended that the death-blow to the present ruinous competitions, business gamblings, and grasping monopolies, can alone come from a return of Christendom to the teaching of Christ.

Some weeks ago we alluded to an important conference which had been held in Bradford as to the reasons why working-men absented themselves from public worship. At a second conference the Socialists and trade-unionists advanced their anti-evangelical theories. Undeterred by this, influential laymen have again met, and carried unanimously resolutions to the following effect:— That in churches, chapels, and other places, there should be earnest and pointed preaching of the Gospel; singing in which all the people could join; freer access, especially on Sunday evenings, to pews; personal invitations, efforts to interest young people in Christian work; and a deeper and more prayerful sense of dependence on the Spirit of God. It is very hopeful to find the laymen of a large town united in these convictions.

Our readers will be glad to learn that Mr. Edward W. Thomas is now engaged in extending one of the Preventive Homes of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution. This enlarged branch is designed for the special benefit of really friendless young girls in their teens. The training given to these 'waifs and strays' will be first Christian, secondly thoroughly industrial, especially with the view of their entering domestic service. The outlay will, it is anticipated, be met by the willing offerings of the public.

The Christian.

"Jesus saith: Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men."

MISSION TO DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

The Mission is designed, in humble dependence upon the blessing of Almighty God,—

I.—To carry the Glad Tidings of God's Love, Mercy, and Salvation in our Lord Jesus Christ to the thousands of Fishermen employed in trawling and other modes of fishing in the North Sea and elsewhere, and in every possible way to promote and minister to their spiritual welfare.

II.—To mitigate the hard lot, and improve the condition of the Fishermen physically and mentally by all practicable means, and meet many urgent needs for which, heretofore, there has been no provision, especially in supplying medicine and simple surgical appliances, books, mufflers, and cuffs.

For the above purposes Mission Vessels are stationed with six fishing fleets, but it is of urgent importance that more vessels should be fitted for similar service, in order that Clerical and Lay Missionaries and Agents may visit the Smacksmen.

"The undertaking is a blessed one, and will be accepted by our Heavenly Father as an offering of true devotion."—The Bishop of London.

"The Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen deserves the support of all who are interested in winning souls for Christ."—The Bishop of Exeter.

"Christian philanthropy never devised anything more conducive to the relief of human suffering than the furnishing of a Medicine Chest on the Mission Vessels, to which fishermen, in case of sickness or accident, might have recourse, free of cost."
The Sunday Magazine.

"It was not long before some sick and injured men were brought on board. Poor fellows! let a man fall sick, or be hurt or gashed ever so much by falling spar or running tackle, there is no help or healing for him in the fishing fleets. He must simply suffer—and, it may be, die—until he can be sent home by some returning steamer or smack. Mais nous avons changé tout cela; there is a medicine chest on board each of the Mission vessels, and relief may now be promptly administered. We had, on the very first day, ample proof of the need for such help. Wounds and bruises, bad enough in their way, seemed nothing to the ulcers, sores, and other painful cases, mostly the result of wounds aggravated by exposure and neglect. Then some of our visitors wanted books and papers; they had heard of our library, and were not slow in availing themselves of it."—A Visitor on board the "Edward Auriol."

"The Mission to Deep Sea Fishermen is worthy the most liberal support of the public. It has done, is doing, and is likely to do, we believe, a grand work among our fishermen at sea."
The Yarmouth Independent.

"I look upon the Mission Vessel as a blessing to the trade of the Port."—The Mayor of Great Grimsby.

"It is indeed an advantage for our fishermen at sea by means of these vessels to enjoy the same privileges as we ourselves do on shore."
The Mayor of Great Yarmouth.

"The Mission Vessels, by determined effort, are sweeping away the grog shops from the North Sea."
Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart, M.P.

Additional Funds are very urgently needed. During the summer months the expense of despatching Evangelists to the North Sea, and maintaining them on board the various vessels, is an exceedingly heavy strain upon the income of the Mission.

Contributions may be paid to Messrs. Lloyds, Barnetts & Bosanquets (Limited), 62, Lombard-street, E.C., or to

CONSUMPTION

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, ASTHMA, AND ALL OTHER CHEST DISEASES.

SIXPENCE (Post Free), or Large Edition (cloth), 1s. 3d. from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E., and Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The Seventeenth Series of Weekly Cases is now publishing, from May to August.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

Reprinted from an article in "The Christian Herald," March 31, 1886.

"ADVANCED BRONCHO-PHTHISIS.

"The patient's name, Mr. Thos. W. Finnett, of 55, Lyal-road, North Bow, E., having seen the cases published every week in a religious paper, was encouraged to apply to Mr. Congreve.

"For two years he had suffered with cough and expectoration. These symptoms had increased until he brought up blood. A second hæmorrhage had just taken place. He had attended the Brompton Hospital until a month before this, and left, there being apparently no hope of recovery.

"At this time expectoration was profuse, and mixed with blood; pains in the right side were severe. The patient was losing flesh and strength rapidly.

"In a month, under Mr. Congreve's treatment, there was manifest improvement. The spitting of blood ceased in two months. Prescriptions were given for the throat, for the general debility, hæmoptysis, &c. In a few months the patient was well.

"And this is what he writes, in a letter received by Mr. Congreve a few weeks ago:—'I am now enjoying very good health. I was indeed in a sad state when I first came under your treatment. I was fearfully reduced, through losing so much blood. By God's help, and your good advice and medicine, I am as strong as ever. I persevered until I got thoroughly well. I never fail to tell others who may suffer as I did. Make any use you please of this.'"

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

FACTS FOR HEALTH SEEKERS.

Presently people will be hurrying away to the mountains and the seaside, their stock of nerve force being exhausted through overwork. In seeking a change of air they not only acted under medical advice, but they obeyed a natural instinct. Many of us, especially those who dwell in towns, find the external conditions depressing, because the wear and tear and mental strain are too great, the nervous system flags, and the healthy action of the organism generally is interfered with. The power for resistance, or, what may be termed self-assistance, is rendered inert; consequently health fluctuates or declines, and counterbalancing conditions are imperatively called for. That the action of Odo-Magnetism is to supply the conditions most favourable to recuperation is proved by what it has done, and by the facts and truths stated in the few following sentences:—

Every living animal experiences sensations produced by the positive and negative state of the atmosphere, and every scientist knows the sensation felt in the nervous system from certain forms of electricity. The vigorous, braced-up condition of the nerves as the effect of mountain air or sea-breezes conveys some idea of the invigoration realized by the proximity of Odo-Magnetic influence. Nature and art now combine to render this subtle force constantly in action or perpetual operation. A power for good as natural as the air we breathe is superadded for the invalid's advantage, surrounding him, as it were, by a vitalising atmosphere.

The essential characteristics of Odo-Magnetic influence are its penetrating and permeating qualities, and the unabating regularity in its lines of force, which are equally distributed and well-balanced in their operation so as to induce a uniform flow of health in the living organism even amidst surrounding disturbances.

Our principle of application is to infuse this unseen but energising force in such a manner as to affect the whole organism for good. Our attention is especially directed to the mental disturbance or nervous affection which is too often the original cause of physical ailments. By this means we supply the over-worked man with the like physical stimulus to that which he gets from the mountain air and sea breezes, and often more effectually.

Mr. J. YOUNG, 207, High-street, Camden Town, N.W.

February 10, 1886.—"I am now in a position to state definitely and candidly that under the blessing of God I owe the good health I now have to the use of the Odo-Magnetic Nerve Invigorator you prescribed for me more than twelve months ago. Before coming to you I was under medical treatment for a long time without benefit; in fact, I rather grew worse, so much so, that I felt quite unfit for business, and contemplated giving up my situation and going home. My business necessitates much standing and long hours, so that at the close of the day I felt unable to walk upstairs to my bedroom, I was so utterly worn out. Being advised by a friend to consult you, I did so, after which my previous good health returned. I have been wonderfully free from colds all through this winter, and have had no occasion to take medicine of any kind since wearing the Apparel. I shall always have pleasure in recommending your Treatment to my friends and acquaintances as opportunity presents itself."

It will be regarded as a pleasure by Mr. B. C. Garratt to do anything to extend the knowledge of this subject, and to afford any desired information. His advice may be had gratuitously, by personal application or by letter, and those whose sufferings have become chronic through the failure of ordinary remedies are, if possible, more especially welcome to his attention. A thoughtfully candid opinion may always be anticipated, with the fullest consideration of all necessities and varying features of the case submitted. B. THE PROPHET OF GLORY;

OR, ZECHARIAH'S VISIONS OF The Coming and Kingdom of Christ.

REVIEWS.

"Our friend is known to be clear as light upon evangelical truth, and this is apparent upon every page he has written. He gives us here sweet enlargements upon the words and visions of the prophet, which to our mind are shorter than we would have had them. What he gives makes us long for more. A desire for more is nature's way of witnessing that what she has received is good."—C. H. Spurgeon, Sword and Trowel.

"None can read it without his heart being stirred with the blessed hope of the glorious appearing of the great God and Saviour Jesus Christ. It is beautifully printed and bound, and will be a favourite with many givers."—The Christian.

"It is on the bearing of this hope upon the future of a redeemed and purified earth that the author dwells with power in this volume, which will prove a blessing to thousands, as others from his pen have done"—Footsteps of Truth.

"Here, as all in the author's writings, the Gospel bells ring out clearly and melodiously. No one will read, Jew or Gentile, saved or unsaved, who will not be instructed, comforted, or it may be awakened to be found ready in the coming day."

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every fleet.

We are desired to state that at the first two afternoon meetings of the approaching Mildmay Conference, in the Great Hall, questions on the difficulties of the Christian life will be answered. All such questions should be sent in to the care of Mr. J. E. Mathieson, on or before Monday, June 21.

Last Wednesday and Thursday, at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, interesting details were given of mission work in India, China, North Africa, Central Africa, Singapore, Spain, Sicily, Italy, France, Russia, Germany, and Scandinavia, by various friends. We hope to furnish a report in our next issue.

The sum we have as yet received towards the "Day in the Country Fund" is very small, in proportion to the numerous applications from mission workers for a share in it. We trust that our readers, while enjoying their own season of holiday, will not forget the thousands of poor City children who are pining for a single day's outing in the green fields.

Our correspondence gives evidence of a very healthy anxiety of parents in reference to their children. The importance of the subject can scarcely be exaggerated. A blessed work proceeds among children on these summer months, by delightful gatherings of them at the sea-side. But it is the after influence which is important. Do any of us adequately estimate the infinite significance of the prayer repeated by a child, "Lead us not into temptation"? When the first pointing of the nature of a child is turned to Christ, and in its simplicity and teachableness it believes in his love, should there not be the most anxious and prayerful solicitude to watch over that first beginning of a new life, and to guard lest such a child should be introduced to habits or associations that turn it fatally back to the world? Let this not be forgotten when the children are gathered to these sea-side services.

An address was issued by the Cardinal Archbishop of Westminster before the general Election of last autumn. Dr. Manning speaks in it of the people of Ireland being robbed of their own soil, and condemns the undenominational system of education of 1870. He bids his readers be Catholics first and citizens afterwards, and clearly teaches that when the two duties clash, Catholics must prefer the interests of the Church to those of the nation, and must subordinate political action to the upholding and restoration of Catholic constitutions. Here are principles set forth on high authority which may in the future be interpreted in a sense many are not dreaming of.

If there is one invaluable lesson above another which the Old Testament repeats, it is that the "hope of Israel" failed not. The nation went wrong; gloom lay all around, but the prophets always saw light beyond. To them disastrous years were the foretellers of a new birth in history. The vision of Greece and Rome was bounded by political facts, and their history ended in lamentation. The patriarchs hoped against hope, and there came the glories of the Jewish Theocracy. The prophets even trusted when the Israelitish nation proved faithless to its destiny; and through the oppressions of the exile there came a vision of the fulness of the time when God sent forth his Son. Let us not now forget the grand lesson.

It is another hopeful symptom of a revived interest in foreign missions that the admirable memoir of Robert and Mary Moffat, by their Son, has already reached a fourth and popular edition. The author's personal recollections that form a short supplementary chapter are most welcome, as giving added glimpses into the character of his devoted parents. We trust this fascinating book will be increasingly useful in leading our young men and women to give their lives to foreign service, as well as in awakening thankfulness to God for what has been accomplished in Africa. (T. Fisher Unwin. 7s. 6d.)

During our recent mission tour we were much impressed with the necessity of supplying The Christian weekly to every English-speaking missionary, pastor, or evangelist. As an encouragement and stimulus to trust in God, and to personal activity in his service, as well as a means of uniting workers in prayerful fellowship and co-operation, we have constant evidence that the benefit would be immense. We already have many European and foreign pastors on our free list, and we cannot further extend this. We have, therefore, with much satisfaction, received the following proposal, which we hope may lead others to follow the writer's generous example:—

Dear Sir,—I have frequently read in The Christian of the good done in circulating the paper amongst people through Christian friends, and I shall be very pleased to subscribe to a further six copies, and pay postage, should you at any time know of any outlet where the paper would be appreciated, either at home or abroad. To save expense, it would, of course, be best to forward the copies direct from your office. The copy I have I send to Canada, where, I believe, it is much sought after.

Yours truly, F. B.

A correspondent writes to us of the small encouragement—if not discouragement—given to many earnest, but ill-educated, candidates for the foreign mission field. We need to be reminded that genuine zeal may sometimes be snubbed to death; and that it is easy to overlook capabilities when they are undeveloped, and, to some extent, hidden by faults which a true education would remove. We know there is something to be said on the other side, and that not a few really feeble men, who seem to be delightfully unconscious of their feebleness, seek admittance to the ministry at home, or the mission service abroad. When the cry of ungenerous treatment comes from this quarter, as it often does, we may well disregard it. But, apart from such a case, there is great need, we think, of more penetration of wisdom, more penetration of charity, lest young men of true enthusiasm lose the holy fire which God has given them. The Church of Christ would have been far richer to-day in brave and able leaders if only she had made kindlier allowance for her young men in the excesses of their true but undisciplined zeal, and had shown a more generous faith in them—a greater readiness to recognise latent talent.

REQUESTS.—PRAYER for blessing on a series of Bible readings at the Glasgow Noon Meeting, from June 15 to July 2, by F. E. Marsh.——For blessing on a mission in Handcross and Charlwood, Sussex.

ROSEMARY MISSION AND RAGGED SCHOOLS.—As one of the agencies by which this great city is kept from becoming utterly corrupt, this well-known Mission is still actively at work in the midst of a dense and ignorant population. Much is done by means of Sunday and night schools. It is pleasing to note that a satisfactory feature is the increased number of small depositors in the penny bank, showing how in this way the principle of self-help is inculcated. The Sunday and week night services, conducted by students from the Church Missionary College, are well attended, and the District Visiting Society and other agencies are of material aid in keeping the people together. Communications may be addressed to Mr. William Buckley, 141, Downham-road, Islington, N.

BELIEVERS' MEETINGS, DUBLIN.

Some twelve years ago it was my privilege to attend these meetings, and again during the recent week. Since then how many beloved saints have been gathered home, but the same loving, genial welcome was offered to all, the hospitality still princely; young evangelists strengthened, cheered, and sent on their way rejoicing.

The lonely tent-worker in the villages, the valiant Bible-carriage labourer, the lovers of the little destitute children, the stronger evangelists, and the weaklings just beginning to try their gifts in Bible classes, all gathered together in the name of our beloved Lord, feasting from day to day upon the very "finest of the wheat."

There were seasons appointed, when the more instructed scribes divided the truths given them by the Holy Ghost, and words that had been well woven into their experiences; other times, when youthful evangelists with burning zeal and love gave forth freely from their gathered stores.

Doubtless, there may have been differences of opinion on minor points, but such a spirit of love was manifested that these were never heard. So realised was the presence of the Lord, that did one not know the fact, that God was dealing with our Empire as a nation, and about to teach us all lessons of increased nearness to Himself, by the rod of his judgments, none would have known it from the lips of any of the Dublin believers, except in such deep and trembling utterances now and again in prayer as, "Oh, teach us the practical meaning of John xiv. Oh, direct our gaze away from political questions to a simpler faith. May the people be led to look upward, and receive such a blessing, determined to know and trust his loving kindness that cannot fail. Let that be done, our God, that will break down superstition, and enable thy people to live holy lives in their own homes, and not be ashamed of the Cross of the Lord Jesus."

How solemn were the utterances of men we had heard in other years! How the softened shadows on their brows were telling tales of real trials borne in secret; words of mighty import and spirit-taught meaning, caused by suffering in the struggle (now upon us all) with increased forms of creeds, instead of the real and spiritual worship of our Lord and Master. One such said, "Trouble came upon Jerusalem soon after they were told to be witnesses. Set your hearts on the ministry of the Word while you have the opportunity. The time is upon us when the Word of God will be restrained. It is good to be in the service, and it is good to be in the trial."

The closing prayer-meeting of the last day of this week of precious opportunity was most sacred. Old men with trembling voices, young men softened by the circumstances, and many a maiden were giving themselves in silence to a full-hearted consecration. Love reigned in all hearts as the words of seniors in the warfare gave farewell breathings, and the familiar hymn was sung—

"Yes, we part, but not for ever,
Joyful hopes our bosoms swell;
They who love the Saviour, never Know a last, a long farewell.
Blissful unions
Lie beyond this parting vale."

After the scattering, an English brother tarried, and that evening preached the Gospel, when a goodly number rose, indicating thereby that they had decided for the Lord Jesus.

Let us all continue in prayer for Ireland, that the Word of the Lord may have free course and be glorified.

Annie MacPherson.

P.S.—This memorable week of soul-refreshing had (June 4) one long day of deep darkness to us. Public news told of disaster by icebergs to the Sardinian, with our dear sister and little ones. Twelve hours expecting a cable telegram moment by moment. In his great mercies the cries for help were answered, and "All well" came in the morning. On again attending the meetings how heartily we joined in singing—

"Hallelujah! hallelujah!
Heartfelt praise to God we give;
They should loudest sing his praises
Who his blessings thus receive.
Songs of praises
Let us render while we live."

MORE LAND TO BE OCCUPIED.

While we are watching the rapid progress now making in commercial and missionary operations on the Congo, those of us who are giving ourselves to the Berbers wait with deepest interest any progress now making on the other great highway into the heart of Africa, the Niger, with the hope that it may be possible to reach the Touareg Berbers on the great northern bend of that river. To reach them from the north is surrounded with difficulties.

It may be a question whether the Nomades of the Sahara might not be approached in the same way that the Nomade Lapps are in Norway. In winter they encamp with their heads about their principal towns, Koutagooino and Karasjok, near the Russian frontier, and during summer near the coasts, wandering schoolmasters follow them in their migrations. When the French authorities have a greater hold on Touat, Tidikelt, and Gourard, the Touaregs may be met with there, but those terrible Hoggars are notorious for the massacres they have committed on unoffending travellers, and it would be rash at present to penetrate their country. The Asgar Touaregs to the east, on the other hand, are friendly with the French Government, and even warned the Flatters Mission against trusting the Hoggars. The Asgars have supplied guides and afforded safe conduct to recent travellers. Rhat is on their eastern frontier; a caravan of camels from that town was recently reposing on the Champ de Manœuvres here at Algiers. The Kel Oui, on the south-east, appear to be a friendly set of people. Barth and his companions stayed eight months in their mountains at Asben, and described the country, as well as Agades and Bamagou, in the region below it, as very salubrious and fit for the residence of Europeans.

I was not a little astonished a short time back with a call from a young clergyman, the curate of a friend of mine in London, who was en route for Tripoli, whence he proposed to start through these countries to Lake Chad. I greatly admired the zeal which prompted him to do something for his Master. However, when he arrived at Tripoli he found that, in his circumstances, such a journey was impracticable.

The other Berber Touaregs, the Ouel Immiden in the south, may be reached from the south. They are found on both sides of the Niger, and are given to agricultural pursuits.

On arriving thus at this mighty river, one is overwhelmed with the sense of its importance as a noble highway of communication, not merely with the Touaregs on its northern bend, but with the facilities which in the overruling providence of God it may give to approach the numberless tribes in its vicinity. The intrepid Stanley has opened a new world by means of the Congo. Why should not such travellers as Buonfanti awaken the attention of God's people to the countries bordering on the Niger?

Buonfanti started from Tripoli in the spring of 1881, accompanied by an American naturalist and medical man, Mr. Van Flint, an interpreter, and a caravan. On reaching Lake Chad he went westward, and struck the Niger at Say, and thence navigated the river to Timbuctoo; the first person who ever accomplished the feat. From Say he found the Niger of easy navigation to Garou, 140 miles. There he learnt that the river was navigable to Em. N. Aschid. From thence he found navigation difficult on account of the rapids, but reaching Ayola the river presented a majestic aspect, both sides covered with baobab, tamarind, and palm trees. At the island of Ansongo they encountered the most difficult part of their voyage amidst granite rocks, and they were obliged to drag the boats from time to time on shore; thence their course became more easy, the dangers then consisting of sand banks, hippopotami, crocodiles, hostile Rouma Touaregs, Sonrhoi, and Gaberos, added to enormous spiders and serpents.

At Fagona, the Niger is an immense lake. There are numerous islands at Bourroum, and here the expedition had to wait for the rise of the waters to enable them to continue their course. Then turning the Arc at Bourroum they continued their way, arriving at Kabra, the port of Timbuctoo, from which it is distant about eight or ten miles. Hospitably entertained there by the Cheik Ab-el-Omer, Buonfanti discharged his men, organised a caravan, and proceeded overland on donkeys through Tombo, Mossi, and Gourma. Robbed of all his goods, succoured by the Roman Catholic missionaries at Kiranoro, and provided by them with a guide and some men, they at length reached Lagos on the Guinea coast accomplishing his journey in twenty-two months. Buonfanti has since been engaged by the King of the Belgians for fresh explorations on the Congo.

Thus this great central mart of Timbuctoo was gained from the east. From the west the French have made energetic efforts to reach the Niger. Several expeditions have started from Senegal, and where the River Senegal becomes unnavigable, they have projected and partly made a railway from Khayes to Boufoulabé, intending to carry it on to the Niger; at Bamakou they have erected forts or depôts on the Toute, and built and garrisoned a fort at Bamakou. Recently they placed a small steamer on the river and ascended as far as Koulikoro, but it was stopped there by the rapids. Thus by river and rail ere long the Senegal and the Niger may be linked together, and communication opened by the French with the Mussulman centres of trade.

Now for the approach to the Upper Niger from the south. English commerce, and missionary effort, too, thank God, have been pushed from the mouth of the Niger up to Rabba, passing Egga. Above Rabba is Bussa, Yauri, and Say, where Buonfanti took the river for Timbuctoo. The Gando territory embraces all these towns, and at the north borders on the negro state and ancient kingdom of Sonrhay, which has a population of about two millions. They are said to be a mild race, having a language of their own. Now it only requires to treat with these two Powers to get access to the north. Lukoja, nearer the mouth of the river, became a mission station of Bishop Crowther in 1857. It had formerly been the model farm of Dr. Blaikie, and is now, as well, a chief trading place and store for the merchants of Liverpool, Sierra Leone, and Lagos trafficking on the Niger.

In 1852 Mr. Laird established the African Steamship Company, and built factories along parts of the river. The distance is not great from Rabba to Say, and thus we see that the way may be found amongst these millions of our fellow-men to bring them the light of the glorious Gospel. There may be difficulties, but no impossibilities, in following the course of the Niger from its embouchure to Timbuctoo, but how great were the difficulties in entering China, when Xavier on its confines exclaimed, "O Rock, Rock! when wilt thou open?" Prayer was made unceasingly by the Church of God, and at length and gradually towns were opened to us on the coast, then missionaries were permitted to make limited excursions into the interior, and now, blessed be God! the whole land is open; but it took years to arrive at this blessed result. Events proceed more rapidly in these days. Let us, then, ask the Lord to give speedy access by the Niger to those vast regions comprised within its wide embrace, and that the Berbers on its northern shores may hear the Gospel also.

Arabic is indispensable for mission work in most parts of Africa. Happily it can be easily acquired in England. There are two able Professors in Cambridge—Robertson Smith and Dr. William Wright; two also in Oxford; a native Professor at King's College, London, and there would be no difficulty to find Arabs in London to teach the colloquial at the Strangers' Rest.

It would be very helpful to the cause of missions in the wide world if there were, as proposed at the recent General Missionary Conference at Manchester, "a centre for mission intelligence in this country, belonging to no particular organisation, but being the focus of all knowledge relating to the missions of the whole world."

One of the friends who promoted the Missionary Conference at Leicester paid us a visit here, and on asking him where he thought such a centre should be established, replied, "London would be most central."

A mission office, and some catholic-minded Christian brother to gather and diffuse information and stimulate prayer, would not be difficult to find.—Yours affectionately in Christ,

L'Agha, Algiers. Geo. Pearse.

THE WOMEN OF INDIA.

This vast subject was considered at several gatherings convened on Tuesday of last week by the Indian Female Normal School and Instruction Society. By invitation of Lady Kinnaird, a large and highly representative company assembled at breakfast in the Cannon-street Hotel. Sir William Muir, who presided, expressed his great gratification at the feeling of unity shown by the attendance of those belonging to so many different Church bodies. As an old Indian official, he was able to emphasise from experience the need for lady missionaries in the Zenanas, and also to testify to the great good that had already been done through this and other Societies.

After some earnest words from Mr. R. N. Cust, a most interesting address was given by Mrs. Sorabji, an Indian lady, who has for some time laboured in this work in the city of Poona. Nothing could exceed the pathetic earnestness with which she urged the claims of her Indian sisters to the blessing of Gospel teaching. Dr. Murray Mitchell, spoke from long experience of the value of women's work in India, and paid a passing tribute to the movement favoured by Lady Dufferin, for providing better medical appliances for the native population. Dr. Weitbrech and Mr. St. Dalmas, both Indian missionaries, testified heartily to the great good that the agents of the Female Normal Schools are doing. Dr. Donald Fraser expressed the strong belief that if we are to retain our hold over India, not to speak of the discharge of our solemn responsibility towards it, we must take steps on a wide scale to give it Christian teaching and civilisation. Dr. Maxwell dwelt on the importance of medical missions as an agency for getting at the hearts of the people.

Earnest pleas for increased support in the work of the Society were made by Hon. A. F. Kinnaird and Mr. W. T. Paton. The latter gentleman cited the immediate needs of the work, which embraced the filling up of several vacancies, the opening of new stations, and the establishment of medical missions at several important centres. It was proposed to organise an Association for the City of London, in order to support one of these medical missions, at a yearly cost of £600. The work needs extension on every hand.

At two o'clock the friends gathered in Exeter-hall. The subject for the first hour was medical missions. General Sir R. Phayre, who presided, said that female medical missions would be a great boon to the women of India, secluded as they were from all help from men. He hoped native women would soon be educated for this work. Several ladies testified to the work that had been accomplished in this direction.

An interesting hour was spent in the reception of delegates from other Societies—those represented being the Church Missionary Society, the Society for the Promotion of Female Education in the East, the London Missionary Society, the American Missions, and the Baptist Missionary Society. Another hour was devoted to the special work of the Normal School Society, when Mrs. Sorabji, from Poona, Miss Baumann, from Lucknow, and Miss Keay, from Lahore, gave interesting and encouraging accounts of its operations in these districts.

The evening meeting was very interesting. Mr. George Williams presided, and spoke of England's responsibility to India, and her duty to carry the Gospel to that land. Rev. A. H. Lash specially dwelt on the native agency branch of the work. He pointed out the enormous numbers to be dealt with—125 millions of women—and recommended the training and using native Christian women as agents, because they are cheap, and lasting, and efficient agents. He showed at some length how cheaply these natives can live; they can stand the climate as no European can, and they have shown that they can efficiently make their way into the homes of India. Rev. A. R. Cavalier referred to the great development of the work. He rejoiced in the unity amongst Christians in the mission field, and the undenominational principles of this Society helped it much in India. Among the other speakers was Mrs. Sorabji, who gave an eloquent address describing life in the Zenanas. Hon. A. F. Kinnaird closed with an appeal for sympathy and support. Christians at home should rouse themselves to a sense of their duty, and by some sacrifice and self-denial seek to send the good news of salvation to the millions of India's women.

FAITH-HEALING.

Dear Sir,—Fearing lest your readers should remain under an impression which would not be altogether correct, from the Rev. J. W. Riddle's letter, which you reprinted from the Chicago Christian Standard, in your issue of June 3, I venture, as having been one of the speakers at Pittsburg, to refer to what he mentions as a "faith-healing convention."

The Convention was held in the third Presbyterian Church for meetings on the Christian Life, on Missionary Work, and Divine Healing; the latter subject taking up only one out of the many meetings. It was a time of great spiritual quickening to many, both residents in Pittsburg and also visitors from the neighbourhood around, as was abundantly proved from the testimonies to blessing received, and the numerous letters to the same effect which followed it. Many Christians were quickened, and have since become earnest workers. One of them, Miss Mary Moorhead, who was healed in New York, of tumour, by the Lord alone, writes from time to time of much blessing in her meetings, and also of cases of healing which accompany spiritual blessing.

I might add that in all the nine Holiness and Healing Conventions in which I took part last autumn in the United States, there was very signal spiritual blessing, many conversions, and much of consecration to God and to his work.

Yours truly in the Lord, L. Baxter.

PROTECTED EMIGRATION.

Dear Sir,—I have letters from Canada telling me of the safe arrival of the twenty young women who sailed under the care of Rev. J. Bridges, and our matron, Miss Fenn, in the Circassian, April 20. Great regret is expressed by my correspondents that more young women did not arrive.

The careful work of the Emigration chaplains of the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge makes us confidently recommend Canadian service to young women. In various places small committees of ladies under the Church of England clergymen of the district have been formed; they pledge themselves to care for and befriend the girls we send out, and to place them in suitable positions. We like to send four or five from the same neighbourhood to each locality as their new homes are thus made more cheery for the young people.

I should be very glad if ten young people over sixteen years of age would come forward ready to sail under the care of Rev. T. Winter, on June 24. The cost is £4 from Liverpool to either Montreal, Brockville or Sherbrooke, inclusive of all extra charges.

Western Australia is still offering free passages to young women. The next vessel sails July, 5. The protection both on the journey and on arrival are admirably arranged. Canada, however, has this advantage that the separation from friends is less complete. Much of our work consists in arranging for young women where friends and relations are already in Canada to join them.

Gladly placing my services at the disposal of any who may care to write to me, I am, dear Sir, yours, Adelaide Ross, Organising Sec.

Snelston Rectory, Ashburne, Derbyshire.

THE FATHERHOOD OF GOD.

Dear Sir,—As you have opened your columns to the partial discussion of this topic, may I ask you to insert another brief vindication of the doctrine of the Fatherhood of God as regards the whole of the human family, a faith which I believe is held with a firm tenacity by a very large number of earnest and devoted Christians, to whom it sheds the brightest ray of light in the midst of the world's darkness, and enables them to retain a confident hope for the future, notwithstanding all the misery and moral desolation which they see around.

If your correspondent, J. W. F., has not lost sight of, at all events he has not urged, the fundamental proof of God's Fatherhood as regards human nature generally, which is derived from the scriptural account of the origin of man. God is the Creator; yes, but of what? Of the human body, although even of this not in the sense of creation out of nothing. But of the soul of man, of that which constitutes his real being, God is not the Creator at all. God breathed into him the breath of life, and man became a living soul. Adam, it is said, begat a son in his own likeness, and, similarly, God said, "Let us make man in our image after our likeness. And so, having formed man from the dust of the earth as regards his body, God infused into his creature the spark of His own being, constituting him thus His offspring. In perfect conformity with this does St. Luke say, just as of Seth that he was the son of Adam, so of Adam that he was the son of God.

But this image of God has been marred, defaced, blurred by sin. True, but still not altogether effaced. In the depths of his degradation and ruin man has not lost altogether the marks of his Divine origin. The childlike relation to God has been interrupted, the filial intercourse put an end to. Yes, but not so effectually but that it may be restored. And to accomplish this restoration we believe was the very purpose for which Jesus Christ came into the world.

One great object of our Lord's manifestation, if we read the New Testament aright, was to reveal the Father. The deep, although often unconscious, longing of the human soul finds its fit expression in the words of Philip: "Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us." "He that hath seen Me," Jesus replies, "hath seen the Father." Whose Father? The Father of the elect? The Father of those that believe? A Father who is not so already, but is willing to become so? There is no such restriction hinted at in the broad generalities of these words. And every look, every tone, every action of Jesus Christ was a revelation of the Father. His compassion, his tenderness, his mercy, and no less his severity and intolerances of sin, showing itself especially against sins of moral injustice, oppression, and cruelty, were all an unveiling of the Father's heart.

He welcomed the excommunicated Zaccheus, saying, that to him, the outcast, had salvation come; why? Because that he also was a son of Abraham. He admitted the claim of the Syrophenician woman to a place, however humble, at the children's table. And He rebuked with scorching severity those who while believing that they were God's children, which they might justly do, were yet manifesting in their lives the fruits of another parentage, that of the evil one.

Were they, then, the children of the devil, such as we also read of in the parable of the tares? Only if they deliberately chose so to be. But we are reminded of St. John's words, "As many as received Him, to them gave He power to become the sons of God," &c, as though this were proof that they were not the children of God before, and if not so then of course the children of the devil. I fail, however, to see the form of this reasoning. A simple illustration may suffice to show the contrary. A child of noble parents is stolen from home in infancy, and brought up among gipsies, in misery and degradation, utterly ignorant of his parentage and birthright. Is he the child of his parents or not? So far as they are concerned, yes; so far as he is concerned, no; he has no knowledge of, and cannot claim his blessing. But at length he is discovered, and the father comes and tells him that he is his child, and that he is ready to welcome him to his home. If the child believes this, he receives power to become that child in reality. If not he remains as he was, only with the blame of having rejected that which might have been actually his own. So with us; Christ comes and tells us that God is our Father, and loves us and wants us in his home. If we believe this, we believe it because it is true, and do not make it true by believing it. And then, believing, we gain from Him the power for this truth to become an actual present reality in our own souls.

I need not do more than just allude to the wonderful parables in Luke xv. They all show that whatever may be the attitude of man to God, He has never ceased to regard them as his own; his sons, his lost treasures, whom He is ever searching to find and to save.

The same teaching is confirmed by some significant verses in the Epistle to the Hebrews, and with quoting these, the present argument may come to an end.

God's purpose, we read, was, and is, to bring many sons unto glory. They are sons, then, beforehand, and He designs to bring many of them to glory. How many we do not know, nor need we wish to; the secret is safe in his hands. The point is that whether He bring them to glory or not, He calls them sons, and is therefore their Father. Again, "Forasmuch as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, He also Himself likewise took part of the same." They were children, then, before Christ took their nature upon Him, and He took their nature because He recognised them as God's children, whom his mission was to bring back to their Father. Again, "In all things it behoved Him to be made like unto his brethren." It behoved Him! What a word, how strange, and yet how natural, if with reverence, and yet with simplicity, we translate into reality the meaning of the word "Father." If God be the Father of the human family, was it not inevitable that He should be willing at any cost to make it possible for his lost and ruined children to be brought back to their Father's home and their Father's heart?

Yours faithfully, E. Reeves Palmer.

OUR VILLAGES.

Sir,—The following circumstance is mentioned in the hope that it may assist some of your readers to answer the question, "What can be done for our villages?" A gentleman who was much concerned about the spiritual needs of a village in which he had resided, applied to the Country Towns Mission for advice. As it was not possible to raise sufficient funds for the whole payment of an agent, it was arranged that one of their missionaries stationed a few miles off should go to the village one day a week for visitation, and for the purpose of holding a cottage-meeting from time to time. This plan has proved most successful, and the missionary is just entering upon a second year's work there.

Doubtless there are many who are acquainted with similar places, in which they have become interested from one cause or another, and who would be glad to do something if they saw the way. The secretary will be happy to communicate with any upon whose hearts the Lord may have laid the burden of a particular locality.

G. H. Mawer, Secretary.

Country Towns Mission,
18, New Bridge-street, E.C.

HANGCHOW MEDICAL MISSION.—The third annual report of this mission in connection with the Church Missionary Society is full of interest. The new hospital, a substantial and commodious building, was opened in May last year, the occasion being one of much rejoicing. In the hospital there are four large wards, with twelve beds in each, besides six private wards, and the necessary offices. In a cupola there is a large clock, paid for entirely by the Chinese, the money being collected by the students, of whom Dr. Duncan Main has now thirteen under instruction. The number of patients treated during 1885 was 10,024, many of these being opium patients. Seventy-nine cases of suicide are mentioned from this cause. The principal object being the bringing the Gospel to the people, there is every morning in the hospital an evangelistic service, and the Scriptures are read to the out-patients whilst they are waiting. Thus in many cases the medical missionary gains an entrance into hearts and homes otherwise closed to human agency.

STABLE LADS, NEWMARKET.—A Gospel effort specially on behalf of this class has been carried on for some time by Miss A. Jackson. I find, she says, there are over eight hundred employed in the Newmarket stables alone, and they come, as a rule, from classes of the community without education, and destitute of religious teaching. When I commenced work amongst them, at Chantilly (the French Newmarket), I was told that it was "hopeless;" but, so far from being hopeless, I find it most encouraging. During five weeks at Newmarket, I held meetings for the lads nearly every night, and they came in numbers, many of them walking miles to be able to do so. They were deeply interested, and before the meetings closed several of the lads came out on the Lord's side. To go forwar[illegible]n this work will necessitate a mission hall in which to continue the meetings, with a reading-room attached for the use of the lads, where they may resort in their leisure time, instead of to the public-house. To carry out this plan £400 is needed.

The Book World.

Steps Heavenward. Compiled by M. J. H. 1s. Hatchards. An elegant miniature volume of choice extracts, impartially selected.

The Book of Common Prayer, with texts and proverbs, and illustrated with photographs (Hatchards) is an elegant edition of this Vade Mecum of devotion.

Sue; or, Wounded in Sport. By E. Vincent Briton. 1s. 6d. Seeley & Co. As far as the language goes, a well-written story of a wayward love; but the conclusion is weak in comparison with the promise in the beginning.

The Royal Picture Books: Charlie and his Pet; Our Queen. 6d. each. Religious Tract Society. Excellent in every way. Life-like illustrations and interesting letterpress make these books a royal road to reading for the little ones.

Ought the Free Church to Resume Connection with the State? By Professor W. G. Blaikie. T. Nelson & Sons. An able pamphlet on a question of great importance to the Scottish Churches. It maintains that union with the State would imperil the most characteristic features of the Free Church, weaken the efficiency of her evangelistic work, and violate the spirit of the protest of 1843.

The Tower on the Cliff. A Legend. By Emma Marshall. 1s. 6d. Seeley & Co. Is it well to dress up a legend of this kind, with its witches, and spells, and midnight vigils, and murder? The writing is excellent, since Mrs. Marshall is the writer; but she has written stories which so far surpass this that we are disappointed in the present instance. It is hardly the book to give an imaginative, susceptible girl.

All of Grace. An Earnest Word with those who are Seeking Salvation by the Lord Jesus Christ. By C. H. Spurgeon. 1s. Passmore & Alabaster. Every word is weighted with precious truth, and truth so simply and convincingly put, that none can fail to understand God's way of salvation. Powerful illustrations, apt and original similes, and the one affectionate desire to win for Christ and to Christ, make it a Gospel treasury of priceless worth.

Some More Notes on the Stage, and its Influence on the Education of the Masses, Players, and Playgoers. By Henry Blau, F.S.Sc. Trübner & Co. Mr. Blau is a dramatic critic, and is naturally enthusiastic about his art. He here urges a much-needed plea in favour of the purification of the stage; but we suspect he will be as a voice crying in the wilderness. The theatre can never elevate men so long as it panders to their lowest tastes.

Spiritual Truth for Believers. By Thomas Moor. 2s. 6d. J. Nisbet & Co. This is a rich treasury of spiritual jewels. Here is clear light for the groping sinner, Gospel milk for the young believer, strong meat for warriors, pilgrims, and fathers in Christ. Specially valuable is Mr. Moor's distinction between God's judicial dealing with the sin of the world and his paternal dealing with the sins of his people. He writes also with Scriptural clearness on the two covenants, the covenant of works, and the covenant of grace. The matter is excellent, the style is vigorous, the arrangement very simple, and the print clear.

Ling-Nam; or, Interior Views of Southern China, and the Island of Hainan. Partridge & Co. This is a reproduction of papers which appeared in The China Review. We are glad to commend them in the very attractive form in which they appear. Every chapter teems with well told and instructive narratives concerning the habits and customs of the Chinese. An interesting feature is the fact that those parts in the south which are comparatively unknown are here particularly dealt with. The author claims the honour of being the first to present to the reading world an account of the Island of Hainan. Capital pen-and-ink sketches by a native artist enhance the value of the book.

Australia; or, England in the South. By George Sutherland, M.A., of Melbourne University. Seeley & Co. This treatise is especially appropriate just now that we have a Colonial Exhibition in London. To those who are neither familiar with Australia nor the experiences of getting there, and the kind of emigration or emigrant that is useful, it will prove a faithful friend. Nothing appears to be exaggerated or underrated, and if, sometimes, the author regards the prospect through glasses slightly couleur de rose, he does not disguise the fact that there is the reverse side to the picture. Mr. Sutherland, writing of the native races of Australia, says that their most potent enemy is drink.

The Exposition of the New Testament. By Matthew Henry. Vol. iii. 4s. Jack & Co. We doubt not that many will be glad to avail themselves of this valuable expository work. The present edition combines cheapness with utility, and will form a useful acquisition to the Bible Student's Library.

The Book of Joshua: a Critical and Expository Commentary on the Hebrew Text. By Rev. John Lloyd, M.A., F.R.H.S. 7s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Mr. Lloyd has already distinguished himself as a Biblical scholar, and his latest venture will add to his reputation. It utilises the results attained by other labourers in the same field, but does so in no slavish spirit. It has an independence of thought and vigour of statement all its own. The frequent references made in it to the discoveries of the Palestine Exploration Fund will furnish the reader with valuable geographical information about the Holy Land; and the careful examination of the original text will aid him in getting a fuller knowledge of the meaning of Joshua. The comments are forceful, acute, and interesting.

A Critical and Expository Commentary on the Book of Judges. By Rev. Canon Fausset, M.A. Nisbet & Co. This is a valuable commentary, and worthy of the high name of its author, whose share in the well-known "Critical and Experimental Commentary," by Brown and Fausset, has already laid Bible students under obligation to him. In its critical part it shows extensive acquaintance with the most modern authorities on the subject, as well as with those that are more ancient; but it is in the expository part that Mr. Fausset's chief qualifications as an interpreter appear; for what most expositors lack—spirituality of mind and grasp of Gospel truth—in him is abundantly supplied. The Book of Judges abounds with lessons which are of the utmost profit to the Christian if brought home by one competent to interpret spiritual truth. In this Mr. Fausset excels, and in consequence his work is one that may be thoroughly commended.

The R.T.S. Library.—Following in the wake of other enterprising publishers, the Religious Tract Society are issuing cheap reprints of some of their best-known books. They are, it need hardly be said, marvels of popular literature, both in quality and in price. Among the latest issues of the new series are the following: Adventures in Mongolia, by Rev. James Gilmour, is a wonderful book about a wonderful yet little-known people, and reads like a romance. Wit and Wisdom of Thomas Fuller, with a brief biography. The selections here made ought to live in thousands of hearts and homes. The quaint divine was not afraid to speak his mind. The Life of Latimer, by the late Rev. R. Demaus, is condensed from the larger work. Protestants generally know too little of the fathers of their faith, and this is hardly to be wondered at, since the cost of the larger biographies has placed them beyond the reach of thousands. The Religious Tract Society is determined to do away with this barrier, and all may know the story of the gentle, heroic Latimer for a few pence. Olive's Story, by Mrs. O. F. Walton, is a sweet, simple narrative, full of that teaching which, written in her own way, the author of "Christie's Old Organ" so beautifully illustrates. All the volumes are illustrated, and the price is 3d. paper covers, 6d. cloth.

The English Church in other Lands; or, The Spiritual Expansion of England. By Rev. H. W. Tucker, Prebendary of St. Paul's. 2s. 6d. Longmans. The sub-title of this little book is significant, and shows what, in the author's opinion, is the climax of English missions. The whole field of missions is reviewed, and that with no small ability. The labours of American, German, and Nonconformist missionaries are honestly recorded. The chapters on Colonial Church Government are particularly interesting. But on two points we cannot agree with the writer. He holds, first, that the Church in India will only be increased by the multiplication of Bishops, and the subordination of all missionaries to their authority. Secondly, he infers from current events that "the centre of gravity at Christendom may at no distant date be found neither at Rome nor Constantinople, but at Canterbury." We firmly hold that, in order to extend and consolidate the Church of Christ—a nobler object than the addition of members to any visible Church—the sole requirement is a number of spiritual men preaching and living the Gospel. As to the centre of Christendom, we know that whatever prominence this or that Gentile Church may temporarily enjoy, Zion is God's appointed source of pure religion to which all nations are to flow, and from which truth and light are to permeate the nations.

From Messrs. Partridge & Co.:—The Trust Life, by E. G. Thistleton, offers clear earnest words on a transcendent theme. Christian Peace, by Rev. Robt. Munro, is simply written, and just the word to send to those who are in doubt, danger, or difficulty of soul. Blind Elsie's Question is a very important one, and one that every faithful disciple should ask. Make Haste! By Rev. Horatius Bonar, is a forcible, solemn, searching appeal, which should be scattered broadcast. "Can You Undo?" By Rev. A. Averell Ramsey, is a solemn question from a deathbed; somewhat stern and alarming in tone. All these booklets are 6d per dozen. Nos xi, 21, and 22 of Floral Letters are, like all in the series, most excellent; may the hand that pens them continue to bless, in this way, thousands of thirsty and weary souls. Wave Whispers. By Wm. Luff. 6d. per 100 copies. Mr. Luff is a true singer, and these wave-whispers are true songs. They are suitable for enclosing in letters.

WESLEYAN MISSIONS IN AFRICA.

AN OPEN DOOR.

A Christian teacher has been sent to a native town near Potchefstroom, the headman of which promised that if such a one was provided they would fetch him in a waggon, build him a house and church, and even support him! No missionary, it seems, has ever laboured on the Lower Niger, the climate of which has been reported to be deadly and the people savages. Yet the captain of a river steamer told Rev. Bryan Roe (of Lagos, Upper Niger) that in every trip he has taken during the past two years he has had his boat boarded at a certain place, Ahgberi, by natives making the invariable inquiry, "Is God palaver man aboard?" or, "When is he coming? If he come to teach us so that we 'sabe' (know) white man's book, then we build him house and school, and give him chop—plenty."

Alas! Mr. Roe, unable, for want of helpers, to go or send, also hears that the Roman Catholics, having intelligence of this open door, are prepared to enter at once!

CHRISTIAN INSTRUCTION SOCIETY.—Under the will of the late Mr. Richard Durant, the Christian Instruction Society becomes benefited to the amount of two thousand pounds.

THE AZORES.—Dear Sir,—Those of your readers who prayed for the young brother who was arrested for preaching in these Islands will, I am sure, be glad to join us in praising the Lord for delivering him out of the hands of his enemies. He has been tried, and has been acquitted. Thank God. "Then had the churches rest . . . and walking in the fear of the Lord and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost, were multiplied.' May it be so now.—Faithfully yours,

St. Miguel, Azores, May 28. H. Maxwell Weight.

LANCASTER has had the privilege of a visit from Mr. J. B. Wookey, of the Gospel Purity Association. On Sunday week he occupied the Wesleyan Chapel pulpit. In the evening he preached in the Congregational Chapel, High-street, with wonderful effect, many souls being led to Christ. In the afternoon he addressed a large gathering on Gospel Temperance, and on Monday night we had a splendid time, when he addressed a meeting for men only, on "Personal and Public Morality," in our largest hall, the platform being occupied by many of the ministers and leading men of our town. A resolution was unanimously carried, resolving that a vigilance committee be formed.

YOUNG EMIGRANTS.—On Friday last 198 boys from Dr. Barnardo's Homes, who sailed for Canada on Tuesday, met at the Noon Prayer-meeting, Aldersgate-street, to say "Good-bye" to the Christians there. Rev. W. Tyler, of Mile-end, commended the boys to God, and prayed that they might have a safe and prosperous voyage. Dr. Barnardo read a letter from one of the boys in Canada, who was present at the farewell meeting on March 25, saying that the text, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path," spoken of by one of the friends there, had been a great blessing to him ever since he had been in Canada. Out of the 198 now going out, 121 had been taken off the streets, and ninety-two of them were without either father or mother. Mr. W. Hind Smith prayed that great blessing might rest on the lads, after which Mr. R. Paton spoke a few words of advice to them, and again commended them to God in prayer.

YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—Sunday week being the exact anniversary of the foundation of the first Y.M.C.A., forty-two years ago, a very interesting service was held in the afternoon at the Aldersgate-street branch, which was crowded with friends, many of whom could remember the day when the Society was instituted. Mr. George Williams, the president and founder, rejoiced that the little one had so grown that now there were no less than 3200 branches all over the world. If each association only benefited four young men yearly—which surely was a low calculation—then 12,800 men were annually sent forth to do work for their Master. He could but rejoice on looking back, and felt constrained to say, "What hath God wrought?" Several addresses were delivered by those who had received help from the institution, and the happy meeting closed with the Benediction. Mr. Burn (the secretary) then invited the young men present to tea, which was served in another room.

SUNDAY, JUNE 20.—I SAMUEL XII.

1.—And Samuel said unto all Israel.—The address of Samuel to Israel, which occupies this chapter, was evidently spoken on the occasion of the "renewing" of the kingdom at Gilgal after Saul's victory over the Ammonites. The circumstances might seem to call for self-gratulation and triumph on the part of Israel, but Samuel takes occasion to expose their wickedness in asking for a king, and brings the people to confess this (ver. 19), and then promises them the Lord's presence and blessing, if only they and their king will walk in his ways.

11.—Bedan.—"No such name occurs among the Judges who delivered Israel, but in Hebrew Barak is almost identical in the form of letters with Bedan, and the LXX., Syriac, and Arabic read Barak. Moreover, in Heb. xi. 32, Gideon, Barak, Sampson, and Jephthah are named together; so that there can be little doubt that Barak is the true reading."—Sp. Com.

19.—We have added unto all our sins this evil, to ask us a king.—It seems very strange that such a confession of sin should be drawn from Israel at the very time that they were met to "renew the kingdom," so lately commended to them by Saul's brilliant victory over Nahash. But the confession of the past sin seems to have been the only condition on which God could use the king for good, if he and the people remained faithful. Mark that the step once taken, though evil in its origin, was not reversed nor abandoned, but overruled for good. So is it with many things in the history of the Christian Church.

22.—The Lord will not forsake his people for his great name's sake.—A principle of no less value to the Church of God than to Israel: indeed of much more value, as it is fulfilled to believers individually, while to Israel nationally.

MONDAY, JUNE 21.—I SAMUEL XIII.

9.—And he offered the burnt offering.—"There is a difference of opinion among commentators whether Saul offered the sacrifices with his own hand, thus entrenching upon the priest's office; or whether he ordered the priests to sacrifice, as Solomon did (see 1 Kings iii. 4—15). In this last case his sin consisted in disobeying the word of God in the mouth of the prophet Samuel, which had bid him wait till Samuel came. The latter is on the whole most probable, since Samuel's rebuke says nothing about any assumption of priesthood such as we read in the case of Uzziah (2 Chron. xxvi. 18)."—Sp. Com. "'He offered the burnt offering' does not imply that Saul offered the sacrifice with his own hand, i.e., that he performed the priestly function upon this occasion. The co-operation of the priests in performing the duties belonging to them on such an occasion is taken for granted, just as in the case of the sacrifices offered by David and Solomon (2 Sam. xxiv. 25, &c.)."—Keil. "If he had had confidence in God he would have understood that, whatever might be the result, he should wait for Him; that it was useless to do anything without Him, and that he ran no risk in waiting for Him. A faithful God could not fail him. He had thought of Samuel, so that he was without excuse; he remembered that the guidance and blessing of God were found with the prophet. But he looks at circumstances; the people are scattered, and Saul seeks to bring God in by an act of devotion without faith."—J. N. D.

13.—Thou hast not kept the commandment of the Lord thy God.—Commentators differ as to whether the commandment here referred to is that given in x. 8, where Samuel says, "Seven days shalt thou tarry till I come to thee, and show thee what thou shalt do." Keil, who urges strongly that this is the commandment which Saul violated, says, "Saul was not at liberty to enter upon the war against these foes simply by his own will, but was directed to wait till Samuel, the prophet of Jehovah, had communicated to him the requisite instructions from God." The contrast of Saul's conduct to that of the Lord Jesus is perhaps the best commentary on its evil character (see John v. 19): "The Son can do nothing of Himself, but what He seeth the Father do."

TUESDAY, JUNE 22.—I SAMUEL XIV.

1.—But he told not his father.—Jonathan's brilliant exploit, with his armour-bearer, recorded in the early part of this chapter, was a signal instance of faith. No wonder, therefore, that he felt that his father, who was not a man of faith, would have no sympathy with him, and might have hindered him, and therefore he told him not.

18.—Bring hither the ark of God.—The LXX. and Josephus read "the Ephod" instead of "the ark" and most commentators regard this as the correct reading, as the Ephod was the ordinary means of consulting God, and it seems highly unlikely that the ark of God could have been in the camp. Saul, however, would not wait for the answer, but made up his own mind what to do on hearing the noise in the Philistines' camp. Compare Pilate's question "What is truth?" (John xviii. 38), for the answer to which he would not wait.

24.—That I may be avenged on mine enemies.—The victory had been gained by the faith of Jonathan, but now that the victory is gained, Saul has no objection to share the triumph and pursue the Philistines. He calls them "his" enemies, and shows a self-willed, selfish zeal in cursing any who should taste food that day, which hindered rather than helped the pursuit (ver. 30) and brought his own son—the real hero of the day—near to death, from which, however, the Lord, through the people, delivered him. A spiritually-minded writer comments on this: "May God preserve us from the guidance and help of unbelief in the work of faith. God Himself can succour us through every means; but when man mixes himself up with the work, he does but spoil it, even when seeking to bring in strength."

31.—And the people were very faint; and the people flew upon the spoil . . . and the people did eat them with the blood.—Another effect of Saul's rash curse, which not only hindered the people through faintness from following up Jonathan's victory, but rendered them so voracious that they were betrayed into the sin of eating blood (Lev. xvii. 10—14).

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 23.—I SAMUEL XV.

2.—I remember that which Amalek did to Israel.—The solemn curse pronounced upon Amalek (Exod. xvii. 14) is now about to be fulfilled. Though 400 years had passed, God's threatened judgment only lay dormant, and was now probably provoked by some special iniquity (see ver. 18, where they are called "the sinners the Amalekites"). As they had treated Israel ("He smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind thee, when thou wast faint and weary" (Deut. xxv. 18), so were they now to be treated themselves. Delay in the execution of God's threatened judgment shows forbearance on his part, but not forgetfulness. Rome, the first great persecutor of God's people in its pagan days, has continued to be their greatest persecutor under the guise of Christianity, but a day is at hand when it shall be said: "God hath remembered her iniquities; reward her even as she rewarded you" (Rev. xviii. 5, 6).

9.—But Saul and the people spared Agag and the best of the sheep, &c.—Forgetting they were only the instruments in God's hand of carrying out his purposes of judgment. Saul, who was anointed a king to rule, allowed himself to be ruled. "I feared the people, and obeyed their voice" (ver. 24).

11.—It repenteth Me that I have made Saul king.—"That this does not express any changeableness in the Divine nature, but simply the sorrow of the Divine love at the rebellion of sinners, is evident from ver. 29, 'The Strength of Israel will not lie nor repent: for He is not a man, that He should repent.'"—Keil.

23.—Rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry.—"All conscious disobedience is actually idolatry, because it makes selfwill, the human I, into a god."—Keil.

30.—I have sinned; yet honour me now, I pray thee, before the elders of my people, and before Israel.—There is here confession of sin, but no true conviction of sin, or he would not be so anxious about being honoured before the people. What a contrast to David's confession (Ps. li. 4), "Against Thee only have I sinned, &c., . . . that Thou mightest be justified." He sought not that he himself, but that God might be honoured. Saul thinks only of self.

THURSDAY, JUNE 24.—I SAMUEL XVI.

"Although the rejection of Saul on the part of God, which was announced to him by Samuel, was not followed by immediate deposition, but Saul remained king until his death, the consequences of his rejection were very speedily brought to light. Whilst Samuel, by the command of God, was secretly anointing David, the youngest son of Jesse, at Bethlehem as king, the Spirit of Jehovah departed from Saul, and an evil spirit began to terrify him, so that he fell into melancholy."—Keil.

6.—Surely the Lord's anointed is before him.—These words, taken in connection with what follows, show very plainly the difference between Samuel's judgment and that of the Lord.

14.—An evil spirit from the Lord troubled him.—"The spirit of evil here spoken of was the Spirit of (or from) the Lord, as being God's messenger and minister sent by Him to execute his righteous purpose upon Saul (see 1 Kings xxii. 19—22)."—Sp. Com.

16.—He shall play with his hand, and thou shalt be well.—"Bochart has collected many passages from profane writers, which speak of the medicinal effects of music on the mind and body, especially as appeasing anger, and soothing and pacifying a troubled spirit."—Ibid.

21.—(Saul) loved him greatly; and he became his armour-bearer.—"It seems impossible that Saul should forget David, and not know him by sight, as appears to have been the case from xvii. 55, 58, after he had been for a length of time under his immediate notice, and an object of his special favour. These words, therefore, though placed here by the narrator to pursue his theme to its ultimate consequences, did not really come to pass till after David's victory over Goliath."—Ibid.

FRIDAY, JUNE 25.—I SAMUEL XVII.

David's combat with Goliath, which forms the subject of this chapter, brings out in striking relief the character of David as "a man after (God's) own heart" (1 Sam. xiii. 14), as he was spoken of about eight years before his birth (compare 1 Sam. xiii. 1 with Acts xiii. 21, and 2 Sam. v. 4) by Him "known unto whom are all his works from the beginning." Implicit trust in God and zeal for his glory form the leading features of this character. The object he set before him was not his own self-exaltation, but the glory of God, "that all the earth may know that there is a God in Israel."

36.—Thy servant slew both the lion and the bear.—Those whom the Lord uses in public, He first tests in private. It was in the homely discharge of his every-day duty as a shepherd, when probably no eye saw him, that he learned that he could trust in the Lord to give him the victory over the lion and the bear, and so, when confronted with the giant of Gath, he could calmly say, "this uncircumcised Philistine shall be as one of them."

39.—For he had not proved it.—"It should be 'them,' viz., the clothes and arms above mentioned."—Sp. Com.

51.—And took his sword . . . and slew him.—This use of Goliath's own sword to slay him presents a striking type of that great victory in which the Son of David "through death destroyed him that had the power of death, that is the devil" (Heb. ii. 14).

54.—And David took the head of the Philistine, and brought it to Jerusalem.—"There is no anachronism here, for the assertion made by some that Jerusalem was not yet in the possession of the Israelites rests upon a confusion between the citadel of Jebus upon Zion, which was still in the hands of the Jebusites, and the city of Jerusalem, in which Israelites had dwelt for a long time."—Keil.

SATURDAY, JUNE 26.—I SAMUEL XVIII.

1.—Jonathan loved him as his own soul.—There was a true bond of union between David and Jonathan, as both of them had "like precious faith." Jonathan's feat of faith with the garrison of the Philistines (xiv. 6) closely resembles that of David in his combat with Goliath.

8.—What can he have more, but the kingdom?—"In this foreboding utterance of Saul there was involved not only a conjecture, which the result confirmed, but a deep inward truth. If the king of Israel stood powerless before the subjugators of his kingdom at so decisive a period as this, and a shepherd boy decided the victory, this was an additional mark of his rejection."—Von Gerlach.

17—Let not mine hand be upon him, but let the hand of the Philistines be upon him.—This was Saul's inward thought when urging David to "fight the Lord's battles." Under an expression of piety he concealed an indirect aim of murder. It is sad to think that David himself, in after days, should fall so low as this (2 Sam. xi. 15), in his treatment of Uriah the Hittite.

28.—And Saul saw and knew that the Lord was with David.—"When the failure of his new plan for devoting David to certain death had forced the conviction upon him that Jehovah was with David, and that he was miraculously protected by Him; and when, in addition to this, there was the love of his daughter Michal to David; his fear of David grew into a lifelong enmity."—Keil.

THE BRIDEGROOM'S VOICE.

"ARISE, my love, my fair one, come away!"
My well-belovèd, 'tis thy melting voice!
I scarce believe for wonder, yet rejoice,
And, drawn by all-constraining love, obey.
The world's vain charms no longer tempt my stay;
Espoused to Thee, blood-ransomed and forgiven,
Earth's pleasures pall, I taste the bliss of heaven,
And antedate the glorious nuptial day.
My King of grace, how fragrant is thy name!
Beloved of Thee, I cannot choose but love;
And gladly yielding to thy tender claim,
Would haste to perfect fellowship above;
Happy if so my upward path might be
A light to lure some wandering ones to Thee.

DUBLIN.—Some very interesting meetings have been held at Merrion Hall by the English friends attending the Believers' Meetings, and reported in our last issue. Mr. Henry Varley addressed a Gospel meeting the evening after the Conference, when a number professed to give their hearts to God. On Sunday week Dr. Barnardo spoke to two crowded gatherings morning and evening, and in the afternoon Miss Macpherson riveted the earnest attention of a large assembly.

EVANGELICAL MISSION AT SPA.—The annual gathering of the six churches in the province of Liége, connected with the Belgian Free Church, took place there on Ascension Day, June 3, and was a very joyful and hopeful occasion. Mons. Nicolet writes to me:—"I think we had more than 300 persons present at each service. We all felt that the presence of the Lord was manifestly in the midst of us." The parsonage house at Spa is now very nearly completed, and I hope that M. Nicolet will be able to take possession of it speedily.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Friday, June 11, 1886.

⁂ In consequence of Whitsuntide Holidays, our Donation List is made up a day earlier. Amounts received after Friday morning will appear in next week's issue.

⁂ Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

⁂ Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

NECESSITOUS GENTLEWOMEN.—A correspondent draws attention to Miss Emily Faithfull's work of assisting necessitous gentlewomen Many of these ladies are quite destitute. The distress this year is greater than usual, owing no doubt to the exceptionally hard winter Miss Faithfull's address is The Institute, 126, Regent-street, W.

PREVENTIVE WORK, TORQUAY.—Three hundred pounds are urgently needed to complete the purchase of a larger Girls' Home, the present rooms being far too small. About £500 has been subscribed in Torquay, but the price of the necessary house is £800. Classes for Bible study, cookery, cutting-out and making clothes are held Seven beds are always over-full of destitute, homeless girls and children Help thankfully received, and report sent, by Mrs. Richmond, Floriston, Torquay.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

Amongst the gratifying results of Missionary Work in the Metropolis and Country Towns is the rescue of large numbers of Friendless Girls from immoral surroundings. From January 1st of this year to the 31st ult., FIVE HUNDRED AND FORTY-EIGHT have been brought to the Office, representing all classes and conditions of the Friendless and Fallen; and of these a considerable proportion were quite young girls—fatherless, motherless, or even worse; and to extend the Christian hand to these is indeed a solemn obligation resting on those who profess to be the followers of Him who laid down his life in order that He might save to the uttermost.

Parson's Green Homes.

About ten years ago the Committee of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution secured, by purchase, the freehold of the property as it then stood. Within eighteen months one Home was rebuilt to accommodate thirty inmates. Subsequently, another part of the property was adapted for thirty more—specially young girls. Now the work of extension is being carried on by the rebuilding of the remainder—which will make accommodation for eighty inmates at this Branch of the Institution.

This extension will involve an outlay of about £1,550, and the freewill offerings of the Lord's people in aid of the above are most earnestly solicited.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Annual Meeting will be held in the Gardens in the rear of the Parson's Green Homes, on Saturday, the 19th instant.

SIR ROBERT N. FOWLER, BART., M.P.,

will preside at 3 o'clock, supported by Frank A. Bevan, Esq., and the Revs. J. L. Forster, F. A. C. Lillingston, W. H. J. Page, John Shaw, J. S. Sinclair, and H. W. Webb-Peploe.

At the close of the Annual Meeting

MRS. FRANK A. BEVAN

will lay a Memorial Stone to commemorate the further extension of the Preventive Homes.

Tea will be provided in a Marquee. Tickets of admission not necessary.

The PARSON'S GREEN STATION on the District Railway is within three minutes walk of the Homes, and friends may book to that point from almost any part of the Metropolis.

Donations, either for the proposed extension, or the maintenance of the Homes in general, will be received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.; The Bankers, Lloyds, Barnetts, and Bosanquets, 60, Lombard-street, E.C., and 54, St. James's-street, S.W.; Francis Nicholls, Esq. (of the Committee), 14, Old Jewry-chambers, E.C.; and

EDWARD W. THOMAS, Sec.

Offices: 200, Euston-road, London, N.W.

⁂ Second Edition, "Twenty-five Years' Labours among the Friendless and Fallen," by Edward W. Thomas, is now ready. Price 2s. 6d. JOHN SHAW & Co., 48, Paternoster Row, E.C. Profits to be devoted to the Support of the Homes.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SCRIPTURE READERS' ASSOCIATION.

INSTITUTED 1844.

THIS Society is employing nearly 130 earnest, faithful, and experienced Readers—most of them in the poorest localities in the Metropolis—who visit from house to house and room to room, bringing the Word of God to the poor, the sick, the erring, and the outcast; they also help generally in the spiritual work of their respective parishes.

Unless speedy help is received several grants must be withdrawn for want of funds.

PASTOR BLUMHARDT AND HIS WORK.

A descriptive account of the remarkable work of Faith Healing carried on first at Möttlingen and subsequently at Bad Boll. By Rev. W. Guest. With Introduction by Rev. C. H. Blumhardt. With Portrait.

"I have come to think of Boll, since visiting it, as in many ways one of the most interesting places in Europe—interesting not only for its natural loveliness, its past history, its warm fellowships, and cherished memories, but for its noble testimony to Christian faith, and for the problems in the deepest things of Life and Truth which it leaves for after years to solve; and certainly no holiday could be better spent than with the little Colony of God's people, who are always to be found gathered round the old Pastor, whose life work all these years has been this beautiful and mysterious ministry of Prayer.

"The good Pastor himself, alas! since these words were first transcribed from my note-book, has been taken to his rest. He was a remarkable man, and leaves a work behind him too remarkable to cease. And though the visitor now will miss the characteristic figure, he will find there the same spirit and faith."

The Man who Spoiled the Music.

By REV. MARK GUY PEARSE.

ARRANGED AS A

MUSICALLY ILLUSTRATED SERVICE. By FREDERICK BRETT.

WITH BOTH OLD NOTATION AND TONIC SOL-FA IN ONE BOOK.

There are many persons who are acquainted with Rev. Mark Guy Pearse's quaint and striking tract of "The Man who Spoiled the Music." By the Author's kind permission the story has now been produced as in which form it is expected to prove both acceptable and profitable. It is hoped that many who—like "Jack," of whom this story speaks—have been too long accustomed to spoil the music in their own hearts and their own homes, and to spoil the music also in the lives of others, may experience the same change of thought, feeling, and purpose through which "Jack" passed; and then, like him, having learned the New Song, set themselves to work to bring back both music and sunshine into the hearts and lives of all around.

The WORDS of the Hymns of this SERVICE OF SONG may be had SEPARATELY on a Sheet,
PRICE ONE PENNY.
Fifty Copies of either Music or Words will be supplied direct from the Publishers at half-price.

JAMES SCOTT: A LABOURER FOR GOD.

By Rev. ANDREW A. BONAR, D.D., Author of "Memoir of R. M. M'Cheyne," &c., &c.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

"When Mr. Moody became acquainted with him, and observed his zeal and tact, it struck him that he had found one who might do important service. . . . And the Lord fitted the labourer for his field of labour."—Pages 35, 36.

"The sketch of the life of JAMES SCOTT, by the Rev. ANDREW BONAR, D.D., is interesting and full of pathetic beauty. Mr. Scott seems to have been a man of intense Christian enthusiasm. His life work, so early closed, began when other young men have scarcely realised responsibility, and was carried on with eager earnestness through the recent wonderful period of religious revival in Scotland. Side by side with Mr. Moody, Mr. Scott laboured till strength broke down and consumption closed the active, useful life at the age of thirty-eight. A helpful book for Christian workers."—Christian World.

CANON AND MRS. JOSEPHINE E. BUTLER.

GOD has done a great work through the instrumentality of Mrs. Josephine E. Butler. That work has been great in its area as well as in its importance. Its magnitude will be attested by the assemblies in London during next week of the fourth Triennial International Congress of the British, Continental, and General Federation for the abolition of Government complicity with vice.

That large and far-reaching organisation had its inception twelve years ago to-morrow (June 25). On that day Mrs. Butler met a few friends in conference at York. It was there decided to carry to the Continent of Europe the war against legalised vice. The story of Mrs. Butler's personal mission to the Continent the following winter is like a chapter of the Acts of the Apostles. She went from city to city, the Lord working with her, and confirming the word with signs following. Pastors, statesmen, and others, who had settled down into practical acquiescence with that doctrine of despair—the necessity of vice—and with its consequent official "covenant with death" and "agreement with hell," were touched in their hearts by the Spirit of God, and energised into faith and activity, resulting not only in the Federation whose fourth Triennial Congress opens in London next Monday, but also in the International Union of the Friends of Young Girls, and in many works of succour and rescue.

(From Photographs by Messrs. Elliott & Fry.)

Of Mrs. Butler's part in the "New Abolitionist" movement in this kingdom it is impossible for us to speak in detail. So far as the limits of our own country are concerned, the conflict against the legalisation of iniquity has happily ended in victory. It is well known that in that conflict Mrs. Butler was the foremost among those of whom the late sainted Dr. Thomas Guthrie said: "Since the days when the women of Jerusalem stood by their Lord when all men had forsaken Him and fled, women have never crowned themselves with such honour as the women of this country have done in working for the repeal of these Acts, despite the frown of the world."

We hope some competent historian will arise to tell the complete story of the revolt led by Mrs. Butler and a few like-minded self-sacrificing spirits against the infamous legislation which stained our statute books for seventeen weary years, but which is now, happily, nothing but a black and dismal memory. A short narrative of Mrs. Butler's share in the New Crusade, written by the powerful pen of Mr. W. T. Stead, is about to be given to the public; from the early proof sheets of that thrilling narrative we are permitted to make one or two extracts. It lightly touches upon the remarkable spiritual experiences of Mrs. Butler in early life. One of the strangely mysterious dispensations of Providence that come to many of earth's choicest spirits came to her in the sudden and accidental death of her young and only daughter, Evangeline:—

One day, when Mrs. Butler was revolving bitter and unavailing regrets in the solitude of her heart, in the midst of her silent home, the burden became unbearable. She rose and went out, haunted by visions of what might have been if Evangeline had not died, and sought refuge at the house of an aged and saintly Quakeress. Sitting at her feet, Mrs. Butler poured out the desolation of her soul. She listened patiently to the passionate wail of the broken heart, and then, laying her pale, thin hand on Mrs. Butler's bowed head, said, "God hath taken to Himself her whom thou lovedst, but there are many forlorn young hearts who need that mother's love flowing from thine. Go to —— Street, No. ——, and knock." Mrs. Butler obeyed. She found the house, knocked, and the door was opened to her. It was a refuge where the Quaker lady had sheltered forty lost girls—she had become too infirm to visit them. Mrs. Butler took up the work, and from that day, in ever-increasing and extending fields, she laboured for the "forlorn young hearts" who need a mother's love.

Light had broken in upon the darkness, and a great and burning love and compassion for the lost daughters of other mothers entered into the wounded heart of the bereaved mother, and Mrs. Butler's destiny was fixed. She went out and began her ministry. When she went her rounds, and visited the hospitals, or pierced the lowest haunts of vice, she found she had the secret of the power of suffering. She was able to succeed in touching the hearts and winning the confidence of the most hardened of her sex. She conquered because she loved; and she loved because she had suffered. Mouths that were full of blasphemies and filthy speech she stopped with a kiss. No woman was too degraded or too foul but she could press to her heart in sincere affection. When the poor outcasts sought to escape she opened a little refuge in her own house, where they had food and shelter and home. This work went on for many years; nor has it ceased even to this day.

It was thus that Mrs. Butler entered on the life-work which has placed her high on the muster-roll of those noble men and women who have been, as St. Peter says, partakers of the sufferings of Christ, and have become, in their measure, the saviours of their race. When the true nature of the Acts of 1869 became apparent, she bravely stepped into the breach, and was, as we have already said, a foremost public champion of the cause of outraged womanhood and national morality. This was done at a sacrifice of womanly feeling which no one but herself can know, but she shrank not from the ordeal, and now, by the goodness of God, she enjoys a foretaste of what will be her eternal reward.

Mrs. Butler is the wife of the Rev. George Butler, D.D., for many years the Principal of Liverpool College, and now a Canon of Winchester. He succeeded to the canonry vacated by Rev. Ernest R. Wilberforce, on his elevation to the Bishopric of Newcastle. Canon Butler belongs to a family that has distinguished itself in the Church. The Dean of Gloucester, chairman of the Church of England Purity Society, and formerly the widely-known Head-Master of Harrow, is a brother of Canon Butler. Canon Butler's thorough sympathy with his wife in her Social Purity Work has necessarily been a great help to her in many difficult undertakings. On this point we may fittingly quote another paragraph from Mr. Stead's forthcoming pamphlet:—

> Among other prominent qualifications Mrs. Butler possessed one outside herself, without which she could have done nothing. That was a home of perfect peace, centring round one of the purest and noblest of men. Quiet, unobtrusive, industrious, faithful, patient, a loyal friend and devoted husband, he was great enough in soul to rejoice in the surrender of his wife to her painful mission, and warm enough in heart to sustain her with unfailing love and trust when all the world was abusing her and deriding him. It was no light sacrifice. To see his wife overwhelmed with abuse by the basest of men, to find the doors of his friends closed in her face, to suffer personally and in worldly possession for the prejudice excited against her—all this he bore not merely uncomplainingly, but with an unshaken confidence and peacefulness very beautiful to behold. Had it been otherwise she could not even have begun her work, or if she had begun it, it would speedily have ended. Had he fretted or grieved she would have broken down. He was to her as the invisible angel, who kept feeding with oil the flame which all the deluge of the enemy could not quench.

God be thanked that He gave her such a husband, and inspired him with that high-minded chivalry, the lack of which, in the male species generally, has caused so many women to drink deeply of the bitter fruit of the primeval curse. We believe it is not generally known that Canon Butler was the first man who had the courage to advocate the New Crusade in a public assembly of his fellow Churchmen. At the Church Congress in Nottingham in 1871 he read, or attempted to read, a carefully and discreetly written paper on "The Moral Duty of the Church in reference to Social Questions." Public opinion was not then so enlightened on this painful topic as it is now; the Canon had scarcely begun to read when he was literally howled down in that assemblage of professed Christians, and he was ultimately obliged to desist. He however published his paper, and some of the sentences in his preface are well worth quoting in the light of what has since happened:—

> God forbid that we should arrive at such a state as that which the Roman historian describes, when we can neither tolerate our vices nor their remedies. It is our want of courage as men, that has caused women to step forward and do the work which we should have done. A single voice in the Church Congress has been heard, though not fully. Others will follow, and the repeal of the Acts must soon take place. But then the battle will only be commencing; positive action must be organised to check positive evil, and the efforts of all will be required to heal the festering wound under which society has long groaned. Then will be wanted all the self-sacrifice, all the love, and all the wisdom that the nation can produce; and, above all, the aid of Him who said to the poor sinner, "Go, and sin no more."

The life of Mrs. Butler's worthy father she has recorded in an interesting volume, "The Memoir of John Grey, of Dilston." He was a man of mark in Northumberland, possessed of a sturdy North-country spirit, which he appears to have liberally bequeathed to his daughter. Mrs. Butler's literary works, besides the life of her father, have been numerous. Among them are a life of Jean Frederic Oberlin, written amid the scene of his labours, and published by the Religious Tract Society; "Catharine of Siena: a Biography," a six-shilling volume, published by Messrs. Dyer Brothers; and "The Salvation Army in Switzerland," issued by the same firm. "Catharine of Siena" is a remarkable work, which has already gone through several editions.

Both Canon and Mrs. Butler have recently suffered considerably in health. Indeed, we learn with deep sorrow, as this sketch is being compiled, that Canon Butler is lying dangerously ill of rheumatic fever, and his wife is an anxious watcher by his sick bed. Mrs. Butler hoped to take an active part in the forthcoming Congress, and we trust the recovery of her husband may yet enable her to do so. We are sure that no prayers will be more fervent than those of readers of The Christian that God will give them many years more of strength to work for Him, with all the attendant blessings of consecrated service.

THE BELLEVILLE MISSION, PARIS.

A drawing-room meeting was held last Friday at 2, Hyde Park-gardens, in connection with Miss De Broen's Mission at Belleville, Paris. Mr. F. A. Bevan, who presided, said it was quite impossible to obtain sufficient means for the support of the mission in France alone; they were therefore compelled to look to English and Scotch friends for a supplement. He had personally observed the work, and could speak of it in the highest terms.

Mr. Hoste, who is a co-worker with Miss De Broen, said the need of the work done at Belleville was becoming more than ever apparent. A distinguished Frenchman recently remarked, "If ever the people of France are to be converted it will have to be through missions such as these; the people will not go into Protestant churches, but they can be got to mission halls." The staff comprises fifteen salaried workers, engaged in speaking, visiting, dispensing, &c., and many persons are converted to God. He had just heard of five fresh cases.

Rev. Baron Hart was requested to bear a testimony to the value of the work, and heartily did so, pleading for encouragement and support on the ground, among others, of its truly spiritual character.

Miss de Broen, who, though looking remarkably well, said she was intensely weary, never having had a complete rest for fifteen years, reviewed the work from its commencement, and showed the difficulty of compassing the needs of the great city of Paris; they added 8000 new houses every year to the number of those visited. A second doctor was sadly wanted, also larger rooms for the 180 patients who crowd the dispensary; many of these have to be sent away, while others come early and wait two hours to secure aid. The women's sewing-class alone was attended by 400 women, and cost £8 per week for wages, beside the cost of material. Tracts were circulated to the number of 30,000 yearly; one of these, given to a medical man, was the means of his conversion. No one knows, said Miss Broen, what it is to be in the forefront of Christian work in Paris. Encouragements, however, are frequently forthcoming. One said, "This is just what I have been searching for all my life." A convert was found to be in the habit of writing letters to unsaved persons in her spare moments. Among the orphans, too, a good work goes on, many of them having been brought to Christ. "The Story of her Mission," published by Messrs. Shaw, has been reduced from 2s. 6d. to 1s., and friends could help the work by purchasing copies to give away.

Miss de Broen announced a meeting to be held in the lecture hall of Dr. Edmond's church, Grosvenor-road, Highbury, on Thursday (this day), at 3 p.m., when she and others will give accounts of the work of the Mission. We may add that an interesting Mission Letter is published monthly by Miss de Broen; copies may be had gratis from Miss M. L. Douglas, 1, Rosebery-crescent, Edinburgh.

THERE IS NO MODERN DEVIL more pernicious and more terrific than the devil of impure literature.—Rev. William Cuff.

THE RIVER OF TEARS.

> "I am sure God doesn't care a bit for the girls. . . . God lets off the bad rich men so easily, and doesn't care for us girls a bit. We have waited so long—so long."
> —Spoken by a poor outcast to Mrs. Josephine Butler.

There are thousands and thousands that creep
  Through the by-ways and alleys of life;
There are thousands and thousands that weep,
  Trodden down in the stress of the strife;
There are women who children are yet,
  In the midst of the masking and sham,
Whom the world has conspired to forget,
  And the law to dishonour and damn.
By the River of Tears they are sad,
  And they sob, as it hurries and whirls:
"God is good to the rich and the bad,
  But He cares not a bit for the girls!"

There are captives in fetters who stare
  Through the bars of the dungeon of woe,
Who in pain and in penury fare,
  As if each were accurst and a foe;
There are captives who hopelessly beat
  On the walls that to shame shut them in—
Who were dupes of the coward and cheat,
  Though they bear all the sorrow of sin;
Oh, hark at the cry of their wrong,
  As the current to misery swirls:
"We have waited and waited so long,
  But God cares not a bit for the girls!"

There are sufferers basely kept down
  In a bondage far worse than the grave,
By false virtue's superior frown,
  By the hands that were fashioned to save:
They are helpless and troubled and weak;
  In the cold and the shadow they lie;
No one answers or heeds if they speak,
  They can only fall lower and die.
Their own shrouds with their fingers they stitch,
  As they wail through the storm-cloud that curls:
"God is good to the vile who are rich,
  But He cares not a bit for the girls!"

There are sisters with hearts like our own,
  Whom the Pharisees hate and despise,
Into corners of infamy thrown,
  Who are fallen and fain would arise.
They have purposes noble and fair,
  And they long once again to be free;
But they sicken and droop with despair
  When their brothers forsake them and flee.
They were caught by the glittering bait,
  And they moan, ere the thunderbolt hurls:
"We have waited so long, and still wait,
  But God cares not a bit for the girls!"

There are daughters who pine for the arms
  That should shelter and comfort and bless,
Tost about on the surges of harms,
  When they want but a mother's caress;
They are tender and yet would be true,
  If some hand for their rescue were seen,
If the skies gave a promise of blue,
  And the earth showed a glimmer of green;
And they mourn for the brightness they had,
  When the sunshine abode in their curls:
"God is good to the rich and the bad,
  But He cares not a bit for the girls.

There are souls to be saved or be lost,
  That go wandering alone in the night,
Under scathing of scorn and its frost,
  And the victims of lust with its blight;
They are restless and wretched, and faint
  From desire no delight ever stills—
With big eyes, which, ablaze in their paint,
  Are all wild with the waiting that kills.
Oh, their sigh, with its heart-broken sob,
  Like a straw on the torrent that twirls;
"We have wearied and wearied so long,
  But God cares not a bit for the girls."

Does He care not, who lets his love shine—
  The great sun that for ages has stood,
In its human compassion divine
  On the evil no less than the good?
Does He care not, when nothing can tire,
  No ingratitude turn Him to rest,
When He forms out of filthiest mire
  The rare jewels He wears on his breast?
Yes, He cares for the mournful and mad,
  For the outcast disowned by the churls,
And he suffers the rich and the bad,
  But as Father He cares for his girls.

It is we who care not for our kin,
  Who are slothful and faithless and slack,
Who by petty self-seeking and sin,
  The sweet boon of redemption hold back;
It is we who are callous and hard,
  To the pangs of unsyllabled fear,
Who with pride and suspicion retard
  The outpouring of mercy so near,
Like a watchman God stands at the gates,
  That are fired with the glory of pearls;
He has waited so long and still waits,
  Because nobody cares for his girls.

But the dawn is approaching, and soon
  Will the sword of his judgment be bare,
And in light, not of sun or of moon,
  He will prove all his pitiful care;
While the features so faded and worn,
  Shall grow beautiful then with the grace
Of a holier, heavenly morn,
  Which is only the Saviour's face.
They shall gather fresh life and be glad,
  When the cloud its dark canopy furls,
At the doom of the rich and the bad,
  And when everyone cares for the girls.

"GOLDEN VIALS."

> "But the good deed, through the ages,
> Living in historic pages,
> Brighter gleams and glows immortal,
> Unconsumed by moth or rust."

"Golden vials full of odours;" or the broken alabaster box of costly spikenard, whose odour filled all the house. These thoughts are suggested by the beautiful book before us.* Here is ointment "poured forth" in love's lavishment, "while the King sitteth at his table," and in his name—nothing kept back; time, love, strength, weakness, all dedicated to the King of love. In this book, Mrs. Spurgeon has given to the world a treasury, revealing not only the beauties of a tender imagination and a fervid eloquence of soul, but recording the wonders of a ministry unique in its character, and marvellous in its results and comprehensiveness. When the first volume of "Lectures to my Students" was published, the author's wife, to use her own words, said: "I wish I could place it in the hands of every minister in England." "Then why not do so? How much will you give?" said her very practical spouse. But how was it to be done? for "money was not plentiful just then." Yet listen, for now "comes the wonderful part: I found the money ready and waiting! Upstairs in a little drawer were some carefully hoarded crown-pieces," and these were found to be "exactly sufficient to pay for one hundred copies of the work! If a twinge of regret at parting from my cherished but unwieldy favourites passed over me, it was gone in an instant, and then they were given, freely and thankfully, to the Lord, and in that moment, though I knew it not, the Book Fund was inaugurated!"

The applications for the books were so numerous that another hundred copies were given. "Some of the applicants say that they have not been able to buy a new book for ten years! Does anybody wonder if preachers are sometimes dull?" At the end of one year 3058 books had been distributed to pastors of all denominations. The extracts given from letters (none but the writers will know their source, since the Pastor's wife "prepared all the copy for the printer, that their names might be unknown") show the terrible needs of some of these servants of Christ. One dear wife writes: "My husband is a great lover of books, and I am almost ashamed to confess that when walking in town with him I have very carefully avoided going into the streets where the book-stores were kept, knowing it would be hard for him to pass them by. I assure you that, to spare a little for my husband's library, I have had to be servant, tailor and dressmaker, and very frequently have my hands been in the dye-pot in order to send my family out respectable." This glimpse at a heroic life tells its own pitiful, yet beautiful, story. Mrs. Spurgeon loves the letters and their writers with a mother-love; she says: "Some of the most interesting and touching letters I receive contain so many gentle and gracious personalities that I am obliged to conceal them from public view, and for this reason many a bright picture enshrined in the privacy of my sanctum can never leave it to touch other hearts as it has touched mine." No, for the ministry, and so the reward, belong to this patient "corresponding secretary," in whom "almost constant pain has fettered both head and hand."

The precious "day-book" tells many a touching tale of need and supply, and suffering and rejoicing borne by this God-used servant, who sings, "The Book Fund is the joy of my life, and ever since the Lord gave the sweet service into my weak and unworthy hands, He has led me by green pastures and beside still waters, and crowned me with loving-kindness and tender mercies." If anyone thinks the benefits of this work are confined to Baptist ministers, he has but to look at the list to be undeceived. Clergymen, Friends, Wesleyans, Congregationalists, and others, partake of the blessings of the Book Fund.

Then there is the Pastors' Aid Society, which gives both clothing and money where needed. One family was made glad by the arrival of a parcel when all the children were in bed because their one suit each of garments were being washed by the wife and mother! "Poor ministers are the rule, not the exception." We could not record a tithe of the poverty exposed and the blessing given by means of the Book Fund—a suit for the husband, a new dress and bonnet for the wife, boots and garments for the children, and even a supply of note-paper to many pastors. No wonder that one poor wife, out of a full heart, says: "A thousand thanks for your timely aid." Two lone widows send twice a year "a large box packed tightly with the results of their long, patient industry. I always feel a little choking sensation in my throat when that box comes"—and no wonder! O the hearts that will be lightened by receiving those lovingly-made garments!

Truly, this is a work of and for the Lord! Thinking of her own weakness, the dear writer says: "But I remembered with exceeding comfort that, when the wall of Jerusalem was repaired, in Nehemiah's time, the work of the daughters of Shallum was as faithfully recorded as the labour of the princes and the priests." But "the hand that holds this pen is very weary; and the brain which tries to think the thoughts that guide it is jaded and overstrained." God bless and strengthen those dear hands, as He has done, and raise up others to carry on this great work of blessing, now that "the beloved worker feels that she must slacken." For ten years, 12,000 ministers, of all denominations, have been supplied with books. Let those who can help in this work read the Pastor's preface and the year by year report of his wife's unwearying love, and they will be amazed, strengthened, quickened into doing something. We have been more than refreshed by reading this volume, and the odour of sanctity and love breathed from its pages has lifted us into closer fellowship with that God who has so used this weak instrument that its music makes in the lives of thousands an unbroken litany of living love that He will spare her in happiness to his service and praise.

* Ten Years of my Life in the Service of the Book Fund. By Mrs. C. H. Spurgeon. 3s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster.

A BLESSED WORK, writes a correspondent, has been going on lately amongst laundry workers and others at South Acton.

TEMPERANCE IN THE HARVEST-FIELD.—A paper on this subject was read before the Northamptonshire Chamber of Agriculture, on June 12, by Mr. John Abbey, Secretary of the Agricultural Department of the C.E.T.S. Mr. Abbey urged that all work should be paid for in hard cash, so that a man may have the whole of his earnings to spend in what he believes will best contribute to the happiness of himself and family. This he cannot do when he is obliged to take part of it out in beer or cider. The practice is not only unfair, but unjust to the ever-increasing number of young men who do not use intoxicating drinks at all. Throughout the country there are numbers of young lads who are members of temperance societies, and to these the custom of supplying beer is a most serious matter. Some very satisfactory testimony of employers who have ceased to give beer as part payment was quoted. The testimony of the men themselves is equally satisfactory. Working men find by experience that they can do their work better, and with greater satisfaction to themselves.

THE EVANGELISATION OF THE WORLD.

Sir,—I venture again to call the attention of your readers to a matter of the utmost importance, which demands the prayerful thought of all Christians. It is, of course, a commonplace amongst us, that, according to our Lord's own words, the Gospel of the kingdom must be preached for a witness in all the world, before the end of the present age can come. We are all full of grateful wonder as we recall the great outburst of missionary zeal during the last decade. "The Lord gave the word, great was the company of those who published it." But the circle of extending light only makes the circumference of dense darkness more apparent. In those parts of India where missionaries are thickest, we are told that there is but one to every million of the inhabitants. In China the disparity is even more startling. The fringe of Africa's vast populations is hardly touched. And what shall we say of Burmah, with its teeming population, and its doors opened so widely by Him at whose girdle hang the keys; or of Central Asia; or of the vast populations which are springing into existence in every part of the globe, as the result of Anglo-Saxon colonisation?

Is it not clear that these myriads can never be reached by a paid agency, however cultured and noble the agents themselves may be? There always must be a large number of men and women giving all their time and thought and energy to this noble work. They are needed as officers and leaders and organisers. But they are no more able to cover all the ground than a handful of officers can win a battle. I could wish one hundred more for each one such now in the field. But if we are to wait till the world is evangelised by these, we must wait till the fires of the Church's hope have almost burnt to grey ash through disappointment at the Lord's delay.

Can we not supplement their work? No doubt one solution of the problem lies in employing native evangelists. But is there not another? When the Lord sought the evangelisation of the Roman world, He drove forth 10,000 unwilling emigrants from Jerusalem; they were unordained, unsupported by the Church, unconspicuous, like the men of Cyrene who founded the Church at Antioch. But they went everywhere preaching the Word. And the first Missionary Church was due to their labours. Why need we wait for Christ's compulsion? Why not use the streams of emigration to carry down the seeds of Gospel truth to lands unfertilised as yet. There must be thousands of Christians amongst the emigrants who leave our shores, and who would be heralds of the Gospel, if only they were directed and organised and put in communication with each other, and encouraged from some central body at home.

Besides, are there not hundreds of Christian men and women who would gladly obey the stirring summons of our dear friend, Mr. Reginald Radcliffe, and go out to preach the Gospel, whilst they maintain themselves by the work of their hands, or in some other way? These objects can be best attained by a system. Could we not set on foot a confederation of self-supporting missionaries, which should include the classes to which I have alluded, and which should seek to supplement the labours of those already in the field, by the addition of a great army of unpaid workers?

There are several methods in which such a scheme might work:—(1) By trying to place accredited Christian mechanics, railway servants, and others, in such of our colonies or other places, where, through correspondents, we heard that there were vacancies. There would be little expense attending this. The appointment of correspondents abroad, and the preparation of registry lists at home, would be all the apparatus needed. (2) By giving direction and stimulus to Christian emigrants, inciting them to undertake evangelisation work in the localities where they may settle. (3) By encouraging men of wealth to travel with this direct aim in view.

I do not know whether others will think this scheme at all feasible. It may at least serve as the basis of discussion. I shall be quite content to see it torn to shreds, if its ends may be gained in some other way. But I am persuaded that the time has come for the members of the body of Christ to seriously consider how they may individually hasten the coming of the day of the Lord, by speeding the evangelisation of the world. —Yours truly, F. B. Meyer.

FALSE CHARITY AND TRUE.

Never since God's people have assembled in the hallowed grounds of Mildmay has a subject more suitable for the times been selected than that which will be discussed at the coming Conference; and it should be the earnest prayer of everyone who intends to be present at this blessed reunion of believers that He who has, doubtless, given the subject, will give wisdom and grace to every speaker, and thus make the result of the Conference both practical and lasting—not only in drawing out God's children from the world, with the people of which many have, alas! been mingling, but also in separating them to Himself and to each other.

A source of constant grief to the Spirit of God, and of constant delight to the enemies of Christ, must be the divisions that exist among Christians; and yet, I believe, that in one short day, if we could only sacrifice our pride for the sake of Him who, for our sakes, sacrificed his very life, we might roll away the reproach of those scoffers who, with too great reason, make it their song, "See how these Christians hate each other," and obtain from above that "latter rain" for which God's inheritance has so long been pining.

We want no false charity. This has been cultivated too much already, and to the no small hurt of the Church. It has become the fashion not only to tolerate, but also to admire men whom the Scripture would forbid us to admit to our houses. We receive their opinions and quote their utterances as those of very masters in Israel, though knowing at the same time that they, on their side of the question, hate both evangelical truth and all who believe and preach it. Many have been the unwary souls betrayed into the hands of false teachers through the so-called charity of those who should have warned them against wolves in sheep's clothing.

But we do want more real charity towards our fellow-believers, who, one with us in Christ, only differ from us in what are called the non-essentials of the Christian religion. Faith in Jesus divides all men into two classes, the saved and the condemned—God's friends and his enemies; nor should it be difficult to determine where faith itself exists, for he that hath it, hath Jesus; he that hath Jesus, hath his Spirit; and he that hath the Spirit bears the fruits of the Spirit. If a man really has faith, he receives the Lord Jesus both as his ONLY and his all-sufficient Saviour, and wherever anyone is found who would mingle other merit with that of Christ's, in the matter of salvation, it must be false charity to admit such a one's claim to be a believer at all.

But how little the fellowship that exists between those who indeed receive Christ as their only and all-perfect Saviour! There must be love for each other, in the very nature of things, since it is a rule that admits of no exception, which is laid down by the Holy Ghost when He says, "Everyone that loveth Him that begat, loveth him also that is begotten of Him." And if love must exist, why should not fellowship follow?

I only thought of Mr. Moody as I should have regarded any other servant of Christ, save that I saw he was used of the Master more than many of his other servants; but it made me very sad, at the close of his lengthened mission, to think he was going from us, for I felt that the union of kindred spirits, from the various sections of the one Church, would be more or less dissolved when the services should cease. What triumphs over bigotry and pride, gladdening the hearts of both God and man, were witnessed on "The Embankment," and at the other stations connected with that work! The same kind of feeling, too, has come over me, when the Mildmay Conference has been brought to an end; one has wished it might last for all time. But, cannot believers come closer to each other, even if retaining their "isms"? Shall Rome always have the vantage ground she occupies, in the sight of the world, because of her seeming unity, while the living Church of Christ is left seemingly divided against itself? May God, through the coming "Conference," incline his people to ponder these questions, and lead them while determining by his grace to separate themselves from the world, to separate themselves also to Him, and to each other.

LONDON FEMALE PENITENTIARY.

This Institution, situated at 191, High-street, Stoke Newington, N., held its seventy-ninth annual meeting on Friday week. From the report submitted it appeared that 139 young women sought admission during last year, the ages varying from fifteen to twenty. Of these, only 77 could be accommodated. Thirty-three had gone to service, 75 per cent. had been fully reclaimed, and the present number of inmates was 67. The industrial department provided last year the sum of £1583, while the income from all sources amounted to £2340. Real spiritual blessing had been vouchsafed.

Hon. Arthur Kinnaird, who presided, commended the Institution to liberal support, believing that there was no object more worthy of it. He was pained to know that the door of admission had necessarily been closed against so many, and hoped ere long such a necessity would be removed by enlarged means. One pleasing feature of the present day was the growing interest taken in young women, and he was specially glad to hear from the report that the penitents were directed to Christ for pardon and cleansing.

Rev. F. A. C. Lillingston said one of the best ways of helping the fallen is to live the Christ-life. When any of these outcasts are truly won to the Saviour they become an unspeakable blessing to others. Rev. H. J. Berguer followed, with a concise address, showing that the results of the year furnished ground for abundant thanks, and was a stimulus to future zeal. Admiral Fishbourne said they could not have fallen women without fallen men. Let them not deal with the moral question exclusively, but aim at the saving of their souls. Sir Lewis Pelly, Rev. De Kewer Williams, and Mr. E. W. Thomas further pleaded for the Institution.

GUISBRO', YORKSHIRE.—We have had a visit from Mr. George Hefford, evangelist. The meetings, which continued three weeks, have been greatly blessed, both to the believers and to the careless. J. S.

CONFERENCE ON PROPHECY.

Three days last week were spent at the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, in the consideration of prophecy. Mainly, though not quite exclusively, the expositions were on Futurist lines. Most of the subjects were well chosen, and their general treatment was able and edifying; but we cannot regard as within the scope of the sure word of prophecy such questions as "Will all the Lord's people who are on earth at the time pass through the Great Tribulation?" This subject has been discussed threadbare during the past forty years, and no authoritative "Thus saith the Lord" has ever yet been found, because it is not in the Word of God; therefore we think time wasted in discussing a speculative question to which an undeniable answer would surely have been found, had it been, not one of the secret things of God, but one of the things revealed for ourselves and our children.

We think also that as we are to take heed to the prophetic word "as unto a light shining in a dark place until the day dawn and the day star arise in our hearts," it is not wise to bring before an audience such a far-away question as "What Nations will Satan deceive after the Millennium?" It seems to us that Christians in these momentous and pregnant times would be more usefully employed in asking, Whom is Satan deceiving now? By what means is he deceiving them? And how can the victims of his deceptions be delivered?

We are glad to record that at this, as at the last Conference on Prophecy at Mildmay, there was a manifest spirit of courtesy and respect towards those holding other views and different interpretations. But we should look for more than courteous toleration of one another: we should endeavour to find a basis of agreement, and before we define and discuss the outward and transitory events whereon we differ, we should studiously consider and distinctly specify the underlying principles on which we are all agreed.

For in the school of God the eternal lessons taught are of more consequence than the means by which they are taught. Præterists, Presentists, Futurists, and Spiritual Interpreters, are all agreed that the Apocalypse depicts a great and long-continued conflict between God and Satan, Christ and Antichrist, in which the Good triumphs, and the Evil is overthrown; that it describes the oppression of the saints personified in the Bride of the Lamb, by the hypocrites personified in the Harlot-mother on the scarlet-coloured Beast; and that the saints are ultimately delivered, and the hypocrites destroyed. That is the Apocalypse which is day by day becoming history, and by the accomplishment of which, to the angels, and principalities, and powers, in heavenly places, is being made known through the Church the manifold wisdom of God.

One class of teachers perceives this conflict in the early ages; another in the long centuries which have intervened; another in the closing years of the dispensation. All three, so far, are right; but each is wrong in refusing to see any truth in the others' views, and all are wrong in directing attention almost exclusively to outward events, rather than to the great and glorious truths which they expound. And those whom we have called Spiritual Interpreters are equally wrong when they shut their eyes to outward events, and refuse to recognise in the past, the present, and the future, repeated fulfilments of the same prophetic visions.

For history repeats itself. Take one example. The risen Angel of the New Covenant descends, and gives to John a little opened book, which he eats up, in order that he may prophesy over many peoples and nations and tongues and kings. This was fulfilled in John, both personally and as a representative of all Christ's witnesses. It was specially applicable to men who marked epochs, like Augustine, Wickliffe, Calvin, Luther, and to any who may be like them in the future. But it is of far less consequence to fix the fulfilment of this symbolic prophecy to any period or person, past, present, or to come, than to see in each the reiterated object lesson illustrating and enforcing the fundamental truth that to eat up and inwardly digest the Book of God, opened by the death and resurrection, ascension and glorifying of the Lord Jesus, is the essential preparation for all his witnesses.

God's Word is greater than our thoughts; therefore it is probable that prophecy covers a larger area than any one reader or any one school may apprehend. There is, moreover, a definite promise of blessing to him who reads and to those who hear the prophecy of the Apocalypse. Therefore, if various readers arrive at different conclusions, it is more probable that their variance should arise from their different points of view, and that each has some measure of truth, than that one has all the truth and the rest are all in error. In the early days, when Christians were subjected to cruel and terrible persecution under Nero and other Pagan Roman emperors, it was natural that they should interpret this prophecy with reference to themselves and their sufferings; and who shall say that the Spirit, by whose inspiration John saw and wrote his visions, did not comfort the saints by indicating to them in Nero the features of the Beast, and showing them, among the things to come, the marriage of the Lamb as the joyous issue of their suffering unto blood?

As time rolled on, and Papal Rome became the persecutor, was it not equally legitimate and natural for the saints of those dark centuries, the Middle Ages, to interpret the Beast and the Woman to be the secular and spiritual powers of the Papacy, seeing that the length of the time required a succession of persons, or a system, rather than an individual, to be the Antichrist?

But as every process in history has issued in a crisis—e.g., the Flood, the Exodus, the Crucifixion; and as every crisis has turned upon an individual—as Noah, Moses, Christ—so many think this age will issue in a crisis; and from Scripture, as well as from the analogy of history, they expect it to culminate in a person in whom antagonism to God and his people will be headed up.

The outward events represented by these three lines of thought entirely differ from each other; but the great truths which underlie them all are absolutely the same. The opposition of Satan to God and man; the enmity of the carnal mind to God; that opposition and enmity exhibited in secular and in religious forms; the faithful love of God to his people; the ultimate rest and glory of the saints with Christ; the final overthrow of devil, beast, and harlot: these are common to all interpretations—Præterite, Presentist, Futurist, or Spiritual. They have been and they will be the great factors in human life on earth until the day of God shall dawn. It is of infinite importance to affirm and emphasise these fundamental facts, on which all Christians are agreed. It is worse than useless to assert our own conceptions of the outward fulfilment and to deny all others, instead of emphasising our agreement as to the inward and everlasting principles, though we differ as to the particular periods of time in which we conceive them to have been specifically fulfilled in act.

We do not attempt to report the addresses at the Conference last week, because we could not do them justice in the space we could afford; and also because they will shortly be published with the speakers' own revision.

We may, however, give one illustration of what we have written above, from the apparently inharmonious teaching of two speakers on the same evening. The first spoke of the Babylon of Rev. xvii. as being Rome; the second interpreted it of the Initiates of the Babylonish mysteries. The audience was naturally perplexed, and probably few perceived that the essential truth was taught by each. Both held Babylon to be an apostate, adulterous, world-loving, saint-persecuting system of false religion, whose end is to be destroyed by the world-powers which it has oppressed, deceived, and led by reaction into infidelity; but they widely differed as to the particular form and period of the false religion which they conceived to have been presented to the mind of the Apocalyptic Seer.

The effect of making much of our differences instead of our agreements is to stumble students of God's sure word of prophecy, and to shut ourselves out from further and clearer light; for if in anything we are otherwise-minded, God will reveal even this unto us, if, whereto we have already attained, we walk by the same rule and mind the same thing. What revelations the Spirit would make to the Church of Christ, if its members were all walking together in love, each esteeming other better than himself, and seeking not each to prove his own view right, but to find how much of truth there is in the views of others! MR. WILLIAM NOBBS has recently been evangelising at Ross, Stroud, Gloucester, Bristol, Exeter, Chard (Somerset), Hereford, and other places. There has been a large spirit of hearing among the people at all these centres, and God has given tokens of blessing on the labours of his servant.

WHIT MONDAY IN RATCLIFF HIGHWAY.—At the Seamen's Christian Friend Society's Chapel a large company of seamen soberly and happily spent a few hours, joining heartily in many choruses, and listening to the sacred songs sung by Mrs. Nash and Mrs. Hill, and to the earnest words addressed to them by Miss Messer, Rev. G. J. Hill and several of their own class, who bore witness to the power of Christ to change the hearts and lives of the greatest sinners.

DEATH OF DR. WILLIAM PULSFORD.—We deeply regret to announce the death of the Rev. Dr. William Pulsford, the well-known minister of Trinity Congregational Church, Glasgow. Dr. Pulsford has recently been in very poor health, and six months ago he went to Southport, in the hope of regaining strength. This, however, was not realised, and a few weeks since he was brought back to his residence at Ashton-terrace, Glasgow. There, with perfect resignation, he awaited the coming of death, and on Tuesday week he passed peacefully away.

CONVALESCENT HOMES.—These institutions (two of which are now in connection with the London Samaritan Society) are continually proving to the weak and overcrowded people of this great city to be very Bethesdas. The testimony of an earnest and disinterested Christian worker reaches us to the effect that one poor man, weak, jaded, and well nigh hopeless, has just returned from the Sandgate Home, strong and well, though for some time before he was unable to work. This is a sample of many who are reinvigorated and saved from suffering and probable untimely death. The Society is at present much in need of help, which will be gratefully received by Mr. J. J. Jones, 57 and 59, Ludgate-hill, E.C.

JOHN WESLEY on the IRISH QUESTION.

LETTER TO AN IRISH ROMAN CATHOLIC.

On July 18, 1749, John Wesley published in the City of Dublin a remarkable "Letter to a Roman Catholic," from which, says The Methodist Times, we make the following extracts:—

"You have heard ten thousand stories of us who are commonly called Protestants, of which, if you believe only one in a thousand, you must think very hardly of us. But this is quite contrary to our Lord's rule, 'Judge not that ye be not judged'; and it has many ill consequences, particularly this—it inclines us to think as hardly of you. Hence we are on both sides less willing to help one another, and more ready to hurt each other. Hence brotherly love is utterly destroyed; and each side, looking on the other as monsters, gives way to anger, hatred, malice, to every unkind affection; which have frequently broke out in such inhuman barbarities as are scarce named among the heathen.

"Now, can nothing be done, even allowing us on both sides to retain our own opinions, for the softening our hearts towards each other, the giving a check to this flood of unkindness, and restoring at least some small degree of love among our neighbours and countrymen? Are you not fully convinced that malice, hatred, revenge, bitterness, whether in us or in you, in our hearts, or yours, are an abomination to the Lord? Be our opinions right, or be they wrong, these tempers are undeniably wrong. They are the broad road that leads to destruction, to the nethermost hell.

"I do not suppose all the bitterness is on your side. I know there is too much on our side also; so much that I fear many Protestants (so-called) will be angry at me, too, for writing to you in this manner; and will say, 'It is showing you too much favour; you deserve no such treatment at our hands.'

"But I think you do. I think you deserve the tenderest regard I can show, were it only because the same God hath raised you and me from the dust of the earth, and has made us both capable of loving and enjoying Him to eternity; were it only because the Son of God has bought you and me with his own blood. How much more, if you are a person fearing God (as without question many of you are), and studying to have a conscience void of offence towards God and towards man?

"I shall therefore endeavour, as mildly and inoffensively as I can, to remove in some measure the ground of your unkindness, by plainly declaring what our belief and what our practice is." [Mr. Wesley then proceeds to describe the Protestant faith in the form of an expository statement of the Nicene Creed. Then he enlarges upon the fact that a true Protestant loves God with all his heart, and his neighbour as himself; and formally winds up by describing the practical side of a true Protestant's life, in terms of the Sermon on the Mount.]

"This," he concludes, "and this alone is the old religion. This is true primitive Christianity. O, when shall it spread over all the earth! When shall it be found both in us and you? Without waiting for others, let each of us, by the grace of God, amend one.

"Are we not thus far agreed? Let us thank God for this, and receive it as a fresh token of his love. But if God still loveth us, we ought also to love one another. We ought, without this endless jangling about opinions, to provoke one another to love and to good works. Let the points wherein we differ stand aside; here are enough wherein we agree, enough to be the ground of every Christian temper and of every Christian action.

"O brethren, let us not fall out by the way! I hope to see you in heaven. And if I practise the religion above described, you dare not say I shall go to hell. You cannot think so. None can persuade you to it. Your own conscience tells you the contrary. Then if we cannot as yet think alike in all things, at least we may love alike. Herein we cannot possibly do amiss. For of one point none can doubt a moment—'God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him.'

"In the name, then, and in the strength of God, let us resolve, first, not to hurt one another; to do nothing unkind or unfriendly to each other; nothing which we would not have done to ourselves. Rather let us endeavour after every instance of a kind, friendly, and Christian behaviour towards each other.

"Let us resolve, secondly, God being our helper, to speak nothing harsh or unkind of each other. The sure way to avoid this is to say all the good we can, both of and to one another. In all our conversation, either with or concerning each other, to use only the language of love; to speak with all softness and tenderness; with the most endearing expression which is consistent with truth and sincerity.

"Let us, thirdly, resolve to harbour no unkind thought, no unfriendly temper, towards each other. Let us lay the axe to the root of the tree; let us examine all that rises in our heart, and suffer no disposition there which is contrary to tender affection. Then shall we easily refrain from unkind actions and words, when the very root of bitterness is cut up.

"Let us, fourthly, endeavour to help each other. on in whatever we are agreed leads to the kingdom So far as we can, let us always rejoice to strengthen each other's hands in God. Above all, let us each take heed to himself (since each must give an account of himself to God) that he fall not short of the religion of love: that he be not condemned in that he himself approveth. O, let you and me (whatever others do) press on to the prize of our high calling! that, being justified by faith, we may have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ; that we may rejoice in God through Jesus Christ, by whom we have received the atonement; that the love of God may be shed abroad in our hearts, by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us. Let us count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Jesus Christ our Lord; being ready for him to suffer the loss of all things, and counting them but dung, that we may win Christ."

APPEAL TO THE PROTESTANT CHURCH OF IRELAND.

On another occasion John Wesley published the following remarkable appeal to the ministers of the then established Protestant Church of Ireland.

"A short method of converting all the Roman Catholics in the kingdom of Ireland, humbly proposed to the bishops and clergy of that kingdom:—

"It is a melancholy consideration to those who love the Protestant interest, that so small a part of this nation is yet reformed from Popery. They cannot observe without a very sensible concern, that, in many parts of the kingdom, there are still ten, nay, fifteen, perhaps upwards of twenty, Papists to one Protestant. Nor can they see any prospect of Papists being brought over to our Church, notwithstanding all the methods which have been used, while many Protestants are seduced from it.

* * * "What an advantage would it be to the kingdom in general to be no longer divided against itself, to have that grand cause of contention removed, and all its inhabitants of one heart and one mind! And how highly would it advance both the honour and interest of our gracious Sovereign, to have all his subjects cordially united together, thinking and speaking the same thing!

"Why, then, is not this desirable end pursued with a vigour proportionable to its importance? Is it because we despair of any success—because we think it impossible to be attained? But why should we imagine it to be impossible? A common and plausible answer is, because the Papists are so bigoted to their clergy; believing all that they affirm, however contrary both to Scripture and reason, and doing all that they direct, whom they generally believe to be the holiest and wisest of men. * * * It was observed that the grand difficulty of the work lies in the strong attachment of the Papists to their clergy. Here, therefore, we are to begin; we are to strike at the root; and if this bigotry be but removed, whatever error or superstition is built upon it will, of course, fall to the ground.

"Now, this may be effectually done thus. The Papists themselves allow that one set of clergy were holier and wiser even than their own, namely, the Apostles; they allow these both to have lived and preached better than the present clergy even of the Roman Church.

"Here, therefore, is the short and sure method. Let all the clergy of the Church of Ireland only live like the Apostles, and preach like the Apostles, and the thing is done.

"The Romans, on the same ground that they prefer the Apostles before their own clergy, will then prefer ours before them; and when they once do this, when we have carried this point, when their attachment to our clergy is stronger than that to their own, they will be convinced by hundreds, till their is not a Roman left in the kingdom of Ireland."

Mr. Wesley then proceeds, in a few terse sentences—namely, quotations from the Bible, to describe the "inward life" of the Apostles, and concludes with the exclamation: "Let but this mind be in every clergyman of our Church, and Popery will vanish out of the kingdom."

Mr. Wesley next describes, again in Scriptural phraseology, "the outward life of the Apostles," and concludes with the exclamation: "Let every clergyman of our Church live thus, and in a short time there will not be a Papist in the nation."

Finally, Mr. Wesley describes "the matter" and "the manner" of the preaching of the Apostles, and then concludes his characteristic manifesto with the following emphatic sentence: "Let all the right reverend the bishops, and the reverend the clergy, only walk by this rule; let them thus live, and then testify, with one heart and one voice, the Gospel of the grace of God, and every Papist within these four seas will soon acknowledge the truth as it is in Jesus."

MISSION WORK IN EAST FOLKESTONE.

Dear Sir,—We have for some time been endeavouring to carry on mission work in one of the darkest districts on the south-east coast, among the fishing population of East Folkestone. The appalling ignorance and indifference exhibited by the people, coupled with the very hard times, has made our work very difficult, but we rejoice to say that God has wonderfully blessed and owned our labours in the salvation of some who are to-day standing firm in the faith, and helping us to spread the glorious tidings of Christ's Gospel amongst their fellows.

A long record of blessed results from the Sunday morning meetings on board the ships in harbour, house-to-house visitation, providing Bible-bags for the ships, open-air Gospel meetings, coffee suppers, and tract distribution, makes the spiritual side of our work very bright and encouraging indeed.

But we are £15 upon the wrong side of our balance-sheet, after obtaining all the help possible from friends in the town. Unless this is cleared off it will be impossible for us to proceed with the good work. Our mission is greatly needed in this sin-stricken neighbourhood. Anglican priests and sisters of mercy rule the people. We have often been stoned for telling out the story of the Cross in the streets. Only a month ago the Southsea Bible carriage visited us, and was nearly wrecked by a howling mob of men, women, and children. But we love the people, and will willingly go forward and suffer anything if Christian friends will help us to meet this expense which has been incurred. Our workers and friends, who are all poor working people, have agreed to give each a small sum weekly for the future maintenance of the work.—Yours in Christ, Henry Galer, Missionary.

MR. GEORGE CLARKE IN GREENOCK.—Sabbath, June 6, saw the close of a remarkable mission, held by Mr. Clarke in the west end of Greenock. The attendance both on Sabbath and week evenings were very large. The interest deepened as the time advanced, and general regret was expressed at Mr. Clarke having to leave at the close of the fortnight. A united thanksgiving meeting was held in the hall of Free St. Andrew's, and was largely attended.

VILLAGE WORK.—Rev. Thomas Champness ought to be immediately released from circuit work and set free to evangelise the thousands of villages in the great majority of which evangelical Christianity does not exist. Mr. Champness has already fifteen devoted evangelists at work, and relates wonderful instances of new village societies, and of old village societies raised from the dead. We believe Mr. Champness is engaged to a Rochdale circuit. That is a very important appointment, but the claims of the whole country are greater than those of any locality. Mr. Champness hopes to be able to employ one hundred lay evangelists before he has done. Release him from circuit work to edit Joyful News and bring the villages to Christ. God has given us the man, and already put his seal upon him. Have we enough sanctified common-sense to respond?—Methodist Times.

CRUELTY AFLOAT—CRIMPING ASHORE.

A thousand thanks, dear Sir, for your words on crimping at Havre, which appeared in one of your "Letters from Abroad," as also for your remarks on cruelties afloat in your review of my little book, "Belaying-pin Gospel." These gigantic evils are far more world-wide than the uninitiated would suppose. Abused sailors are so afraid of the penalties of mutiny, and brutal officers have so long perpetrated these cruelties with impunity that lawlessness, sin, and crime reign in many a ship. One's heart bleeds at the thought that sailors are driven to be their own executioners. Poor Whelan, who was lately hung for murder on the high seas, was recommended to mercy by the jury. The Mayor of Winchester, and many of us, petitioned the Home Secretary for a commutation of sentence. The officer he killed had threatened to knock his brains out, and governed the ship in a brutal, blasphemous fashion common to those ships. The Secretary of State wrote to say, however, that he could not advise Her Majesty to interfere with the due course of law.

Before the same judge, Mr. Justice Day, and at the same Assizes, another case of murder on the high seas was tried. This, like the former, occurred on board a Nova Scotia ship. The second mate of the Nocosia had been most brutally beating the crew. He struck a man named Charley, smashed his nose, and split the lips of a man named Alexander. He was also accused, among minor and constant cruelties, of knocking a man off the main yard and drowning him! A foreign sailor, Lock, while being attacked by this tyrant, drew his knife and gave a fatal stab. The prisoner was found guilty of manslaughter, and will be imprisoned twelve months with hard labour. But the words of the judge ought to sink deep into the hearts of all Christians, and into the heart of this nation. "His lordship remarked that deceased was evidently a brutal man—a man utterly unfit to be an officer in a British ship. Unfortunately there were too many of such men—bullying brutes and ruffians—entrusted with command, and that was why so very few respectable English sailors would sail in an ordinary British merchant ship. The brutal conduct which was tolerated, and even encouraged, on the part of officers towards men in British ships was discreditable to the service, and kept respectable Englishmen out of it. To have an officer who was a terror to the whole crew, and who undertook to keep them in terror, no doubt saved the master and first officer a great deal of trouble, but it was a very brutal thing, and ought to be stopped."

Thousands of cases never come into the courts of law, or if they do the officers are not punished. I have the testimonies of recent brutalities on board the ships Winnipeg, Lancefield, and others. Much prayer is needed to do the right thing, and in the Lord's way to put down one of the worst forms of slavery. Governments must be moved to act, the guilty must be brought to justice, and these human slaughter-house ships under the ensign of Britain and the stars and stripes of America must be turned into Bethels. There ought to be a fund for defence and attack of not less than a thousand pounds. Those gentlemen and ladies who can help, should communicate with the author of "Belaying-pin Gospel," and Secretary of the Committee,

Edward W. Matthews.

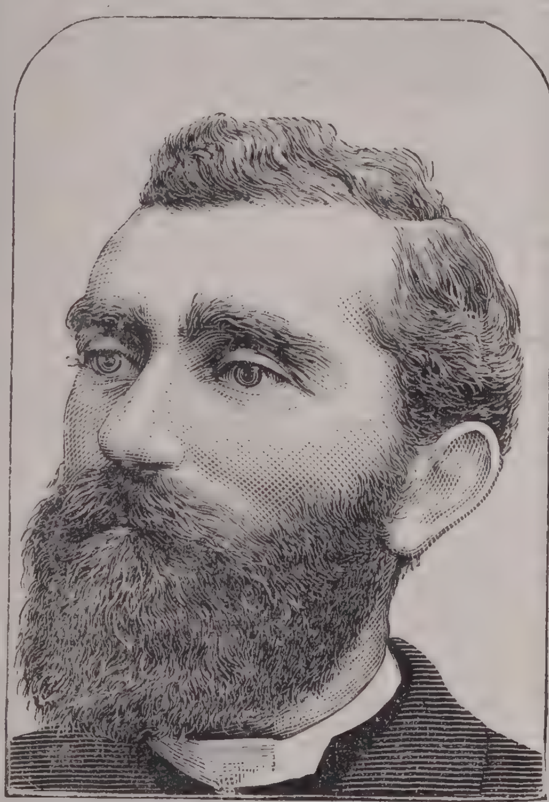
PORTSMOUTH AND GOSPORT SEAMEN'S MISSION.—This Mission is still proving the value of the motto adopted by Mr. Henry Cook thirty-three years ago: "Have faith in God." We have frequently given details in these pages of the work afloat, on our own shores, and also on the coast of France. Reports have been received testifying to the readiness with which large congregations of labourers, seamen, mechanics and others have heard the word of truth. Another feature of the work well deserves special notice. At the dwelling-house, where also is a soldiers' reading-room, shelter is always given to any homeless boy, and several cases are mentioned in which boys who had run away from home were, through kindness and faithful dealing, rescued from evil influences, and in some cases restored to their parents. At the present time there is need of funds. Such a work, by which the seamen of so many nationalities are reached, to say nothing of the work on shore, is indeed well worthy of Christian support.

Rev. JACOB FRESHMAN, of NEW YORK.

Some four years ago a converted Rabbi, Rev. Jacob Freshman, commenced Gospel work in New York among his kinsmen after the flesh. The Lord has most graciously blessed his efforts, and last year the first Hebrew Christian Church in the United States was opened in St. Mark's-place, New York, under his auspices. Mr. Freshman is heart and soul in his work of preaching to the Jews of the Empire City the true Messiahship of Jesus Christ. We well recollect the deep interest awakened at Mr. Moody's Northfield Conference last autumn by his fervid and stirring accounts.

Mr. Freshman and his wife (who has been in indifferent health) are now on a visit to this country, and we bespeak for them a hearty welcome among all the lovers of the Jewish nation, to which we Gentiles owe so much. Mr. Freshman will be glad, as opportunity may offer, to give lectures on Jewish manners and customs, or to speak more particularly on Christian work among Jews in America. Any friends who may secure his services can be assured that they will be forwarding a good cause. We give with this brief notice a portrait of our interesting visitor. Communications may be sent to him, care of Y.M.C.A., Exeter Hall, Strand.



MRS. K. YEOLAND, who was used by God in accomplishing a good work in Boreham some three years since, has again visited the scene of her labours, and conducted a series of services at the Mission Chapel. A great blessing has followed her earnest and faithful appeals. Many, it is believed, have been led to give themselves wholly to the Lord.

WELCOME HOME, CARDIFF.—The workers continue to circulate God's Word amongst the seamen of different nationalities who come to the port. Through the kindness of Mr. Hawke, of the Bible Stand, Crystal Palace, they have been supplied with Scriptures for distribution in about ten different languages. The meetings in the Strangers' Rest have been greatly blessed to a large number of sailors, especially Scandinavians and Spaniards, who have joined in the Gospel hymns in their own languages, and listened to the word of life. It is believed that a good work is being done. The loss during the year has been about £65, the continued depression in the shipping trade being the principal cause. The Home has now been removed to 228, Bute-road, Cardiff, where parcels of books, tracts, &c., or money help will be thankfully received by Mr. George Lawrence.

SAVE THE YOUTHS.

Few have any idea of the countless agencies in London which seem to exist for no other purpose than the destruction of the bodies and souls of youths and young men. There are shops for the sale of licentious literature and appliances; so-called political clubs, where drinking, gambling, and other soul-destroying practices are carried on till midnight; music-halls and theatres, with their withering curses; book-makers of the worst type, dressed in the highest fashion, who hang about for shop assistants, clerks, &c., laying baits for their money (or their masters') as a bet on some horserace. In the midst of all this infamy, what is being done to save young men? I am afraid very little. There are tens of thousands of youths in London who consider themselves too old for Sunday-school; they are considered by others too young for the Church, and too troublesome in many cases for Mission-hall services. Practically they either shut themselves, or are shut by others, outside of nearly every influence for good.

Can nothing be done to save them? Will not the Y.M.C.A. throw open their halls and arrange special services, with speakers to address them who have deep sympathy with them in their special temptations? The lads of London do not want lectures on "Moses in the Bulrushes," or "Paul at Corinth;" but they do want some big brother's talk about the battle of life and a Saviour's love. I have lately been privileged to hold nine such meetings at the Y.M.C.A., Aldersgate-street, and although they were not as successful as we should have liked, yet there was scarcely a night but several young fellows professed to give their hearts and lives to God.

Something more ought to be done for the salvation of these youths: God grant it may be done quickly. This week Rev. John Bain has thrown open his new Tabernacle in Chatsworth-road, Clapton, for a week's mission.—Yours in the King's service,

James B. Wookey.

DEACON ABRAHAM.

Deacon Abraham writes thankfully of his safe return to his native country some months ago. His health had suffered—partly, no doubt, from the severity of the winter, snow having remained on the ground for four months, and many of the vineyards having been destroyed by frost. As in this country, work has largely failed, and a wide-spread depression in trade continues. But the work of the Orphanage goes on, although it has not been possible to receive so many applicants as before. Deacon Abraham speaks of the gross ignorance of spiritual things which still abounds, even among the Nestorians, and he has decided, if the Lord will, to go round the villages and plain of Oroomiah, and to make a journey among the mountains of Kurdistan, preaching the Gospel.

It may be mentioned that Messrs. Hawkes and Ward, American missionaries from Persia, are now in London, and that Rev. Benjamin Labara is expected shortly.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, SANDGATE.—This Institute, started in the year 1859 by the late Miss Papillon, has been working through clouds and sunshine ever since. Now it is in its most flourishing condition as regards spiritual work (unfortunately not so financially), and proving a great blessing to the many soldiers who make use of it. It is ably managed by an old soldier, Mr. Henry Hull, who, knowing soldiers' ways as well as speech, soon finds his way to their hearts. My heart was greatly cheered during our recent mission to see them drinking in the word of life, and to find night after night not a few with tearful eyes seeking salvation through faith in Jesus. If any of your readers would like to write to the young converts, Mr. Hull would gladly give names and addresses both of militia and regulars.

A HELP TO BIBLE STUDY.*

Those who are acquainted with that most useful book, the Englishman's Greek Concordance, will remember that it gives every Greek word in the New Testament, and under this heading arranges all the texts in English in which such Greek word occurs. Dr. Bullinger's plan is the reverse of this. He gives every English word as the heading, and under this may be found the different Greek words which are so translated. But in so doing, he adds, what for the general reader is most valuable, an explanation of each Greek word, gives in fact a sort of lexicon, so that the mere English reader who can but master the Greek letters so as to be able to spell the words, is provided with a means of tracing each different Greek word throughout the different texts where it occurs, and thus getting a satisfactory grasp of its meaning. The book thus presents a most useful supplement to the Englishman's Greek Concordance, over and above its value in itself.

We heartily commend this, and all such aids to the study of the Greek Testament, as supplying a need greatly felt in the present day. There has been awakened through God's blessing on the evangelistic work of his servants much interest in the Word of God, but all are not Greek scholars, and the great majority of Christians have neither the time, nor perhaps the opportunities, of becoming such. To these a book of this kind is invaluable as enabling them to form a judgment for themselves upon points which hitherto have been too much regarded as beyond their ken, but on which now they may at least learn enough to keep them from mistakes and to whet their appetite for more knowledge.

One illustration will suffice. It has been told of the late lamented Bishop Hannington that when reading Dr. Mackay's "Grace and Truth" to please a friend who had given it to him, hoping to do him good thereby (it was afterwards the means of his conversion), he came across a critical blunder, which so annoyed him that he put away the book, and would not for some time read it again. This blunder consisted in quoting Matt. xv. 27, as if the words, "Truth, Lord!" contained the ordinary word for "truth," whereas it is only the affirmation, "Yea, Lord," as the Revised Version more correctly gives it. Now a glance at the word "truth" in Dr. Bullinger's Critical Lexicon would have saved the writer from this mistake, for under the heading "Truth" are found four Greek words so translated, and amongst them this word "yea" with this passage (Matt. xv. 27), the only passage, indeed, in which it is so rendered.

We wish this book much success, and rejoice to note that it is now in its "Second Edition Revised."

CLAPTON PARK TABERNACLE.—The services held since the reopening of this building have been attended with much blessing. There is an increase of members for the past quarter, and a number of scholars under fourteen years of age have decided for Christ and are meeting in catechumen classes. The Good Samaritan Union has carried blessing and help into many of the homes of the poorest by its members attending gratuitously upon the destitute poor in their affliction.

UNEMPLOYED AT BARKING.—A few weeks since we announced the closing of Messrs. Levy & Co.'s large and important jute works at this place, which resulted in throwing about 1200 persons out of employment. A number of hands who were employed at these works were men, but by far the larger majority were women and girls, the latter being estimated at between 700 and 800. Rev. Thomas Davies, the Congregational minister, has interested himself in the welfare of these girls, and has taken steps to enlist the sympathy of benevolent people on their behalf. Up to Wednesday Mr. Davies had succeeded in securing places for twenty-four girls, and he had received communications from about fifty persons who were willing to take girls as domestic servants. Every care and precaution are taken by Mr. Davies to secure only good places of service for these girls. Among others who have especially interested themselves since Mr. Davies's appeal was first made are Mrs. Westlake and the Hon. Maude Stanley, the founder of the Girls' Club and Home in Greek-street, and these two ladies were present at a free breakfast recently given to a number of the girls in the Axe-street Meeting-room. At the close of the meeting no less than fifty-three of the girls gave in their names for places as domestic servants, and five expressed their willingness to go out to Queensland. We are requested to state that subscriptions will be thankfully received by Rev. Thomas Davies, of Wykeham House, Barking.—Essex Times.

A VOICE FROM THE STAGE.

Mr. Christopher King delivered two lectures at Devonshire-square Chapel, Stoke Newington, on Friday and Saturday evenings, June 11 and 12, to very large audiences. The lectures followed up a series of addresses and Bible-readings given by Mr. King, in connection with a Ten Days' Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance Mission which had been held in a large tent at Wordsworth-road, not far from the chapel.

Mr. Robert Paton, who presided on Friday evening, called attention to the frequent references Paul made to his own conversion, and the incidents preceding it, in the Acts and the Epistles. Mr. King then, in a devoutly felicitous manner, held the attention of the large audience while with vivacious humour, far removed from levity, he told the story of his sinful life and his subsequent conversion. He has a facile gift of interweaving with the incidents of his life, and the reminiscences of the stage and the prison, valuable spiritual truths, vivid warnings, exhortations and Gospel invitations. As we listened we were compelled to regard him as a man of almost unique capabilities in arresting the attention of the indifferent and irreligious. Especially, he seems to have the happy art of inculcating cleanliness, sobriety attention to domestic and other moral duties by connecting them with clear and definite Gospel teaching. He has also the power of driving home unpalatable truths in such a captivating and humorously penetrating manner that those most needing this sort of exhortation and teaching are convinced without being repelled, and all are made to clearly understand that "the Gospel of Christ is the power of God unto salvation."

The lecture on Saturday evening, which was especially valuable as being admonitory to young people, dealt with his twelve months' prison experiences, and was illustrated by figures on a blackboard. It abounded with spiritual teaching; the prison dress, appliances, discipline, &c., being pressed into the service to show God's dealings with the souls of men. We trust that Mr. King, who is certainly a talented man, possessing a wide acquaintance with the Scriptures, may have an increasing sphere of usefulness before him and will be used by the Master to "turn many to righteousness."

Mr. and Mrs. King have conducted two missions at the Gospel Hall, Wood Green, each time with conversions as the result.

PRAYER FOR MISSIONS.—No thoughtful Christian can look at the present aspect of the world without feeling that we are on the eve of eventful changes. The progress that the Gospel has made in regions where it was unknown to our fathers, the closed and barred doors of heathenism that have been opened at its touch, the spread of Christian civilisation among peoples that were barbarous, the rapid decay of false religions, the prevalent apprehension among their chief supporters of their impending doom, the fearful looking forward to some solemn crisis of the world's history, are marked signs of the times in which we live. The American Board adopts the suggestion of a Day of Special Prayer on behalf of Foreign Missions over the world, and has appointed the first Sunday of next November as an appropriate time for that purpose. Who can tell what blessings may be showered on this world that is yet to be redeemed in answer to the united prayers of Christians all round the globe!—Illustrated Christian Weekly.

YOUNG MEN IN ONTARIO.

Sir,—Your paper is read by myself regularly with the deepest interest, and I know how very ready you are at all times to assist the Lord's work. I have been in this city now for three years, during which time the Lord has given much blessing in the salvation of young men, and the building up of others in the Word of Truth, besides being of use to many young men, strangers in a strange land. We regularly conduct open-air services, Bible-classes for young men, and Gospel and song services, also a workers' training class, where difficulties which young men meet with daily are dealt with from the Word, and the young men go away strengthened and blessed.

We are now making an effort to secure a new building, as we have hitherto had a suite of rooms upstairs, inadequate to our requirements. Young men are coming to us almost daily from our dear old home, leaving father, mother, and friends behind, who I am sure will be glad to know that their boys always have a welcome at the Y.M.C.A. There are, however, scores of places in our city far more prominent, such as saloons, pool parlours, &c. &c., with a nice attractive appearance, into which these young fellows fall continually, and we are extremely anxious to have a building which will prove more attractive to the young men, with gymnasium, baths, &c. We are doing all we can to erect such a building; it is to cost 30,000 dollars, or in sterling money £6000. We have already raised 15,000 dollars, or half the sum, from our wealthy merchants, and we feel that we only need to make it known to the friends in England, Scotland, and Ireland, to have at least their prayers for success on our effort to reach and save the boys, when they come as strangers amongst us. All financial help that can be given would be gladly received, and would show the friends out here that those "at home" appreciate our efforts.

I could give you several incidents of young men of good position at home, who, through force of circumstances and their own lack of knowledge, would have been lost altogether, had it not been for our Y.M.C.A. here; I therefore appeal to the friends of young men to help us in this effort.

Y.W.C.A. ABROAD.

The following are extracts from a letter to Mrs. H. Gardner James:—

Stockholm, April 29.

Dear Friend and Co-Worker,—During my stay in St. Petersburg I had a drawing-room meeting for ladies interested in Y.W.C.A. work, some of them belonging to the German branch. I had the pleasure of spending some hours with these German friends at one of their working parties. I had the joy to form a little Russian branch. We must pray for this little branch, because they can get no official permission to exist, and must work in secret.

In Finland it is much easier to work, so I could start one branch in Helsingfors, one in Abo, one in Tavastehuus, one in Wasa, and one in Tamvaerfors. Two of these are only for Finnish-speaking girls, but in the other places there must be two separate branches owing to the two nationalities—the Finns and the Swedes.

It was a great joy to be home again. Our young friends here begin to feel rather proud, not only of being a branch of your large Association, but also of being themselves a tree with branches now, both in Sweden, Finland and Russia. We have now two meetings a week in the poorer part of the town, more especially for factory girls; the City Mission has kindly opened their hall for this purpose.

We praise the Lord for the growth of this good and useful work, and ask Him to strengthen all his workers.—Yours very truly in Christ,

Natalie Andersson Meyerhehn.

CHURCH OF SCOTLAND FOREIGN MISSIONS.—Great blessing has lately attended the work of the Punjaub Mission. In a few months more than a hundred have come out of heathenism and been baptized. A hundred are preparing for admission to the Church, and whole villages crying out for teachers to tell them of Christ.

BIBLE STUDIES.—20.

LOT.

(1) Lot lifted up his eyes, and beheld . . . then Lot chose (Gen. xiii. 10, 11). "When the woman saw . . . that it was pleasant to the eyes . . . she took . . . and did eat, and gave also unto her husband" (Gen. iii. 6). "The lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world" (1 John ii. 16). "We walk by faith, not by sight" (2 Cor. v. 7). "He shall choose our inheritance for us" (Ps. xlvii. 4).

(2) Lot pitched his tent toward Sodom. But the men of Sodom were . . . sinners before the Lord exceedingly (Gen. xiii. 12, 13). "Go not in the way of evil men. Avoid it, pass not by it, turn from it, and pass away" (Prov. iv. 14, 15). "Abstain from all appearance of evil" (1 Thess. v. 22). "As strangers and pilgrims, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul" (1 Pet. ii. 11).

(3) Lot dwelt in Sodom . . . was taken captive . . . Abram brought again . . . Lot, and his goods (Gen. xiv. 12, 14, 16). "Better is little with the fear of the Lord than great treasure and trouble therewith" (Prov. xv. 16). "He that maketh haste to be rich shall not be unpunished" (marg.) (Prov. xxviii. 20). "Behold, I will hedge up thy way with thorns" (Hos. ii. 6). "He . . . took not warning" (Ezek. xxxiii. 5).

(4) Lot sat in the gate of Sodom (Gen. xix. 1) (place of the elders and judges of the city). "What concord hath Christ with Belial? . . . what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? . . . Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing" (2 Cor. vi. 15—17). [Abraham entertained three willing guests (Gen. xviii. 2—5). Lot two unwilling ones (xix. 1—3). The Lord stayed away.] "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God" (Matt. v. 8).

(5) Lot spake unto his sons-in-law . . . but he seemed as one that mocked (Gen. xix. 14). (Consistent walk necessary to effectual speech.) "He that saith he abideth in Him ought himself also so to walk, even as He walked" (1 John ii. 6). "Walk in wisdom towards them that are without, redeeming the time. Let your speech be alway with grace, seasoned with salt" (Col. iv. 5, 6).

(6) God remembered Abraham, and sent Lot out of the midst of the overthrow (Gen. xix. 29; 2 Pet. ii. 6—9). "Saved; yet so as by fire" (1 Cor. iii. 15). Contrast 2 Pet. i. 11—"For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

DRINK IN THE VILLAGES.

A CORRESPONDENT forwards to us the following extracts from a letter by a Christian brother who is on a visit to his native village:—

"The drink is doing terrible mischief in this neighbourhood. Among the victims are—one minister, two deacons, and several Sunday-school teachers. The question may well be asked, 'Who is safe that dabbles with it? and who without Christ can say he is safe? As Gospel temperance is spreading, the enemy is busy in these quiet country villages, where years ago no one was seen drunk from the first of January to the thirty-first of December. This very day a Christian lady told me that in the whole village she only knew of two sober young men. The women are drinking terribly. Until lately there was no policeman in the village. Now there are two. While this saddens one's heart, it makes one terribly in earnest whose privilege it is to work for the Master who has redeemed us. There is no room for half heartedness. I firmly believe we are not yet in the thick of the fight. But through Christ we shall conquer."

TRACT DISTRIBUTION DURING THE SUMMER.—The Weekly Tract Society is just now making special grants of its tracts at one-third of the published price; thus:—A parcel of tracts, containing 1000, which is usually issued at 15s., can be bought for 5s., and half the quantity for 2s. 6d. As all the tracts issued by the Society are short, pithy, four-page narratives, specially addressed to working people in simple language, tract distributors should avail themselves of the opportunity of securing early parcels while they can be obtained under this arrangement, as the number to be distributed at this rate is very limited. Application should be made to the Manager of the Weekly Tract Society, 62, Paternoster-row, London.

WORK IN FOREIGN LANDS.

As announced last week, several meetings of an interesting nature have been held at the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, for the purpose of hearing accounts of the Lord's work in foreign lands. Lord Radstock, who presided at all the gatherings, observed at the first meeting that one should seek definite and personal light from God relative to any work He might intend them to do. Doubtless much evil had been done in the mission field by unqualified labourers, as well as by the holding back of such as were fitted for it. This was corroborated by Rev. J. Hiles Hitchens, formerly of India, who said prayer was needed that God would restrain the one as well as prompt the other. His experience had taught him that unsuitable men were simply a weakness, damaging the work, and hindering better men.

Among the speakers on the first day were M. Varnier, who described his labours in Sicily, and Mr. Grant from Singapore. The Congo Mission was represented by Mr. Billington, who spoke with considerable power on "Go ye into all the world," &c., which command, said the speaker, embraced all climates. He had baptized five native converts just before leaving the Congo, and several more would follow. Colonel Paschkoff said it was a Testament given to a soldier at the Crimean War that led to the great work that has subsequently developed in Southern Russia. Mr. Reginald Radcliffe said that the promise in Isaiah, "I will pour floods on the dry ground," was fulfilled in the floods of blessing that came down upon the early Church, and in the various successive revivals of religion through outpourings of God's Spirit which have occurred on subsequent occasions, and are occurring now. Rev. W. Frith added a word on consecration to God's service.

On the second day, in the afternoon, Rev. C. G. Moore spoke of joy in God as being the secret of power, and urged the cultivation of the communion-life as the best preparation for service. He had been eleven years in China, the entrance upon which had cost him all that he held dear. God had recently answered their prayers in providing a native and his wife for Corea, and he believed that the great work of evangelising China would be done by the natives themselves. Pastor Nevius dwelt much on the use God has of late made of his own Word, apart from the voice of the living teacher. Recently he met with a case in which a man was brought to Christ eight years before he saw the face of a missionary, simply through reading a copy of the New Testament given to him by a colporteur. I have not, said the doctor, withheld any one thing from Christ for years, and He has kept back nothing from me. Nearly 1000 converts had been baptized, only twenty of whom subsequently required discipline. His advice to all who are interested in China was to pray fervently to God that He may raise up native agency.

Lord Radstock read from Acts xx., and suggested the advisability of appointing "overseers" in China as was done at Ephesus, so that evangelists might push on to the regions beyond. Mr. Paton remarked upon the demand for increased circulation of the Scriptures: when we have circulated ten millions annually, we have not then supplied even the annual increase of the population. Prayer was offered by Mr. Mathieson, Mr. Hurditch, Rev. Filmer Sulivan and Mr. Radcliffe. It was also said that none should be hindered going to China because of ignorance of the language, as there is a large English-speaking population.

The evening meeting was chiefly occupied with addresses by Mr. Judd, Mr. Guinness, Mr. Radcliffe and Mr. Varley, all of which were of deep interest. Mr. Judd spoke first, showing that in thirty years the number of Christians in China had increased from 300 to 22,000. God was wonderfully renewing primitive Christian life in these days, and personal effort was being owned to-day as, perhaps, never before, since the day when Paul went from place to place preaching the Word of Christ, "making it a point of honour" (Greek) to do this where the Gospel was not yet known, so as "not to build on another man's foundation." A soldier who heard the Gospel obtained a New Testament, studied it, was saved, made a great blessing to others and recently had the joy of baptizing twelve converts. After leaving the army an official was sent to try and get him back, but was himself overcome by the Gospel and compelled to avow himself a follower of Christ. Eventually one of his bitterest persecutors was converted, and no less than fifty persons were saved in that locality. I have trusted the Lord, continued the speaker, now for eighteen years to supply my needs, and would urge all Christians to get their souls into conscious union with Christ, and entreat Him to pour out his Spirit on the native Christians in China.

Mr. Grattan Guinness, in an able speech, setting forth the present condition of the world, including Africa with its 600 languages, and India with 2600, suggested the study of an ordinary map as a means of learning to pray. Every grandly successful mission has been a death and resurrection. Very rapid, on the other hand, was the growth of evangelism here and there: a work commenced at Marseilles only five years ago quickly extended over an area of 1000 miles, and thousands of persons were evangelised.

Mr. Radcliffe told of a signalman recently converted, who at once took steps toward going out to tell the heathen of the Saviour he had found. Mr. Henry Varley elicited from Mr. Judd that carpenters, plasterers, sempstresses, and others could probably get immediate employment if they would go, and thus earn a living, and give spare time to Christ's work. There must, however, be the fullest surrender to Him if they would secure his smile and blessing. Was it not also the case that there was too little recognition of our Lord's words: "The fields are white unto harvest." Let them seek to have an indwelling Christ, and the joy of the Lord.

This is but an imperfect sketch of two days' meetings, during which much blessing was experienced, and, we doubt not, much permanent good accomplished.

YOUNG WOMEN IN CAPE TOWN.

DEAR SIR,—Those of your readers who take any part in work among young women will be interested in the following news from Miss McGill, the hon. secretary, relative to the opening of a Y.W.C.A. at Cape Town:—

"We have much to praise for in connection with our opening meeting. The attendance was large, about three hundred were present. Rev. Andrew Murray presided, gave an address, and in prayer dedicated the building to God's service. Many of the churches were represented by their ministers, who each took a part in the meeting."

The house is the gift of Mr. Bane, in memory of two daughters who died when at school in Germany. It is valued at £1250. The following refers to the tea given after the opening of the rooms: "Truly our hearts are filled with praise, for He hath done great things for us, and is doing great things, in leading us in all the steps we have taken. How I wish you could have seen the gathering last evening. Our invitations were responded to warmly by the young people at the various places of business. Eight of us went by twos, and, when we compared notes as to the numbers who had promised to come, the result was rather appalling, in view of our limited space. Fully 200 promised to come. The rooms were filled. One of the speakers enjoyed the 'sparsely furnished house.' 'Institutions beginning in this modest way are sure to grow.' We are prepared now to receive all who will come. Some lady on the spot is what we want, and meetings and classes should be organised as soon as possible."

To these interesting details let me add that no Christian help has hitherto been given to the shop girls as a class in Cape Town. Many go out from England, and, in their friendless position, are exposed to danger and evil influences. Should any of your readers feel disposed to help us to give a fair start to this work which He has so unmistakably put into our hands, I would most gladly receive and forward their contributions to the council at Cape Town.

Yours truly, (Mrs.) M. S. OSBORN.

FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND FOREIGN MISSIONS.—Consolidation and extension, says Dr. George Smith, are the characteristics of last year's report. Old centres of work have been reinforced, and new spheres have been entered upon. The Society's revenue has been larger than in any previous year, and the resources of the Ladies' Association steadily increases.

Notes and Comments.

IN our next week's issue there will appear a portrait and sketch of Mr. Stevenson A. Blackwood. The same issue will contain full reports of the addresses at the Mildmay Conference being held this week, and will constitute a Double Number; price 2d.

With the many millions of the Queen's subjects, we heartily congratulate Her Majesty on her entrance on the fiftieth year of her reign. We trust God may hear the prayers that have gone up on her behalf, and long spare her to adorn her high position.

Sunday next is Hospital Sunday in the Metropolis. A wide-spread spirit of Christian liberality will, we hope, be shown in all our churches.

The growing wealth of the Jesuits and their enormous resources should teach lessons of foresight. The confident assertions often heard about the powerlessness of modern Popery are not wise. According to The Standard's correspondent, the Jesuits have acquired buildings, palaces, and land in one quarter of Rome which assume the importance of a little town. Their educational and propanganda edifices are assuming a colossal appearance. The Franciscans are also erecting on the Capitoline Hill a pile of buildings which will be beyond all comparison the most magnificent conventual establishment in Rome. These efforts are meant for other countries than Italy.

What are we to think of a professed Protestantism in England which makes every advance possible towards Rome? The Guardian quotes an address to his parishioners from the Rector of Coppenhall, Crewe. He tells them with pleasure that funerals may be conducted with full Catholic ceremonies. There may be six candles flanking the coffin on either side. The crucifix, and incense, symbolical of prayers for the dead, may be used. Dismay about these things there need not be; but utter unconcern as to their intention and direction may prove the gravest of mistakes.

We quote the following from a paper read at the Southport Evangelical Conference by a Cambridge clergyman. It puts concisely what applies to customs in other churches as well as those referred to:—

> What could be more thoroughly deplorable than the spectacle which met them every day of churches in which the sermon was regarded as a mere adjunct to an elaborate musical service and dwarfed down to the briefest possible limits; in which not the clergyman, but the organist and the choir, practically ruled how the service was to be performed; where the daily service or early celebration was gone through in a cut-and-dried formal way without the least regard to the actual needs or conditions of the parish. They must in such a case be led to the conclusion that the world had come into the Church, and that Church feeling meant little more than a refined paganism—mere nature worship—under a Christian garb.

At the same Conference another of the clergy cautioned against a bitterness in controversy which would justify the words of a Lancashire unbeliever: "I knew they were Christians because they quarelled so." A third speaker maintained that £3000 a year should suffice for a bishop, and that the surplus of the revenue should help poor livings and curates.

In the Congregationalist there is an editorial which seems to reflect on the late action of the Bradford laymen in the inquiries they have made respecting the non-attendance of working-men on Divine worship. It is very true that other classes are absentees, but is it not fitting that employers should ask why their own workmen form so large a class of these? And would it not be opposed to all the principles of Congregationalists to discourage the action of laymen on such an important question? If they wound they are the wounds of friends.

Some time ago we called attention to the large sums expended by many religious and charitable societies in the collection of funds. An illustration of our comments comes to us from Ireland, in the shape of a statement that, whilst the contributions for the past year to the chief missionary societies amounted to something over sixteen thousand pounds, the cost of collection was over three thousand pounds, or twenty per cent. of the entire sum. With reference to this fact it has been suggested that the various missionary societies might have their offices amalgamated so as to reduce the expenses of collection and account keeping, but it is open to question if it would not be better to amalgamate at least some of the societies engaged in the common object of enlarging the boundaries of Christ's kingdom.

In these days, when the wisdom of utilising lay resources in Church work is very readily admitted on almost all sides, might it not be possible in this matter to fall back upon the reserve forces? There must be numbers of Christian men who willingly would voluntarily conduct much of the correspondence of charitable or religious societies, so as to save to the association the cost of expensive clerical secretaries. We know of one case in which the financial business of a large institution, entirely dependent upon voluntary subscriptions, is admirably managed by an earnest Christian worker without fee or reward. The chaplain also is a volunteer, willingly taking the duties in addition to those of his parish. These examples are worthy of imitation, and if they were followed in other instances the result would be beneficial, not only to some of our public charities and religious societies, but also to some Christian men and women whom God has blessed with means of support, and who would be better, mentally and physically, if they were fully employed in active labour.

In a paper recently read before one of the societies connected with the University of Edinburgh, one of the city missionaries, Mr. James Fairbairn, stated that the haunts of vice and disease in the Scottish Metropolis are increasing. The Modern Athens, he said, contains more than 14,000 rooms, each occupied by a family, or by families, in some cases no less than four families, or twenty-four persons, occupying the one chamber. These places are quite without sanitary arrangements of any kind, and it is impossible to contemplate without a shudder what must be the effect upon morality, as well as upon health, of such a terrible condition of things. In the kitchen of one lodging-house no less than 113 persons were found huddled together. It is asserted that the owner of the vile place is an elder of a Christian Church, and that, after employing a deputy to work the concern, he clears ten pounds per week from the property.

Whoever this elder may be, he must have a very singular idea of Christianity, and, as a "Housing Committee" has been formed in connection with the Social Reform Society of the University, we are sure our readers will rejoice with us should action be taken to bring very practically before such property owners some of the teachings of Christ with regard to duty towards the poor. No doubt, if the earnest Christians in Edinburgh were to band themselves together in the resolve to assist in lifting the poor from these poisonous dens, they would soon find that they had been engaged in removing the barriers which at present in such localities so effectively stand in the way of the missionary and evangelist.

An article headed "Catholic Higher Education in England," which appeared in The Dublin Review, the leading organ of the Roman Catholics, has the following remarkable words:—

> We are far from meaning that ignorance is the Catholic youth's best preservative against intellectual danger, but it is a very powerful one nevertheless, and those who deny this are but inventing a theory in the very teeth of manifest facts. A Catholic destitute of intellectual tastes, whether in a higher or a lower rank, may, probably enough, be tempted to idleness, frivolity, gambling, sensuality, but in none but the very rarest cases will he be tempted to that which (in the Catholic view) is an immeasurably greater calamity than any of these, or all put together, viz., deliberate doubt on the truth of his religion. It is simply undeniable, we say, that the absence of higher education is a powerful preservative against apostasy, and those who watch over souls will reasonably refuse to bear a part in withdrawing that preservative.

How far this teaching is followed in Ireland is shown by the fact that at the recent election the number of illiterate voters in Roman Catholic districts amounted in some instances to fifty per cent., as was the case in South Cork and South Kerry. In the northern counties, however, where Protestantism bears the sway, the illiterates were singularly few, North Down, for instance, having only 161 out of a total of 7199. These figures, which are taken from the Parliamentary return recently presented to the House of Commons, speak for themselves, and show clearly how much the Romish priests, who have had in Ireland ample opportunities of affording education to their people, are afraid of light and truth.

Mr. Moody has again issued his invitation to the Conference for Bible study and upon methods of work in Home and Foreign evangelisation, and for the promotion of individual consecration to Christ, which will be held in Northfield, Mass., for ten days from August 4 to August 15 inclusive. Most of those who have been present as speakers, teachers, and singers in past years may be again expected. Rev. Marcus Rainsford, of Belgrave Church, S.W., hopes to be present this year. A general invitation is extended to all ministers and Christian workers in sympathy with the object of the Conference. Mr. Moody cordially invites any British Christians travelling in the United States or Canada to attend the Conference. We can confidently say, from personal experience of past Conferences, that a rich blessing is in store for any of our countrymen and women who may be so fortunate as to be able to visit Northfield during these ten days. Let them by no means miss it, even if they have to shorten their programme of sightseeing. Those intending to be present should communicate beforehand with Mr. D. L. Moody, Northfield, Mass.

HEALTH AND EDUCATION among the Surrey Hills.—Christian Home School for Young Ladies, conducted by Miss Shrimpton and Miss Butler Gerds. Preparation for Public Examinations.—Chertsey House, Red Hill.

TO GODLY PARENTS.—The undermentioned (who is in no way connected with the school) is desirous of recommending an old-established YOUNG GENTLEMEN'S BOARDING SCHOOL, DELIGHTFULLY SITUATED ON HIGH GROUND, WITH VIEWS OF THE SEA, on the South Coast, a short run from London, in which a thorough and a first-class Education is given, based upon the teaching of the Holy Scriptures.

It is one of the few remaining schools in which the power of the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ influences the hearts and conduct of the pupils.

The success, happiness, and training of the Boys have been so remarkable in this school that a BOOK OF TESTIMONIALS GIVEN BY THE PARENTS, together with the papers of Examinations passed and Honours gained, should be read to appreciate results so unusual. Two Vice-Chancellors have placed their wards as pupils in the school. Reference kindly permitted to Dr. Thorn, Paddington, London.

M. LE PASTEUR ROBERT TISSOT à Neuchatel (Suisse), reçoit dans sa famille quelques jeunes gens en pension.

FOXE'S BOOK OF MARTYRS.

A Complete and Authentic Account of the Lives, Sufferings, and Triumphant Deaths of Primitive and Protestant Martyrs in all parts of the World.

By John Foxe. With Twelve full-page Illustrations. Complete in one handsome volume, cloth boards, 1083 pages, 10s. 6d.

"Messrs. Morgan & Scott deserve most cordial thanks for the production of this noble edition of a noble book; and we are specially pleased to observe that the aid of pictorial art has been invoked to attract to the volume the attention of the young. Only let this book have a place in every British home, and we may smile at the efforts of Rome and of the Anglican ritualists to undo the blessed work that was achieved for our nation and the world by the thousands of faithful witnesses to the truth who, in dark days of priestly denomination, resisted unto death."—Christian Leader.

Rome, The Murderess.

A Four-page Tractate suited for general distribution.

This Tractate affords new and powerful evidence of the unalterable character of the Church of Rome. The quotations prove that Romanists are as cruel, persecuting, and blood-thirsty as of olden time.

The tenth annual Believers' Meeting for Bible Study will be held at Niagara, Ontario, July 22—28. The topics of study will relate to the Person and Work and Offices of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The evangelistic movement among students has now extended to Wales, where it appears to have already taken deep root. A deputation from the Edinburgh Students' Holiday Mission, accompanied by Professor Henry Drummond, has been visiting some of the Welsh Colleges, with the most gratifying success. We learn that the movement has been especially deep and real at Aberystwith, where the special efforts are still proceeding. We again wish a hearty God-speed to this work, which is fraught with such important issues for the future weal of our own and other lands.

"A Misunderstood Parable" is the title of a paper in this month's Expositor. The writer, Dr. E. R. Conder, gives what he calls the key to the deep meaning of our Lord's words in Matt. xiii. 33. "Leaven," in doing its work, perishes; so, it is argued, does the agency by which God carries on his work among men; it is a ministry which is perishable. We are not in agreement with this view, but it is noteworthy that an accomplished Biblical scholar avers that in every other instance in which the term "leaven" is used in both Testaments it is used in an evil sense, and Dr. Conder is not surprised that "able and learned students of Scripture have maintained that what is represented in this parable is the corruption, not the growth, of the kingdom of Christ."

We should hardly like, without very wide limitations, to apply to all French art the remark of the celebrated Frenchman, Diderot, that a painter's work is deteriorated by his life; but a visit to the Salon in Paris is quite sufficient to satisfy any pure-minded and thoughtful person that scores of the paintings upon the walls of the present Exhibition must necessarily be the work of men, if not of debauched lives, of, at least, depraved imagination. The vile nudities, without even the apology of mythological titles, representing as they do the best work of that "fleshly school" which is doing to French art similar injury to that which was done to English literature a few years ago by the sensual effusions of a band of carnal worshippers of lust, can have been produced only by the exercise of licentious fancy, and they appeal to tastes as vicious and depraved as are those of the men who, in producing such paintings, degrade art from its proper noble position and functions to the service of the charnel house. A populace which has sunk so low as to accept work of this abominable kind as art must of necessity require from time to time the purification of a baptism of fire, such a mistake, or such a choice, being evidence of that degradation of the individual character which inevitably culminates in national shame.

The Romish Apostasy does not hesitate to claim exceptional power and influence as not merely a regulator but a creator of morality of life, and, as to a great extent she substitutes works and penances for the finished sacrifice of Christ, it is difficult to see how she could avoid making such a claim. In Paris, however, as in almost every other Continental city where Rome rules, the influence would appear to be infinitesimal, for in nearly all the leading streets photographs of the vicious pictures in the Salon are openly exhibited and sold, shops which ought to be respectable from their position being almost phosphorescent with this garniture of the grave, as sickening in its repulsive "realism" as is the work of the leading French novelists. Yet there is no outcry from the pulpit, and no protest from those who urge that they are the special promoters and guardians of morality.

There are those who do not hesitate to urge that in these matters we are too prudish in England, and that there can be no high art without the glorification of the nude form. We do not agree with them, and the lovely landscapes and pathetic bits of pure family life which adorn the Salon are a satisfactory answer to all who would argue that vice is necessary in the development of virtue; but, if we are wrong, and they are right, it would be better for us that art should perish altogether than that its growth should be accompanied by such a decline in national morality as would be inevitable were these opinions of the "fleshly school" ever to be accepted as correct dicta.

ORPHANS' HOME, SOUTHWARK.

The annual meeting of this Institution was held on the 14th instant, at Westminster Chapel. The chair was taken and the report read by Rev. Henry Simon. After prayer by Rev. W. Glenny Crory, Mr. Clarke, of the Sunday School Union, addressed the meeting. Ninety of the orphans were present. They were feasted with buns and milk, and decorated with little bouquets of flowers, before the meeting, by some of the kind friends. They all looked bright and well, and listened attentively to a very interesting address from Rev. B. Waugh, who knows so well how to gain and to keep the attention of children.

Rev. Mr. Norris, of Kensington, Rev. Newman Hall, and Mr. J. A. Smith also spoke, advocating eloquently the claims of the Home; and the choir sang pieces at intervals. The report told of steady increase in the work, and of help which had often come most opportunely in time of trial. Copies of the report may be had at the office of The Christian, or at the Home, West-square, Southwark, S.E.

Requests for Prayer.

That God would guide and bless the efforts to get England delivered from the temptations of the Sunday liquor traffic.——For blessing on special services at Greenwich, to July 4.——That two sisters may find a sphere in which they may work for God's glory, and be greatly used by Him.——A widow asks prayer on behalf of her son, two daughters, their husbands and families.——That a great blessing may rest on a three weeks' mission at Uxbridge, conducted by Mr. G. Hefford, from June 19.——For Gospel meeting in a tent at Buckland Newton, Dorset, by Mr. John Elliott.——For special mission services in a tent at South Norwood.

STRANGERS' REST.—Whit Monday was a busy day. A free tea was announced. When the time came, the room upstairs, where the urns were steaming on the loaded tables, was soon overcrowded with willing guests. Mr. Kirkham, Mr. R. Paton, Mr. Isaac, and others addressed the gathering. An hour was afterwards spent in the open-air. Then workers and men dispersed into the English, German, and Swedish rooms, while the Christians gathered together to wait upon God in prayer, and the study of his Word.

LESSOUTO, S. AFRICA.—In the Journal des Missions, M. Dieterlen, one of the French missionaries, gives a graphic account of the "Pitso," held March 11, in Lessouto, at which the rebel chief, Massoupa, gave in his submission. All went off well, but there are dark spots on the horizon—if the chiefs agree with the Government, they are far from agreeing with each other. Letsie, the supreme and only chief of the Bassoutos is getting old, and already his successor is talked of. "We are not, however," says M. Dieterlen, "much disquieted. We continue our work in spite of all, living from day to day, come what will, and, though the future threatens, we utilise the present, and are grateful that we have been enabled to work up to this hour, notwithstanding the great political difficulties around us."

"THE MORNING COMETH."

"The morning cometh!" Soul-inspiring message!
 Sent forth in love from heaven's far-distant height,
To kindle hope in men grown faint and weary,
 Those anxious watchers through the cold dark night.

They need the hope; for long o'er earth hath rested
 That awful darkness, murky with its sin,
Whilst cries most pitiful have sadly echoed:
 "When will God's sunlight once again come in?

"Faint gleams we see, and then the clouds but deepen,
 The shadows gather darkly as before;
When will the everlasting doors be opened,
 And Jesus be our Light for evermore?"

Peace, peace, sad hearts! The morning surely cometh,
 The hours fly fast, the dawn is very near;
Perchance before ye think, those doors will open,
 And Christ the King of Glory will appear.

Yet listen: men who wait, these words hear also:
 That morning of God's everlasting light
Will bring to some a darkness deep and awful,
 A heart-despairing, agonising night.

Then, whilst ye wait and watch, be working also,
 Give warning of that darkness drawing nigh;
Oh, tell of Him whose beams are life-creating,
 That Sun who shineth yet in Mercy's sky!

Charlotte Murray.

MISS MITTENDORFF and the ORPHANS.

Our good sister, Miss Mittendorff, has, we fear, been experiencing the truth of the proverb, "Out of sight, out of mind." Her sylvan retreat at Clayton House, Epsom, is no doubt a capital place, from the standpoint of health, for the rearing of her young orphan brood; but Epsom is a good way out of town, and in these days of greatly multiplied societies, any institution that settles down in a country village is apt to get lost in the crowd—not lost to the Divine Father in heaven, but to his representatives on the earth, most of whom are very human indeed, and need to be reminded by some tangible token of their privileges and responsibilities.

We think, therefore, that Miss Mittendorff and her counsellors have acted discreetly in securing a London branch, where she can, so to speak, place herself in evidence, and where sympathisers can get information about her interesting family without a journey to Epsom town. The new premises are at 2, Aberdeen-place, Maida-hill, and here, last Friday evening, a little company of faithful friends met for the "house-warming," as one of them expressed it, or as Miss Mittendorff herself put it, for the dedication of every nook and corner of every room to the service and glory of God. Among those present were Mr. Denham Smith, Mr. Joseph Weatherley, Dr. Habershon, Dr. Picard, Dr. Partridge, Rev. J. Gossett Tanner (whose church stands immediately opposite), Rev. M. N. Walde (his curate), and others. All these gentlemen had some word of hearty sympathy or cheer or counsel to offer to Miss Mittendorff with respect to this new departure. It was explained that at Aberdeen-place the elder girls would sojourn for a shorter or longer period before entering on the domestic service for which they are so carefully trained. Ladies requiring servants can call and see them. It is hoped, indeed, that the good work of caring for these orphan girls will be helped on by this new branch in many ways.

Not the least interesting part of the homely proceedings of Friday evening were the conversational little addresses of Miss Mittendorff herself, when she told us some of God's wondrous dealings with her and her orphans. The trial of our sister's faith in the matter of daily supplies may be a profitable experience in some respects; still we cannot but think that if she would now and then, through our own columns or some other channel, tell her friends of the needs of the Home, God would approve her work as well as her faith, and thus save her from the mental anxiety through which she has often to pass. To our readers we would say that it seems to us the quiet, unobtrusive labours of godly women like Miss Mittendorff deserve to be well kept in mind and generously upheld.

WHITSUNTIDE ON WANSTEAD FLATS.

We have tried tract distributing, going to Brighton and other places where our teeming population rush on Bank Holidays; but this Whit Monday an opportunity offered to visit the borders of Epping Forest, an open space where we heard that twenty thousand went on Easter Monday.

One of Henry Moorhouse's Bible carriages was at the disposal of a few of the Harley House students. We had much prayer on the previous day for the effort, and a more whole-hearted little band, looking direct to the Lord step by step, could not be found. For the guidance of others on such occasions, we state that on Saturday night two cases were packed—one with a thousand Testaments, the other with back numbers of illustrated periodicals, text-cards, written, printed, or illuminated, copies of "Incidents in an Eventful Life," and small Gospel books.

The shelves of the carriage, on Monday morning by twelve o'clock, were laden with these precious volumes, and we, with hearts filled with but one object, to get the people to buy them, stood ready to mingle with the teeming thousands still pouring forth from London upon the open space called Wanstead Flats. One of the students prayed heartily unto the Lord; then, with our small harmonium, we soon gathered a motley crowd. Many a Sunday scholar and blue ribboner was there; many a bright little fellow, able to repeat a verse of Scripture, rewarded by a text-card. Others were ready to sing a hymn or recite a Band of Hope piece, and these little unexpected helpers became our errand-boys, to fetch and carry the Testaments and papers for the workers. The brethren continued the preaching from the carriage, and the selling of the Scriptures went on briskly, and in a very quiet way, by taking the Testaments straight to the pleasure-seekers among the shows and amusements.

A little chaff met us here and there, but not one word of discouragement or insolence during the whole day. A few men calling themselves infidels were quietly conversed with by the helpers. The plan of catechising a man on 1 Peter ii. 24 secured a large crowd, and when a confession of love to Christ was asked by raising the hand, poor sad-looking faces, as well as well-dressed persons and young children, thus testified; we felt the Great Heart of Love was glad to behold this little company of believers amid the revelry going on around. A policeman said to us that he was astonished we had never come before. How busy the devil is, and how cowardly Christ's followers are. No missiles were hurled at us as some anticipated.

The individual work by bright young Christians full of love to Jesus was the charm, and the power was his. We were but trembling novices seeking in a new way to get the record of the Lord's own wondrous love to us into the hands of others by a purchase, believing thereby it would be the more valued. Our hopes and prayers were more than realised and over 1000 Testaments were sold; to Him be all the praise.

The students were greatly encouraged and they hope to go forth with the Bible carriage through their holiday months in and about this great and wicked city. The masses at home are utterly heathen and have not the Scriptures. Who will assist these earnest young men by prayer, fellowship and practical help, to circulate 100,000 Testaments in our large market-places and fairs where the people meet? Annie Macpherson.

THE LONDON MEDICAL MISSION (47, Endell-street, St. Giles') have issued a very bright Occasional Paper. Dr. Pring says the number of cases of destitution coming under their notice have been very great; again and again they have been brought face to face with families having neither food nor fuel, and but scantily supplied with clothing. But by the aid of kind friends it had been their privilege to help these. "Nurse's Note-book" tells of souls won for Christ, of poor, weary ones opening their hearts to that great, all-satisfying love of his, and resting on the everlasting arms. Then we are carried to Holiday House, away down in Kent, where the little ones exchange the streets and leads of the houses in the once "verie pleasant village" of St. Giles' for a home on a breezy ridge overlooking miles and miles of lovely country, with such air and sweet-scented gorse as are seldom found within an hour's ride of London. During eight years, 2695 children have tasted the delight of this Holiday House. Funds are needed that more children may be sent at once, and for the renewing of the furniture, now thoroughly worn out.

HOME OF INDUSTRY.

The workers' meeting took place as usual, on Wednesday, June 16. In the early part of the evening, Miss Macpherson asked Mr. Paul Askenasi to answer a few questions relative to his work among the Jews, the Saturday evening meetings for them at the Home of Industry having been signally owned and blessed of God.

Miss Child spoke briefly: (1) of the Jews at the "Welcome Home;" (2) of the sailors, many of whom were often sick, owing to exposure, &c. The Flower Mission workers might not know what a good work they were doing among the sailors. Ratcliff Highway, said Miss Child, was a most blessed place to live in; its surroundings were sinful, but it gave blessed opportunities for service.

Five students from Harley House were asked to narrate their experience of Whit Monday, on Wanstead Flats, with a Bible carriage. Their success, they attributed to prayer, and the unity among all who worked with them. They propose taking the Gospel van in the country for six weeks, looking to God for a great blessing.

Miss Macpherson spoke a little upon the work of the Home, expressing gratitude for the safe arrival of the late party in Canada, after some days of great suspense, owing to the vessel being overdue, detained by fog. During the evening a cablegram was received with the announcement that fifty of the children had been placed out. Some children were present, as usual—the latest rescues. Much prayer was offered for them and their little companions in Canada.

Mr. Charles Inglis gave a helpful address upon the sevenfold privileges of the believer, as given in John's Gospel, the keynote of the address being John xx. 17.

THE ANGLO-INDIAN EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

At a meeting held at Mildmay, on the evening of June 11, many interesting particulars were given respecting the work of this important but little known Society. General Sir Robert Phayre was to have presided, but was prevented from doing so by the news of his son's death in Burmah, which had reached him that very morning. We had, however, with us the veteran missionary, Dr. Murray Mitchell, who originated the Mission; Revs. J. Fordyce and G. D. E. St. Dalmas, and Surgeon-Major Pringle, M.D.

The object of this Society is to bring the Gospel to the large and increasing European and Eurasian population in India, whose spiritual needs are very great. The Indian Government merely provides chaplains for its own servants, civil and military, and this, as a rule, only in the larger and more important stations. There is, however, besides these, a large class of Europeans and people of mixed parentage who do not come within the chaplain's province, even at the principal centres; and there are many more at the smaller stations employed on the various railways and other works, or as clerks in the Government offices; and still in addition to these there are very many isolated Europeans, like the tea-planters of Assam and Cachar, or the coffee-planters of South India, scattered up and down throughout this vast empire.

Dr. Pringle assured us that the moral and spiritual condition of many of the Europeans in India is simply deplorable. Mr. Fordyce has been engaged in this difficult but important work for fourteen years, during the summer ministering with much acceptance at the Union Church, Simla, and in the cold season seeking to evangelise the neglected and isolated portion of the European and Eurasian population. Having been forbidden to resume his labours in India, Mr. Fordyce is now secretary to the Society, while the arrangements of the work in India are under the supervision of Mr. St. Dalmas, who, with other evangelists, seeks to bring the Gospel to the Europeans and Eurasians throughout the country. In this work they have shown much zeal, and have had much blessing. How great the need of not only maintaining but strengthening this effort may be seen from the fact that these evangelists have districts stretching over, on an average, 1500 miles of rail. It is greatly to be desired that the number of workers should be so increased that none of them have more than 500 miles to superintend.

Further information about this work may be had from Rev. John Fordyce, 33, Sutherland-place Bayswater, W. T. S.

EVANGELISTIC MISSION.

The meetings on Whit Monday, at Kilburn Hall, were marked by large attendances, instructive addresses, and a spirit of fervent praise and prayer. In the afternoon, Mr. C. Russell Hurditch read Cant. i. 7, 8, and Ps. xxiii. Our whole life, he said, should be a continual overflowing by the inflowing of God's Spirit. Many persons and places were mentioned for prayer.

Mr. George Hucklesby read Luke ii. 36—38, in connection with Ps. xxiii. Simeon shows Christ as everything to the believer. Anna shows what believers should be for Christ, while waiting to enter the bright heavenly home, not as visitors but as dwellers, such as was Anna in the earthly temple. We have the continuous example of Christ Himself for a life of dependence upon God. Lord Radstock spoke of waiting upon God. Hurry always indicates a fleshly state of mind. The message and the time for its delivery must be of God. In waiting before God, fleshly impulses wither away. We are not required to be abounding in work for the Lord so much as abounding in the work of the Lord; we must be in the mount of communion in order to build all things according to God's pattern.

At the evening meeting Mr. Lear, of Cheltenham, and Mr. S. Trevor Francis briefly addressed the assembly. Mr. Henry Varley said the Lord's prayer, "Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," will not have its fulfilment in the millennial age, but in eternity proper. The characteristics of the times are the opposite of Titus ii. 11; but there is to be a glorious harvest of souls for Christ, ere the saints meet Him in the air. In the millennial age, the hiding of facts will be impossible, and sin shall not be popular as it is now. There will be no room for scepticism, when He comes to make this disordered earth blossom as the garden of the earth. Dr. Owles referred to various Scriptures showing that Christ is the centre of the purposes of God. Mr. H. Grattan Guinness said, in connection with the subject of present-day scepticism, it might strengthen faith to point out that the more we study Paul's conversion, character, and testimony, the more evident is it that he is thoroughly trustworthy. Sincerity is stamped upon his fourteen epistles. He got nothing but persecution for his teaching. He resisted falsehood; struggled for truth and righteousness; was full of sympathy, uprightness, and rationality; was not carried away by creeds and visions; and argues with the Jew from the Bible, and with the Gentile from nature, with matchless wisdom and strength. Let us not only be convinced that the Scriptures are God's Word, but let us use them, remembering that our Lord's return is near at hand.

MR. HENRY THORNE AT BOLTON.

A very blessed mission, conducted by Mr. Henry Thorne, under the auspices of the local Y.M.C.A., has just been concluded at Bolton, Lancashire. Noon meetings for prayer were held in the Y.M.C.A. rooms. The afternoon Bible readings were most interesting, and especially edifying to Christians. God was with us most manifestly; there were inquirers at every Gospel meeting.

As an evidence of the united character of the mission, we were favoured one evening with the presence of four Episcopal clergymen, two of whom gave testimonies in the after-meeting; on two occasions, also, the Salvation Army came to help the work. The presence of God was powerfully felt in the after-meetings. Many backsliders have been reclaimed, and wavering ones established, beside a bountiful harvest of new converts, many of them being young men and women. A very helpful Gospel dialogue was conducted by Rev. W. S. Standen and Mr. Thorne in one of the after-meetings. Open-air meetings were held both before and after the evening services, by which many heard the Word.

The Praise-meeting held on Wednesday last was a season of great rejoicing, and showed in some measure an abundance of the harvest of blessing reaped during the mission. The most gratifying feature is that the friends have determined that the end of the mission shall be the beginning of more earnest and energetic work for the Lord Jesus. J. E. P.

TAKE AWAY THE BIBLE, and you have taken away the glory of European art, you have destroyed the foundation of her fairest and noblest architecture, you have robbed the world of the inspiration of its sweetest music and its most enduring song.—Rev. G. S. Barrett.

A MISSIONARY BREAKFAST.

The Annual Missionary Breakfast convened by Pastor Frank White was held at Powis Hall, Westbourne-park, on Whit Monday. A substantial repast was provided, at which the opportunity for Christian converse was evidently much enjoyed. Rev. H. Dening delivered a stirring address from the words "Thy kingdom come," and suggested the propriety of practically following up this daily prayer by wrestling, warning, working, and waiting. A zealous advocate for India was found in Mrs. Ellis, who touched many hearts by her brief sketches of zenana life among the women of Calcutta. Houses were continually being opened, and a vast deal more visitation could be done if there were others to aid her. Mr. Horace A. Randle, speaking for China, gave a most judicious and calm survey of the work. There are still 1200 towns in China where not one missionary is to be found. It must not be supposed the Chinese converts were above the ordinary type. Opium smoking was, perhaps, their greatest obstacle, an instance being furnished in the case of a man who came to him imploring his aid, and said, "Do save me from this opium smoking; I have sold my wife and my son to buy opium, and the rest I must soon sell if I can't be cured." No less than a hundred thousand suicides occur annually through this vice. On the other hand, there is greater hope for China to-day than ever before; already the Gospel has been proclaimed throughout the length and breadth of the empire.

Dr. Murray Mitchell thought it possible that by the end of this century no foreign missionaries would be needed to carry on the work in Japan. But in India the need is so pressing, and the field so vast, that we could at the present time do with a thousand more Christian women, and find work for them all. Miss Boyd gave instances of good that had come to English families in China through missionary influence, and fervently besought every Christian present to be ready to go forth into the harvest field whenever God might direct.

It was suggested that many distant workers would be greatly encouraged by letters from friends; and Mr. White urged the circulation of missionary literature among our young people more largely. It was stated that the Gospel has found its way into the palace at Pekin, one of the princesses taking a lively interest in the work, and reading God's Word among the members of the Royal household.

GLASGOW Y.M.C.A.—On Tuesday, June 8, the members of the Tuesday Evening Bible-class issued invitation cards to young men to come to a praise and testimony meeting. Fully two hundred and fifty were present. For an hour the young men testified to what the Lord had done for them. Many of these testimonies were very striking. Fourteen young men spoke for the first time, and told the story of their conversion. At the close of the meeting twelve rose up for prayer. During the whole winter there has been much blessing, and hundreds of young men have been led to the Saviour.

BAAKLEEN, LEBANON, SYRIA.—At the united request of the very poor Druse inhabitants, the "John Wilson Memorial Schools" were re-opened last August, by the Local Government order, in the name of the "English Committee," under the care of the American missionaries of the district, for the sake of economical efficiency. There are over two hundred children in attendance, under six teachers. Funds are required to carry them on. There are no other schools in the place, and failing their adequate maintenance, the Jesuits are ready to step in and occupy this interesting field of usefulness. (Mrs.) E. Wilson Melville, Hon. Sec.

DISTRESS IN IRELAND.—Sir,—I wish to return my hearty thanks to those who so liberally responded to the appeal in your columns for the fund for providing distressed workers in Ireland with aid and materials. If your readers will now give me orders for any work they may require, it will be the truest charity. Some specimens are to be seen at the G. F. S. stall at the Soho Bazaar, and also at Miss Pridham's Repository, Millman-street, Bath, and they take orders for work. Lace for wedding presents, children's dresses, underclothing, every kind of plain and fancy work can be executed, and orders will be gratefully received by Yours faithfully, (Mrs.) Mary Power Lalor.

JUVENILE EMIGRATION TO CANADA.—The Beaver Line steamer Lake Superior takes out to Quebec another batch of youthful emigrants, consisting of 200 boys from Dr. Barnardo's Homes, and 150 boys and girls from Mr. Middlemore's Home in Birmingham. Mr. Middlemore accompanies his children to Canada to superintend the placing of them in situations. He stated that, from reports he had received, he expected immediately on their arrival to have places for every child, the demand being so great. The character and conduct of each boy and girl had been carefully inquired into, with a view of making them citizens of whom Canada might be proud. Certainly, judging from their physique, they were all that could be desired, and will receive a hearty welcome in Canada. It was a noteworthy fact that all the children wore the blue ribbon.

GLASGOW Y.W.C.A.

On Thursday, June 10, plans were passed by the Dean of Guild Court for building premises for this Association. The site is at 80, Bath-street, at present known as Blair's Hotel. £7000 has been paid for the ground, and the work of pulling down the block will speedily be commenced. On the ground floor there will be a large refreshment and reading room; between the front and back buildings, a hall capable of holding about 400 persons; accommodation will be provided for the extensive work of the registry office; and there will also be waiting-rooms, parlours, and bedrooms for forty young women employed in business houses in the city, and a home for servants who are looking out for situations.

The work of the Association has been most successful during the ten years of its existence, and it is expected, when the new premises are completed, that with increased accommodation more blessing will attend the efforts of those who are working among our young women. £13,000 is to be expended on the work, and fully £4000 is required to open free of debt. Subscriptions will be most thankfully received by the hon. secretary, Mrs. W. M. Oatts, 33, Berkeley-terrace, Glasgow.

ENGLISH GIRLS ABROAD.

May I request our country people, who are about to spend a few weeks abroad, kindly to take a few of our cards (which we shall gladly send to any address), to give to any English girl who may need a friend?

Travelling from Paris the other day, we entered into conversation with a young person, whose mistress lives in London, and with whom she travels several months during the year. On asking her how she spent her Sundays abroad, she exclaimed, "I never know that it is Sunday from the time I leave England. My mistress goes to parties just the same as on any other day, and gives them too. I don't like to think of God when I am abroad." "But," we replied, "God thinks of you." She gratefully accepted one of our cards, and promised to come to the Bible-readings at our Y.W.C A. the next time she remained in Paris, and to tell other maids whom she knew to be in the same position. Giving one to another, who was evidently strapping up her mistress's rugs, at a railway station, she burst into tears!

One of the members of our Association for the Continent of Europe told me that a young governess, after teaching English in the family with whom she lived for several months, was left at a large central station in France, where they had to change trains, on the platform, without money or address, simply with her luggage. This was evidently premeditated, as her luggage had only been booked to that station. She was young, inexperienced, entirely without resources, and knew very little French. Ada M. Leigh.

WESLEYANS IN FRANCE.—The twenty-third Conference of the French Wesleyan Methodists was began at Nîmes on June 1. Revs. W. Gibson and G. W. Olver were the English delegates. The question of increased evangelistic work, especially in large cities, was discussed, and many speakers dwelt on the urgent need for more spiritual power, while all expressed an earnest desire to rely more entirely on God, and to devote themselves more faithfully to his work.—Evangéliste.

CERNE ABBAS, DORSET.—A three weeks' tent mission has been conducted in this little village by Mr. John Elliott, of the Evangelisation Society. Favoured with splendid weather, the tent has been crowded, although there are but a few hundred inhabitants in the village. Numbers have attended who have not been known to enter a place of worship for many years. They feel at home under the canvas, and do not mind going in their working clothes. The most earnest attention has been paid to the Gospel declared, and God's presence and power have been realised at every service.

REVIVAL IN NEWFOUNDLAND.—Rev. G. P. Story, Catalina, writes to The Methodist Recorder:—We have had a glorious work of grace. For many years Catalina has been regarded as one of the hardest fields within the bounds of this Conference. After a faithful Sabbath day's labour in the month of February, during which the congregations were exhorted to come to immediate decision for Christ, many went home from the services deeply wounded by the Spirit's sword, and at a cottage prayer-meeting the following night seven persons stood up requesting prayer on their behalf. The work began to spread, and every night found sinners coming to the Lord. In addition to the regular services in the church we have utilised the homes of our people, which were gladly opened for prayer, and thus have been able to reach a certain class who might not have been found inside the doors of a Methodist sanctuary. There are many interesting cases of conversion. One pleasing feature of the revival is the conversion of children.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

In the House of Commons, the Intoxicating Liquors (Sale to Children) Bill has passed its third reading.

A branch of the British Medical Temperance Association has been formed at Belfast for the North of Ireland.

In India temperance work amongst the soldiers has suffered a little owing to changes consequent on the Burmese expedition.

In Burmah a cheap but very destructive spirit is made by the natives. It is feared our troops may be induced to drink it.

In the Bahama Islands a recent attempt to legalise the manufacture of rum was defeated through the action of temperance friends.

Mrs. Temple, wife of the Bishop of London, recently had a most interesting gathering of juvenile abstainers at the Palace, Fulham.

A Local Option Convention was lately held at Lynchburg, Virginia, to organise against the liquor traffic in view of the next election.

At the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland, Professor Charteris strongly argued that the Church should provide counteractives to the public-house.

On the temperance question the present shortlived Parliament has shown itself tolerably sound. It is for the electors to see that the next is at least not less so.

At the Liverpool Assizes, Mr. Justice Grantham said publicans who serve drunken men with intoxicating liquor should be severely dealt with. Imprisonment might be tried.

At the annual meeting of the Massachuset's Law and Order League, General Woodford, formerly Prosecuting Government Lawyer in New York, said liquor was responsible for three-fourths of the crime and pauperism of that city.

In The Alliance News it is pointed out that in the late General Election the average majority of 124 members was only 139. The moral is, that in many constituencies temperance voters can turn the scale, and should make their power felt.

The friends of Rev. Dr. Kirk Glasgow, are promoting a testimonial for his benefit. For more than fifty years Dr. Kirk has been the unselfish friend of temperance and of Christian philanthropy generally. He is over seventy-two years of age.

Lieut.-General Fielder, M.P., opening a Temperance Club at Blackburn, said "the club system of England, where intoxicants were sold, was a crying shame. The reason so many coffee-houses did not pay was they sold such bad stuff."

The International Conference on the liquor traffic in the North Sea has been opened at The Hague. M. van Karnebeek, Minister for Foreign Affairs, said the object they had in view was to establish order and justice among the fishermen, to raise their morals, and save them from perdition, by putting an end to the abuses engendered by the traffic in spirituous liquors, especially that carried on by the "copers."

WESLEYAN LADY STUDENTS.—It is proposed to open a Home under Wesleyan management, but unsectarian, for young ladies who wish to study or train in London for any of the following objects:—(1) Medical training, missionary or otherwise, at the Henrietta-street School for Medicine. The promoters are also hopeful of being able, ultimately, to arrange for medical instruction in the Home; (2) Nursing or hospital work; (3) Work among the poor; (4) Study at University or other Colleges; (5) Study in the Schools of Art. It is thought that this will supply a want felt by many parents, and by young ladies who wish for Christian surroundings during a student's or working life in London. Applications should be sent in to the hon. sec., Miss Macmillan, care of Sir William M'Arthur, 79, Holland-park, London, W.

WOMEN IN THE EAST.—The proceedings at the annual meeting of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East, with which Miss Webb's name is closely associated, show that good work is being done, notwithstanding that the funds have been seriously affected by the recent depression. The Society's object is to lead all whom it can reach to the faith of Christ, and to enable every woman and girl in Asia and Africa to read the Word of God for herself in her own language. It will not give education without the Bible. In the course of the proceedings a very interesting account was given of the work carried on at the Society's school at Bethlehem, the girls attending which display by their ready and intelligent replies to questions an intimate acquaintance with Holy Scripture. An admirable site has been secured for a schoolhouse on the slope of the hill overlooking the Plain of the Shepherds.—Rock.

RELIGIOUS TRACT AND BOOK SOCIETY, SCOTLAND.—The new premises, at 99, George-street, recently acquired by the Religious Tract and Book Society of Scotland, have been formally opened. Professor Blaikie, president, who occupied the chair on the occasion, gave a sketch of the life of the founder of the Society, Mr. John Campbell. At the request of the London Missionary Society, he visited Africa twice to inspect the mission-stations there, and having undertaken long journeys on that continent, acquired the name of Campbell the traveller. It was his account of his travels which first interested Livingstone in Africa when a boy. He became deeply interested in all religious questions, and in addition to the Tract Society of Scotland, founded a large number of other Catholic societies. The secretary, Rev. George Douglas, gave a brief sketch of the history of the Society. In 1855 they first employed colporteurs, the number of whom had since risen from three to 200.

Letters to the Editor.

ABUSE OF THE POWER OF THE PRESS.

Dear Sir,—I was much pleased with the extract in a recent issue from Dr. Cunninghame Geikie's lecture on "True Socialism," and I desire to endorse his remarks on the misused power of newspaper editors.

A few months ago, while the case known as the Pimlico Poisoning Case was going on, we were served here daily with lengthy and minute accounts of the trial, which were most disgusting. I took upon me to write a short letter to the editor of our leading local paper, protesting against these reports, and at the same time taking occasion to draw attention to the contrast between the length of them and the bare mention that was accorded to the labours of any worker, however eminent, in the cause of Social Purity or Temperance that came amongst us here from time to time. The letter was neither acknowledged nor inserted, and I found afterwards that friends of the same way of thinking as myself had been equally unsuccessful in their endeavours to gain a hearing in the same way.

I believe our editors do not realise how much irreligion and immorality are fostered by such a misuse of their calling, for many of them are excellent men; but until, as Dr. Geikie says, "they rise to the dignity of their magnificent commission," and realise the solemn responsibility of their position in being called to wield a "power greater than that of the pulpit," we shall look in vain for a higher standard of morals.—I remain, yours,

Glasgow. A Scottish Mother.

THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

Dear Sir,—In your issue to-day there are some verses entitled "Blotting out God!" based on a quotation from The Echo. I will say nothing about the manufacture of that statement, because my charity cannot extend far enough to admit anything but wilful lying. But how is it that you do not see its manifest absurdity? "The Educational Department of the Municipality of Paris has ordered the name of God to be erased from all the instruction books in the French public schools." What would you say if it was stated in a French newspaper that the School Board of London had ordered the name of God to be printed in capitals in all the instruction books in the English public schools, upon the strength of which statement a quantity of verses were written with the refrain: "O Pharisaic England"? You would wonder if French editors and writers could really be so ignorant, or whether they did not conveniently shut their eyes to patent absurdities for the sake of a sentiment sure to please their Chauvinist readers.

You may say, at any rate, the Municipality of Paris have blotted out God in the instruction books in Paris; but that, too, is an unjust misrepresentation of the fact. For you and your readers understand by God, the Eternal Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; while they understand by "Dieu," the God of the Romish Apostasy, the God in whose name France suffered the Ludovican tyranny, with its Revocation of the Edict of Nantes, in whose name the foundation of all its liberties, the Revolution of 1789, is cursed, and to whom Te Deums have been sung whenever the people have been robbed of their liberties, and have been degraded and crushed.

Oh! how strange it is that you should be so jealous for the honour of that God in France, while you are horrified lest he should get any power in the British Empire. It is the old story—anything is good enough for the French—even the chains of a Catholic God.—Yours sincerely,

Richard Heath.

30, Rochester-square, Camden-road, June 10.

P.S.—If the Municipality of Paris are men acting in the spirit of Psalm ii. 2, how is it that they allow my friend, Mr. McAll, to open twenty-four or twenty-five large Salles in all parts of Paris in order to induce their oppressed subjects to turn to this hated God and his Anointed? How is it that they allow the same privilege to any number of sincere English, Scotch, American, and even German Christians, who choose to go over there and preach the glad tidings of salvation through Jesus Christ?

Do you know that such a free, unfettered propaganda would never have been permitted under any form of the Monarchy, and that during this century, under Bourbons, Bonapartists, and Orleanists, the Word of God was never so tied and bound as under the Constitutional Monarchy, when such statesmen as the orthodox Calvinist Guizot and the middle-class Chauvinist Thiers had sway. Even Louis Napoleon's was a better rule for the Gospel cause than that of Louis Philippe. I speak without fear of contradiction, for I have studied the subject more than most.

I consider you are not only most unjust, but absolutely ungrateful to the Republic for the splendid field it has offered you in France, and that without let or hindrance. R. H.

VAN AND GIPSY CHILDREN.

Sir,—Whitsuntide brings to our view in large towns, or pleasure resorts, the vast numbers of gipsy, van, and show children there are roaming all over the country in villages and bye-lanes. I saw at Coventry on Whit Tuesday between 60 and 70 vans, some clean and highly gilded, and many others fearfully overcrowded and wretchedly filthy, and the tolls clerk said there would be an average of four children in each van. With some exceptions, we have between 30,000 and 40,000 travelling children going without education, a state of things that carries peril with it to the traveller, gipsies, and van dwellers, and the country, beyond calculation. Near Rugby, a few days since, I saw three families of English town gipsies, numbering 17 children—some of them grown-up—and six men and women, and the only sleeping accommodation I saw was one van and a small tent about 3 ft. high.

At the Coventry fair I was told that a van woman had sent, a week or two ago, her four children, well-dressed, neat, and clean, to a Sunday-school in Leicester, but the Sunday-school authorities would not receive them. This is a state of things that ought not to be in England; our van, canal, and gipsy children have been left in the cold sadly too long. It is a thousand pities that the Government could not take up the short, easy, "uncontentious" Moveable Dwellings Bill I am promoting, on the lines of the Canal Boats Act, which will place the van, show, and gipsy children in a line with other children. Until such agencies are brought to bear upon the poor children they must go on, it would appear, in their course of evil training, leaving seeds behind them that will tell their tale for long years to come.—Yours very sincerely,

George Smith, of Coalville.

LIGHT FOR THE DARK VILLAGES.

Dear Sir,—Recently, at the earnest request of a lady, we sent one of our regular colporteurs to make a brief visit to a few outlying villages, and the report we have received from the lady, of the blessing that has resulted, has led us to consider a plan for extending this benefit much more widely.

If help is forthcoming, and not very much will be required, experienced and trusty colporteurs will be sent, during the summer months, to many villages where the light of God's truth is sorely needed, to visit from door to door, telling out the Gospel in clear and homely talk, and leaving behind them the Word of God and pure Gospel books.

If any of your readers, interested in such villages, will communicate with me, I will gladly see what arrangements can be made.

I should be very thankful to receive aid from any who would be willing to help us in this scheme for sending light into the dark villages.—I am, &c.,

H. D. Brown, Secretary,
Christian Colportage Association for England.

NORTH-EAST LONDON GOSPEL MISSIONS.—A large hall in Charles-street, Millwall, used formerly as Salvation Army barracks, has been secured for work in connection with this Mission. Inaugural meetings were held on Monday, June 7. The treasurer of the Mission, Mr. W. Ward, presided. It was a pleasing feature that the platform represented all the local churches in the neighbourhood, including one of the clergy of St. Luke's District Church. Their hearty commendation of their fellow-labourer, Mr. T. P. Griffiths, was unanimous, and the meeting in every way assured their prayerful sympathy to our friend.

SUMMER CAMP FOR CITY BOYS.—Two years ago we tried the experiment of buying a few old army tents, and during the summer months sending batches of eighteen or twenty of these lads to live under canvas for a fortnight at a time at some of the sea-side resorts, under the care and discipline of an experienced worker. This proved very successful, and we know of lads healthy and at work to-day, who to all appearance were fast wasting away before they experienced the health-giving change of that Summer Camp of 1884. This year we propose again using our Camp, though on a larger scale, and have already secured a very suitable field at Llandudno, close to the sea. The boys will be taken, at the discretion of the Committee, from the poorest parts of the city, upon the recommendation of clergymen, ministers, city missionaries, and ragged school workers, and will have, say, a fortnight's fresh air, sea-bathing and healthful recreation.

Strangeways, Manchester. Leonard K. Shaw.

WOMEN'S MISSIONARY INSTITUTE AND MEDICAL MISSION.

The annual meeting of this Mission was held in Clapham Conference Hall on Friday evening, the Archdeacon of Surrey in the chair. Mrs. Meredith, in stating the objects of the meeting, said the Women's Medical Mission did not desire to put its graduates into the place of old and valued practitioners. At the Princess Mary Village Homes, Addlestone, where 300 persons were under their care, their Association had secured the services of an able medical man. The ladies who had charge of this branch of the work had gained much experience in the management of the children under his teaching in regulating their food and physic; the value of such training is very great. After serving not less than two years they are prepared for foreign work. Some have gone to Syria, China, and the Dark Continent. The cost of training ladies as medical students is expensive—little less than £300 They study at the Henrietta-street School of Medicine and the Royal Free Hospital, and have entrance to the wards of Lambeth Infirmary. They now much need a hospital of their own. At present, time is wasted and strength taxed by the attendance at distant hospitals. They have the site for an hospital, and only need the funds for its building. For this a special appeal was made.

Dr. Annie McCall, the resident medical superintendent, read her report, in which it was stated that there are five lady medical students, three of whom have already finished their course; the others are still carrying it on; one took an important prize at the School of Medicine recently, and one a certificate of equal worth. The Dispensary for Women and Children is worked by Dr. Margaret Morici, and there has been a total of 1020 attendances since February 24.

The meeting was addressed by Rev. C. F. Warren, who has recently returned from Japan. In his interesting account of that country he stated that the Japanese have now become skilled practitioners of medicine, and there is not the same opening for medical missions as formerly.

General Sir Robert Phayre dwelt strongly on the fact that this work is being done well in India, and is in itself a great boon to physical sufferers, though it is entirely secular. Like education, medicine is largely divorced from religion in that country; both are but the agents of a cold civilisation, which brings no light nor hope to souls. The sufferings of women in India are proved by statistics to be great; and though they would not accept aid from men, they welcome fully qualified lady doctors. A letter was read from Dr. Alice Condict, now a medical missionary in India, in which she states that she takes her Bible with her when visiting her patients, and finds that they consent to receive her on the only condition she offers, that she should be permitted to pray and read some verses of Scripture before examining her patient. "After this I go to work," she says, "in faith." Her success in every respect is remarkable. She is generously paid by the rich, one of whom gave her a carriage; while her poor patients, in the worst part of Bombay, are very numerous, and freely receive the Gospel message. When Dr. Alice Condict arrived in Bombay last October she was nearly penniless. Now she is independent of funds from home, and hopes to be able to help the work here by her earnings.

Dr. Handfield Jones testified to the ability of women for this work. He confessed that he was but a recent convert to it, but he now approves heartily of women being thoroughly qualified for their labour in this field of Christian service.

Archdeacon Richardson stated that the desire of the missionary societies for increased spiritual life in all their stations was now warmly manifested. Miss Scott, an American missionary engaged in educational work in Barelli, gave a brief account of work at her station, where the Lord is mightily working among young women and children. Her chief hope is that these, as mothers and teachers, will be instruments for blessing in Indian homes.

The work of the Women's Medical Mission, as an agency of special power and interest, was strongly commended. Its need of help was much dwelt on, the nature of its undertakings being very expensive; and its difficulties in acquiring the sympathy of a large circle of friends very great, owing to ignorance of the great importance of this work, for evangelising the young especially. The meeting closed with a hearty farewell to the medical ladies and students who were present, from their brethren in the profession, and in the Lord, to whose cordial recognition they attach much value.

Notes on Daily Readings

SUNDAY, JUNE 27.—I SAMUEL XIX.

8.—David went out, and fought with the Philistines . . . and they fled from him.—The first seven verses record Saul's murderous enmity to David, overcome and for a time put away by means of Jonathan's intercession. This verse, however, leads to a change of conduct. David's victory over the Philistines tends to stir up Saul's jealousy, and rekindles his hatred, so that he again attempts to kill him; and his plans are only frustrated by his daughter Michal, David's wife, helping his escape, and deceiving the messengers sent to kill him.

18.—He and Samuel went and dwelt in Naioth.—"No such place as Naioth is known. Moreover, in verses 19, 22, 23, Naoth is said to be in Ramah, and Naioth means 'dwellings.' The context shows that Naioth was inhabited by the prophets, and we learn from 2 Kings vi. 1, 2, that the prophets dwelt together, as in a college. The Targum of Jonathan uniformly renders Naioth 'the house of learning,' which is the term applied by later Hebrews to the schools of the Rabbis. Hence it is almost certain that Naioth was the name of the collegiate residence of the prophets in, or just outside, Ramah, founded probably by Samuel and superintended by him."—Sp. Com.

24.—Lay down naked all that day and all that night.—"I.e., without his robe and other outer garments (comp. 2 Sam. vi. 14, 20). The whole transaction affords another instance of the protection of God vouchsafed to his servants, which forms so frequent a topic of the Psalms of David."—Ibid.

"Saul and his messengers ought to have learned from what happened to them in presence of the prophets, that God had the hearts of men in his power, and guided them at his will."—Keil.

MONDAY, JUNE 28.—I SAMUEL XX.

Saul's determined enmity and murderous intent against David being now clearly manifested, having been only restrained at Naioth in the presence of Samuel by the overpowering action of the Spirit of God, David seeks his friend Jonathan once more to endeavour through him to get at Saul's mind concerning him. It looks rather like carnal policy on David's part to leave Samuel and the place where the Spirit of God manifested Himself with power, in order to find out Saul's thoughts through Jonathan, and, as the sequel showed, it ended in the unwelcome discovery that (ver. 33) "it was determined of his father to slay David." However, the chapter presents a beautiful picture of the friendship of Jonathan and David, a friendship of which David himself says, when lamenting his friend's death (2 Sam. i. 26): "Thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women." In the same lamentation, however, he says, "I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan," and well might he be so. Beautiful as was Jonathan's character, his end was melancholy. He can avow his belief in the ultimate victory of David over all his enemies, and he can make a covenant that "his house" shall benefit by David's kindness, but he does not throw in his lot with David, nor (as Abraham did) come out from his father's house; hence he falls with his father upon the mountains of Gilboa, and does not live to see or share any of the glories of David's reign. Had he identified himself with David rather than with Saul, in all probability it would not have been said of him and his father, "In their death they were not divided" (2 Sam. i. 23).

TUESDAY, JUNE 29.—I SAMUEL XXI.

"After the information which David had received from Jonathan, nothing remained for him in order to save his life but immediate flight. He therefore fled first of all to Nob, to Ahimelech the high priest, to inquire the will of God through him concerning his future course, and induced him to give him shewbread, and the sword of Goliath also; for which Saul afterwards took fearful vengeance upon the priests at Nob, when he was made acquainted with the affair through the treachery of Doeg. David then fled to the Philistine king Achish, but here he was quickly recognised as the conqueror of Goliath, and obliged to feign insanity to save his life, and then to flee still farther. The state of his mind at this time he poured out before God, in the words of Ps. lvi., lii., and xxxiv."—Keil.

1.—Then came David to Nob.—"The town of Nob was at that time a priests' city (xxii. 19), in which, according to the following account the tabernacle was then standing, and the legal worship carried on."—Ibid.

2.—I have appointed my servants to such and such a place.—Our Lord (as reported Mark ii. 25, 26) distinctly asserts that the priest gave the shewbread to David and "to them that were with him," when both he and "they that were with him" were "an hungered," so that David's words were true.

5.—The bread is in a manner common.—"He adds that he need not scruple to give them the hallowed bread, for it was not so holy as when it was upon the table of the Lord, but became in a manner common bread; being now the food not only of the priest but of his whole family. The marginal translation of the words which follow is to be preferred, viz., 'especially when there was other that day sanctified in the vessel.' He means that new bread was set upon the table of the Lord; so that no wrong was done to Him."—Bishop Patrick.

10.—And David . . . fled that day for fear of Saul, and went to Achish the king of Gath.—This was a false position for David, and fear, not faith, led him into it. When delivered, he gives thanks to God in the language of Ps. xxxiv., which ought to be read in connection.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 30.—I SAMUEL XXII.

1.—David therefore . . . escaped to the cave Adullam.—"From 2 Sam. xxiii. 13—17, 1 Chron. xi. 15—18, it would seem to have been not far from Bethlehem, which agrees very well with 'his brethren' joining him there."—Sp. Com.

2.—And everyone that was in distress, &c.—The assembly over whom David "became a captain" consisted first of all of his brethren and kinsmen (see ver. 1), and secondly, of this motley gathering of distressed and discontented debtors who "gathered themselves unto him." (The word "discontented" is in the Hebrew literally "bitter of soul.") What a striking type is here presented of that assembly or Church of the living God composed of "the Jew first," but, through mercy, "also of the Gentile." All who are spiritually "bitter of soul," in distress, and debt, gather themselves unto the Son of David, who becomes, in leading many sons of glory, "the Captain of their salvation" (Heb. ii. 10).

4.—He brought them before the king of Moab.—"It is probable that David's descent from Ruth the Moabitess may have had something to do with his seeking an asylum for Jesse, Ruth's grandson, in the land of her birth."—Sp. Com.

15.—Did I then begin to enquire of God for him?—"Some lay the stress upon the word 'begin,' as though Ahimelech's justification was that he had often before inquired of the Lord for David. But it is better to understand the words as Ahimelech's solemn denial of having inquired of the Lord for David, a duty which he owed to Saul alone as king of Israel. The force of the word 'begin' lies in this, that it would have been his first act of allegiance to David and defection from Saul."—Ibid.

23.—He that seeketh my life seeketh thy life: but with me thou shalt be in safeguard.—"The thought is the following:—As no other is seeking thy life than Saul, who also wants to kill me, thou mayest stay with me without fear, as I am sure of Divine protection. David spoke thus, in the firm belief that the Lord would deliver him from his foe, and give him the kingdom."—Keil. New Testament parallels are John x. 28, 29, xiv. 19, xv. 4; Col. iii. 3.

THURSDAY, JULY 1.—I SAMUEL XXIII.

2.—David inquired of the Lord.—"How? Since Abiathar had not yet joined him (ver. 6). Perhaps by the prophet Gad (xxii. 5). The formula is used of inquiry through a prophet (1 Kings xxii. 5—8)."—Sp. Com.

13.—Then David and his men . . . departed out of Keilah . . and David abode in the wilderness.—There is much deep spiritual instruction in God's dealings with David as to Keilah. David, on inquiring of the Lord whether he should go down thither to smite the Philistines, is told, "Go down to Keilah, for I will deliver the Philistines into thine hand," and so it was. But then arose another question. Can these men of Keilah be trusted, after David has "saved" them, so that should Saul come down they will not deliver him up? On inquiry the Lord answers, that Saul "will come down" and "they will deliver thee up," and David, thus warned, escapes into "the wilderness," his proper dwelling-place so long as Saul was still on the throne. When the Church vanquished the open opposition of the world in Constantine's time, it would have been well if they had acted as David did, and sought counsel from the Lord as to whether the inhabitants of Keilah ('citadel,' according to Gesenius) were to be trusted, or whether a greater enemy than Saul was likely to "come down"? The Lord had warned them in Rev. xii. 14 not only of the devil's "coming down," but that "the wilderness" was the place "prepared of God" where they were to be nourished "from the face of the serpent;" but the attractions of the world proved too strong for the Church, and that betrayal of the professing Church into the hands of the enemy took place, that unhallowed alliance of the Church with the world, at which, when presented to St. John in the vision of the woman seated on the beast, he "wondered with great wonder" (Rev. xvii. 6).

14.—Saul sought him every day.—The Hebrew is, "all the days," that is, continually, during the period of his reign. If Satan goes about "seeking whom he may devour," Jesus is with his people "all the days, even unto the end of the age."

FRIDAY, JULY 2.—I SAMUEL XXIV.

David had just been delivered from Saul by a providential interposition (xxiii. 27), which recalls to mind the deliverance of Hezekiah (Isa. xxxvii. 7) from the attack of Assyria. He is now to be exposed to a fresh assault, which, though it ends in an apparent reconciliation with his enemy, seems to have produced little result, as in chapter xxvi. Saul is as hostile as ever.

3.—Saul went in to cover his feet.—The expression occurs elsewhere only at Judges iii. 24, as to which "The explanation of the phrase as of 'taking sleep' suits both passages best, and especially 1 Sam. xxiv., and is adopted by Michaelis, Bishop Patrick, and others."—Sp. Com.

4.—Behold the day of which the Lord said unto thee, &c.—The men of David were bad expounders of prophecy, but David himself knew better, and acted accordingly. So the popular explanation of the Church's ultimate triumph over all her enemies misapplies to the present state of things what is still future, and will only be fulfilled at the Lord's coming.

14.—After whom is the King of Israel come out?—A wise argument, if Saul had had but the wisdom to accept it. If Christians would but come down to the lowly place which God assigns them in this dispensation, so far as the world's estimate is concerned, they might disarm much of the opposition of the enemy. See 1 Cor. iv. 10—13.

15.—The Lord . . . plead my cause.—See Psalm xxxv. 1, and xliii. 1.

20.—I know well that thou surely shalt be king.—A frank confession of an inward conviction which could not be stifled by all his efforts to render it void. "In his presumptuous opposition to this (prophetic truth) he furnishes a sad but instructive lesson as to how perilous it is to have 'light without love.'"—Sp. Com.

SATURDAY, JULY 3.—I SAMUEL XXV.

2.—And there was a man . . . whose possessions were in Carmel.—This is not Mount Carmel on the north-west coast of Palestine, but "a city in the mountains of Judah (Josh. xv. 55), three hours to south of Hebron, now called Kurmul."—Sp. Com.

6.—Thus shall ye say to him that liveth in prosperity.—The Hebrew of this passage is obscure, but seems to mean, "Ye shall say to him, Long life to you." "The simplest explanation is apparently 'long life' understood as a wish in the sense of 'good fortune to you.'"—Keil.

13.—David also girded on his sword.—For David to take the sword in order to avenge the insult which had been offered to him through the churlishness of Nabal, was not in keeping with his position or calling to be a type of Him "who, when He was reviled, reviled not again." So long as Saul was on the throne, and he a wanderer in the wilderness, vengeance did not become him. So the Lord mercifully interposes to deliver him from a false position, by sending Abigail to divert his anger.

28.—The Lord will certainly make my lord a sure house.—"Abigail's firm persuasion of David's kingdom stands upon the same footing as Rahab's conviction of God's gift of Canaan to the Israelites (Josh. ii. 9—13). Both testified to God's revelation and their own faith."—Sp. Com.

29.—The soul of my lord shall be bound in the bundle of life with the Lord thy God.—A beautiful Old Testament anticipation of "your life is hid with Christ in God" (Col. iii. 3).

35.—I have hearkened to thy voice, and have accepted thy person.—Such is the answer of the Son of David to every soul that casts itself upon Him for pardon and peace, and the sequel is no less true that every such soul is "married to Him who is raised from the dead" (Rom. vii. 4), in whose death the soul's former husband dies (see Rom. vii. 1—6).

Mission and other Appeals.

MR. GEORGE FULLER, superintendent of the Destitute Children's Friend Mission, 1, Follett-street, Poplar, E., appeals to our readers for tracts and flowers for distribution. The mission has a large staff of workers ready to carry them to the many dark homes in the East-end of London.

ST. JOHN'S, Copenhagen-street, Islington.—The sale of work is unavoidably postponed from July 1 to July 8 and 9. Gifts will be most thankfully received by Mrs. Charles Ough, Worthing House, 1, Mountfort-terrace, Barnsbury-square, and the attendance of friends is very earnestly solicited.

BELFAST VISITING MISSION.—The Ragged School in connection with this Mission has quite outgrown its present premises, and will soon be transferred into a plain mission schoolroom, which will also be used as a mission hall. £50 are required that this school may be opened free from debt. Letters to be addressed to Rev. E. Rolinson, 3, Holborn-terrace, Belfast.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—Mr. F. A. Bevan, 54, Lombard-street, E.C., has written an appeal on behalf of the funds of the Open-Air Mission, strongly commending its work, and asking for the £1300 yet needed to complete the operations for the current year. Contributions may be sent to Mr. Bevan; also to Lord Kinnaird, the Treasurer, 2, Pall Mall East, S.W.; and to the Secretary, Mr. Gawin Kirkham, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi, W.C.

A MISSION SHIP FOR IRELAND.—An appeal is made for a new steam mission vessel for the Missions to Seamen work in Belfast Lough, in the outer anchorages of which, some miles below Belfast, several thousand ships of various nationalities annually take shelter. The late Mr Conway Dobbs, formerly a naval officer, gave £500 towards this purpose, but a further sum of £400 is required. Contributions may be sent to Sir John Preston, Belfast; or to Commander W. Dawson, R.N., the Missions to Seamen, 11, Buckingham-street, Strand, London, W.C.

ABERGAVENNY.—Funds are urgently needed towards carrying on work in mission-rooms where the Gospel is faithfully preached. The only funds that can be collected in a very poor parish are insufficient to defray the expenses of the parish church, and these mission-rooms are in poor districts two and three miles distant from the church. Address Rector, Maesgwartha, Abergavenny. A lay reader is earnestly needed to assist in carrying on the work in these mission districts, but the Rector has no funds. Will any of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN send him help for the work.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most important that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away.]

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday, June 19, 1886.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O. Orders payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

THE CHURCH ARMY is about to send two officers to Canada. The new Training Institution and Head-quarters, at 128 and 130, Edgware-road, is shortly to be opened. Prolonged missions have just been commenced at Plumstead, Northampton, Ripley, and Frant. Others are about to be commenced at Haslemere, Wandsworth, Whitechapel, and Bovington. Some of the most depraved characters have recently been rescued by the various efforts of the working men evangelists. One who had been sixty-five times in prison is among the recent converts.

THE CHURCH
Parochial Mission Society,
21, JOHN STREET, ADELPHI, W.C.

The ANNUAL MEETING will be held at WILLIS'S ROOMS, King Street, St. James's, on Friday, July 2, 1886, at 3 p.m. Chairman, The Lord Bishop of Oxford. Speakers, Revs. Canon Wilberforce, W. Hay M. H. Aitken, M.A., C. J. Ridgeway, M A.

Mrs. SMYLY begs to remind the friends and supporters of the

DUBLIN MISSION HOMES AND RAGGED SCHOOLS

of the difficulty of providing food for 1,000 Hungry Children without any money, and she will be very grateful to any who can help, if they will send their contributions to her at 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin, or to the Institution Bankers, so as to prevent the necessity of overdrawing the account.

"The poor ye have always with you."

MISSION to DEEP SEA FISHERMEN.

Five Mission Vessels are cruising amongst the North Sea trawling fleets. 12,000 smacksmen are engaged all the year round in providing our tables with fish. These men, who for us toil through furious blasts and sleety storm—who hazard their lives and fall victims, hundreds of them, to the pitiless waves, that markets at home may be well supplied—may rightly claim some small share in the privileges we so richly enjoy and so highly prize.

THIS THEY CAN ONLY HAVE THROUGH THE PRESENCE OF THE MISSION VESSELS

Carrying to the fishermen the message of Divine mercy and pardoning love, bringing the pleasure of books to while away the weary hours, affording relief in case of sickness and injury, and cheering and brightening dull and monotonous lives by their presence and ministry.

"The Mission smacks are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, will, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."—Sir Edward Birkbeck, Bart., M.P.

FUNDS are greatly NEEDED to enable the Mission to place a Vessel with every fleet.

E. J. MATHER, Director.
181, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.
(Next door to Blackfriars Bridge.)

N.B.—The Offices were removed to the present address in December last; attention to the change will save much trouble, time, and expense to the Mission.

"AND HE WENT ROUND ABOUT THE VILLAGES, TEACHING."

The Annual Report of the COUNTRY TOWNS' MISSION can be had on application to The Secretary, 18, New Bridge-street, E.C.

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.
INSTITUTED 1844.

President—The RIGHT HON. the LORD MAYOR.
Chairman—Capt. the HON. F. MAUDE, R.N.
Secretary—REV. H. BLOOMER.

Object—To win Souls for Christ.

Twenty-three Agents are constantly at work in the Port of London. The results of their previous efforts, made in simple faith, show that they have been greatly blessed by God.

FUNDS ARE URGENTLY NEEDED.

Numbers of The Christian, Magazines, Tracts, &c., are most necessary, and will greatly assist the Chaplains and Missionaries.

The Secretary will be pleased to give an account of the Work either at School Room, Lecture Hall, or Drawing Room Meetings.

NEW WORK BY PHILIP HENRY GOSSE, F.R.S.
Crown 8vo., 3s. 6d.

The Mysteries of God.

A Series of Expositions of Holy Scripture.

CONTENTS.

THE ETERNAL PURPOSE OF GOD.—REDEMPTION.—GOD'S BECOMINGNESS.—BAPTISM: JOHN, JESUS, BELIEVERS.—THE RESURRECTION OF THE BODY.—THE UNCLOTHED.—RESURRECTION LIFE.—REWARD ACCORDING TO WORKS.—DAVID'S MIGHTY MEN.—CROWNS.—THE RAPTURE OF THE SAINTS.—CHRIST IN THE PSALMS.—PRIESTHOOD: AARON, MELCHIZEDEK, JESUS.—SCIENCE VERSUS REVELATION.—CREATION.—DEATH.—THINGS COMING ON THE EARTH.—THE NEW JERUSALEM.—THE NEW EARTH.—THE COLONIZATION OF WORLDS.

Opinions of the Press.

"Mr. P. H. Gosse, F.R.S., has long had a notable place among devout students of Scripture, and he still brings forth fruit in old age. A new volume from his pen is before us, entitled, 'The Mysteries of God;' and it is a book to be read and pondered."
British Messenger.

"The subjects treated on are of deepest moment, and by no means those which lie on the surface. Redemption is set forth in its past, present, and future aspects, time and eternity both being regarded in the light of the revealed purposes of God. Such books are rare. Mr. Gosse has added another such to the Christian literature of our times, and his work is to be cordially commended, as it must be heartily welcomed by all thoughtful readers who 'delight in the law of the Lord'"—The Christian.

"We unhesitatingly pronounce this volume to be in every way an able production, simple in plan, but displaying great powers of thought, and full of varied and important information."—The Presbyterian.

"He is intensely evangelical, and makes it his first aim to know the mind of the Spirit. His exposition of the significance of Baptism contains much helpful and precious truth. The chapters on Crowns, and on Science and Revelation, are also fruitful in suggestions."—Baptist Magazine.

"A series of devout studies on the deep things of the kingdom. Mr. Gosse . . . is a very independent as well as a very close student of Scripture; and in this volume we have some of the ripe fruits of his life-long study."—The Baptist.

"I have read and re-read—some portions many times over; each time something fresh is seen, and made a blessing to mind and soul alike. . . . Every chapter is of priceless worth; . . . those on 'Christ in the Psalms' have strengthened and confirmed what I previously believed. . . . No words can adequately convey my obligations and gratitude for Chapters xii. and xiii., 'Crowns' and 'The Rapture of the Saints.' They have been made the greatest of blessings to me."
From a Baptist Minister in Cornwall.

"'The Mysteries of God' has furnished us with precious teaching, and subject for much prayerful thought."

"I take much to the book . . . there is something in the spirit of it that I find refreshing. There are two points on which I specially like him: 1. 'Christ as the Head of his people; . . .' I don't know that I have elsewhere found the doctrine so fully stated;—certainly not so originally illustrated. 2. 'Christ in the Psalms.' Mr. Gosse has given me on this head a good deal of new light, and of food for reflection. I very thoroughly agree with him here."

[These two Extracts are from Letters of Ministers of great age and eminence in Edinburgh.]

BIRDS OF THE BIBLE,

Chats with the Children about Bible Birds.

AN ELEGANT GIFT BOOK.

Cloth, bevelled boards,
gilt edges, 2s.

With Coloured Frontispiece, and
TWENTY-NINE OTHER
ILLUSTRATIONS.

"We delight in books of this character. Scripture and nature are set side by side, and the young are made to see the one illustrated by the other. Fine type makes these pages pleasant to the eye of the old, and simple language adapts it to the taste of the young."—Sword and Trowel.

"A beautiful little volume, printed in red and black, with numerous engravings. Will be found both interesting and instructive to the young folks who are fortunate enough to obtain a copy. One friend to whom we showed the book at once ordered three dozen copies for Sunday School Rewards. We hope that many others will follow his example."—Christian Treasury.

"Mr. Bowker knows much about the birds; and he makes his feathered favourites teach many a sweet lesson. By all means let the children have this prettily-written and prettily illustrated work."—British Messenger.

"This book . . . is illustrated in very good style, the coloured frontispiece of the swallow being specially good. The list includes seagulls, peacocks, cuckoos, sparrows, ravens, and others."—Bookseller.

THE KING'S PALACE.

A Series of Readings for each Day of the Month. By Rev. J. H. Rogers, M.A. With Carmine Borders. Cloth limp, 1s.; Cloth boards, 1s. 6d.; with gilt edges, 2s.; Leather binding, gilt edges, 3s. 6d. FOURTH THOUSAND.

"Its counsels are wise, loving, and direct. Its aim is to lead the reader to have a clean heart and a clean life—to consecrate all to Christ. . . . All that art, taste, and skill can do to make the theme attractive has been done by the well-known publishers. The result is that, within and without, 'The King's Palace' is simply perfect."—Irish Congregational Magazine.

"This adds another to the already long list of text books. This book has a practical reference exclusively to Christian service, and touches upon the parts which the heart, the lips, the eyes, the ears, the hands, and the feet are to play therein. There is much freshness and force, both in the idea and its treatment; and we think it will hold its own with its many competitors."—Sword and Trowel.

A LABOURER FOR GOD.

By Rev. Andrew A. Bonar, D.D., Author of "Memoir of R. M. M'Cheyne," &c., &c.

Tinted covers, 1s.; Cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 2s. 6d.

"When Mr. Moody became acquainted with him, and observed his zeal and tact, it struck him that he had found one who might do important service. . . . And the Lord fitted the labourer for his field of labour."—Pages 35, 36.

"The sketch of the life of James Scott, by the Rev. Andrew Bonar, D.D., is interesting and full of pathetic beauty. Mr. Scott seems to have been a man of intense Christian enthusiasm. His life work, so early closed, began when other young men have scarcely realised responsibility, and was carried on with eager earnestness through the recent wonderful period of religious revival in Scotland. Side by side with Mr. Moody, Mr. Scott laboured till strength broke down and consumption closed the active, useful life at the age of thirty-eight. A helpful book for Christian workers."—Christian World.

NEW WORK ON CONSUMPTION
CHRONIC BRONCHITIS, COUGHS, ASTHMA, AND ALL OTHER CHEST DISEASES.

SIXPENCE (Post Free), or Large Edition (cloth), 1s. 3d. from the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, S.E., and Elliot Stock, 62, Paternoster-row, E.C.

The Seventeenth Series of Weekly Cases is now publishing, from May to August.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

SEVERE CASE OF BRONCHO-PHTHISIS.

The patient is Mr. J. Crawford, of the Ordnance Survey, Batcombe, Evercreech, Somerset. When he first applied to me from a place in Cornwall, about a year and eight months ago, he had been four years under medical advice at great expense, but derived no benefit. First he was told his case was bronchitis, then bronchial asthma, then that consumption had set in, that medicine was of no use, so that now he deemed his case hopeless; but seeing my cases, which are published weekly, hope revived, and he wrote to me for advice and medicine.

At this time he was suffering with violent cough, heavy expectoration of purulent matter and blood, pains, spasmodic breathing, general weakness. It may be mentioned that the father of the patient had died of consumption.

In one month the blood had ceased, the cough and breathing were better. A prescription I sent him had also removed the pains. "I have every confidence (he writes) in your valuable medicine."

The patient had good ground for the confidence so expressed, for each letter reported good progress. In the beginning of last year he writes me from Roborough, Devon (those engaged in the Ordnance Survey are moved about the country frequently) :—"I have stood the test of the winter well, and am stronger than I have been for some years."

Excitement through the illness of his little boy, together with a cold, brought on a little spitting of blood last autumn, which soon yielded to my medicine; so that, about two months ago, I received a letter from him, saying :—"I was quite restored to health after last writing you, and have not wanted medicine for some months. Friends who came to spend Christmas with me were astonished. They had expected that I should be in my grave within a month after they had parted from me. To your medicine and advice, under God's blessing, I owe my life and health that I now enjoy. You can make any use of this."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

MR. STEVENSON A. BLACKWOOD, C.B.

OUR present issue contains a report of the leading addresses at the Mildmay Conference of last week; and among others those given by Mr. Stevenson A. Blackwood, as President of the Conference. At these annual gatherings the speakers change from year to year, and we seldom hear the same voices many times in succession. Since 1873, however, when the sainted Mr. Pennefather was taken from his earthly labours to his heavenly rest, the form and voice of Mr. Blackwood have been familiar to all who have come up June after June to this meeting-place of many scattered workers for the common Master. Last week, therefore, he presided at the Conference for the sixteenth consecutive time. As he is yet in the fulness of his prime, we may confidently express the hope that for many years to come he may be spared to fill the post of President at these notable assemblies, with the same wisdom and universal acceptance that have marked this service in the past. To many of us the Mildmay Conference would seem to be lacking in one of its characteristic features, if Mr. Blackwood were absent from his accustomed seat in the chair.

Though he will be best remembered by the rising generation of evangelical Christians, in connection with Mildmay, Mr. Blackwood has many additional claims to notice as a servant of the public. More than any other man now living, so far as our recollection goes, he illustrates the possibility of combining high office in the State with signal usefulness in the Church. After serving for twenty-two years in Her Majesty's Treasury, during two of which he was attached as commissariat officer to the Brigade of Guards in the Crimean War, he was appointed, in 1874, to the first occupancy of the then newly-created post of Financial Secretary to the Post-office. Six years later he became permanent head of that great department of the State, which controls the Post-office and Telegraph system, and recently the Parcel Post. Such a position of responsibility, involving the chief oversight of nearly 100,000 workers throughout the United Kingdom, would fully engross the time and tax the energies of most holders of the office. Early in his official life, however, Mr. Blackwood was led to realise the claims of God on his active allegiance, and to these claims he has responded in no half-hearted way. Immediately after his conversion, his gifts of earnest and effective speech were turned to account in the conduct of evangelistic services in the West-end of London. This kind of work, which then seemed, and may still seem, "irregular" to some who lay great stress on form and precedent in religious matters, is more difficult when attempted among the higher social ranks of the community, than among those in humble life; but the effort made at Willis's Rooms was crowned with much success, and was ardently followed up by endeavours of a more private nature. Since then Mr. Blackwood's labours as an evangelist have been constant and unremitting, so far as fidelity to public duty would allow. For several years weekly meetings were regularly held by him in his own house at Streatham, Surrey—meetings still thankfully remembered by many, and at which the series of addresses, subsequently published under the titles of "Forgiveness, Life, and Glory;" "The Shadow and the Substance;" and "Heavenly Places" (Nisbet), and so widely circulated and blessed, were delivered. But, though specially qualified to address cultured audiences, he has by no means confined his preaching to those of his own rank in the social scale. In the pretty Kentish village of Crayford, near which he resided for some ten years, he had a mission hall erected, and there his voice was often heard, speaking in most persuasive accents, like the Apostle of old, on righteousness, temperance, and the judgment to come. For several years he convened a Spring Conference of Christians at Crayford, but on his removal to another part of the county, it ceased to be held. He still devotes what time is at his disposal to Gospel work, whether among rich or poor; his Bible-readings have long proved a great attraction, and a means of much spiritual profit to believers.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry.)

As a practical man, and having a deep sense of the special necessities of the time, Mr. Blackwood has thrown in his lot, and wielded his influence, both by example and by speech, on behalf of the Temperance Reform. Some of his addresses on this burning topic, such as "The Present Distress," "Look out for the Safest Path," "Battlements and Bloodguiltiness," &c., have been published (Morgan & Scott), and deserve wide circulation, especially among Christians, as setting forth their urgent duty in connection with one of the towering evils of the day. In his official connection with the Young Abstainers' Union (which seeks specially to reach young people of the upper classes), the Band of Hope Union, and other temperance organisations, he has thrown all the weight of exalted position and enlightened conviction into the scale of sobriety and social happiness. At Crayford, with the sympathetic assistance of his wife, the Dowager Duchess of Manchester, he opened a "British Workman" public-house, in connection with the mission hall there. Would that all our public men occupying high office were equally alive to the evils of intemperance and equally earnest in coping with them.

The question of social and national impurity having lately been brought into a much-needed prominence, Mr. Blackwood has not shrunk from bearing his testimony on the right side. Last year he presided at a meeting held at Mildmay on this subject, and his utterances on that occasion proved that on this, as on other matters affecting the true well-being of the nation, and the advancement of Christ's kingdom, he is not slow in coming to the help of the Lord against the mighty. It is not needful, nor would it be consonant with his own feelings, that in this sketch we should enlarge greatly on the services he has, by the help and guidance of God, rendered to the cause of true religion and of humanity among his fellow-countrymen. We feel certain, however, we are but expressing the heartfelt wishes of all our readers (even those to whom the portrait we give brings the first glimpse of his comely features) in praying that God may preserve him long in health and strength, and energise him for future service even more abundantly than He has in the years that are past.

AMERICAN BAPTISTS AND THE CONGO.

The following is from a report of the recent annual meetings at Ashbury Park, of the American Baptist Missionary Union:—

The report on the Congo Mission was awaited with the greatest interest. It may be remembered that this is what is known as the Livingstone Inland Mission, organised in England, and the labourers in it are all Britishers. Mr. and Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness have taken the leading part in its management. Feeling unable to support it longer, they offered it to the American Baptists two years ago, at Detroit. There was much hesitation about assuming the additional pecuniary liabilities involved in accepting the Mission, but the Missionary Union voted to adopt it. In the earlier part of the present year, however, there were many questions regarding the wisdom of the action which had been taken. It was feared by some that success could never be achieved in it, and furthermore, the missionaries being all from Great Britain, were personally unknown to the managers of the Union, and, in addition to this, some of them were not Baptists, but Church of England men, and members of other non-Baptist bodies. It looked as if, at the annual meeting, it might be voted to withhold appropriations.

But about three months ago, there arrived in this country, from the Congo country, Mr. A. Sims, M.D., a scholarly young physician connected with the Mission, and wherever he spoke the tide was turned. Rarely has a stranger won so soon the hearts of the American Baptists. He was, of course, present at Ashbury Park, and after the reading of the report by the Rev. A. C. Osborne, D.D., he was called upon to make an address, which he did with effect. After powerful addresses by Dr. Gordon, of Boston, and Dr. Crane, of New Hampshire, the meeting adopted the report of the committee, and it was voted "that all thought of the abandonment of the Mission or its transfer to any other society, if such thought has ever by any been entertained, should, in the judgment of the Union, be from this time forth put aside, and that we should apply ourselves with all diligence to the reorganisation, enlargement, and efficiency of the Mission."

WHAT SHALL WE DO FOR THE PEOPLE?—3.

By LADY HOPE.

What varied answers might be written to this question! The one point that we have under our consideration at this moment, alone presents itself under a variety of aspects—I refer to the provision of coffee-houses of a superior kind for the use of the working people. How many histories of a bright success might be written by those whose real but quiet work has never been brought into publicity! I could quote many instances, indeed, of this kind, but only fear that many of my friends might dislike to find a description of their work in print! For this reason I shall only venture to touch vaguely upon one or two of those efforts to which I refer.

In several of our seaside towns, in a prominent position, or a more retired one as the case may be, the busy coffee-house, with its comfortable and cheery reading-room adjoining, may be found, a haven of safety alike to the pleasure-seekers who frequent such resorts in summer days, to the man of business who wants his hurried meal or a look at the papers, or to the clerk, the mechanic, the labourer, who needs a place for conversation with a cup of tea or coffee to grace it, apart from alcoholic stimulants and tobacco fumes. If well managed and conducted with care and ability you will always find a stream of customers passing in and out of the open door; and the manager will tell you, "It pays well!" "The people are very glad of it." "Our custom is increasing." "We pay 10 per cent." Whereas others are able to add, "Many have been reclaimed from drunkenness by means of these rooms. We have meetings very often; and most successful ones, when every effort is used to win the people to a new life; and these efforts are having real blessing."

Then, again, there are village coffee-rooms, each one of which has its own little history, with its ups and downs, and then its bright page of real successes. Many of these humbler coffee-rooms have had immense difficulties to contend with. Nothing but stern necessity has given rise to their existence, or has had power to keep them going. Lack of means is in many cases the giant enemy against which the earnest worker is compelled to contend. While the public-house at the corner is almost always backed up behind the scenes by some wealthy proprietor, the poor little coffee-room is worked very frequently by those who have neither "silver nor gold," but only an earnest desire to rescue those who are becoming victims of drink from the chains that are fast closing round them. Were the coffee-house as rich at its first start as the public-house, it would have, humanly speaking, a far greater chance of success. But when faith and prayer are its moving impulses, it carries the day before all hindrances. Nothing can stand against it then; and if it is made thoroughly attractive in a way that will suit the country people they will flock to it in the evenings for miles round. It will have a name in the neighbourhood that acts magnetically.

"We often find that village coffee-rooms do not pay," says one of our readers. I am afraid that this is true; and yet very often for the non-payment there is a cause; and upon this point we must touch presently. At the same time I know of most successful ones in retired spots where the thoroughfare is almost nil, and where the houses are scattered. In such cases the expenses are very carefully managed, the labour limited, and much individual care is given to the enterprise. The people value and appreciate the cosy room, with its pleasant repasts, books and pictures, affording opportunities of meetings and conversation all the year round, with a friendly welcome from the ministering angel of the place, who is, I must confess, generally, a young lady. She devotes herself to the welfare of all who frequent it. She watches minutely all the details of food and drink; sees that the counter is well supplied, and that the tastes of the people are properly met; that the house is clean, and the windows bright; the tables well provided with large-print Testaments, pictoral books and periodicals. We all know that the touch of a lady's hand can do much towards making a house attractive; and that her gentle and kind words carry an influence wherever they go, if they are tempered by grace, and hallowed by the spirit of love and peace.

We have also the roadside coffee-house, with its beds and bar, parlour and kitchen, the very essence of comfort and social convenience. Here the farmers make their bargains, and the labourers count out their wages, and the travellers from town to town "step in" to quench their thirst, or take a rest, before proceeding on their way. Here the manager must always be on the alert, for he never knows at what hour of the day his guests may appear. Of one thing he is certain, viz., that his visitors will call for something to eat or drink the moment they enter; and woe betide his good name in all the neighbourhood, and the success of his trade, if the right provisions are not instantly forthcoming! On the other hand, if his business faculties are good, he can generally make an excellent custom, for his fame spreads far and wide, and his clean beds, good viands, and civil words are spoken of in all the countryside. Here, too, what an opportunity there is for sowing seed! Truths may be taught, and sympathy shown that will never be forgotten, germs scattered that can bring forth "fruit unto eternal life." A book, a tract handed to the traveller, perhaps a "Take-one" placed at the door from which the stranger can help himself, by such simple means as these the roadside coffee-house may become a great blessing to the souls as well as bodies of the people who frequent it.

Then, there is the town coffee-house. I need say but little on this phase of our subject. Our readers have only to look at those that are well conducted in any town, and they will readily discover that the trade carries in itself the element of success. Take one glance at Lockhart's cocoa-rooms, either in the busy thoroughfares of our London streets, or within the precincts of the Exhibition! You will always find a crowd of customers, contented and good-humoured, satisfied with their purchases, and therefore willing to pay their money. Here we may notice that the most minute care is given to every detail, and the results prove that this care is a very profitable one. These rooms are thoroughly popular. Then there is "The Rose and Crown" with its crowded bar, its many cubicles, and its notorious prosperity, whose owners are so kindly willing to answer any questions about their method of management. These are only instances; I might quote others. But I will merely relate the fact that in a town which I happened to know four years ago, and which was then opening one coffee-house, there are no less than eight of these popular resorts, and all paying good dividends.

The railway coffee-taverns are doing wonders just now. I only wish I had space to enter into particulars concerning them, but must content myself by saying that in one of these, which has only been opened about three months, the customers number more than two thousand a day; and yet it is only a simple iron structure, without lodging-rooms, its sole attractions being a first-rate manager with a kind heart and a clever head, most excellent food, "everything of the best," as the customers say, and spotless cleanliness, with constant and close inspection and supervision. I need not say that this coffee-house is an unspeakable boon to its neighbourhood, and especially to the railway servants, for whom it has been opened.

MR. MOODY'S NORTHFIELD SCHOOLS.

By Rev. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

Northfield, Mass., June 1, 1886.

Yesterday, when we passed through New York on our way to the Grand Central Station, the streets were thronged with people who were waiting to get a glimpse of the stout, burly President. We have come up hither for a day or two with another stout, burly man, who may be styled the President, or Premier, of the enlarging army of evangelists and lay-workers. Mr. Moody is a born leader. If he had gone into the army, he would have soon won stars on his shoulder-straps; if he had gone into the Methodist or the Episcopal ministry, he would have speedily become a bishop; in fact, he is an itinerant bishop now, with the whole land for his diocese. He has gone everywhere, preaching the Word, and organising Christian work, from Maine to California. To-day two new and noble buildings have been opened for use at his "Mount Hermon" School for boys, and the services connected with this opening have brought us hither.

We always enjoy a ride through the superb Connecticut Valley. The Hudson is the king of American rivers for beauty; but below Catskill, it has nothing that can properly be called a valley; whereas the Connecticut River is throughout nearly its whole course lined with lovely meadows, and cultivated fields, which stretch back to the foot of the hills. From Springfield to Northfield the scenery is enchanting. Just before reaching Mount Holyoke we caught a glimpse, across the fields, of Mary Lyon's world-known "Mount Holyoke Seminary," at South Hadley. This institution has been the prolific parent of all the best female schools in our land, and in my humble judgment, Mary Lyon still ranks as the most solidly useful woman whom America has yet produced. The missionaries and the ministers' wives who have graduated from that Seminary number over one thousand; the school itself has given shape to female education in many scores of institutions elsewhere.

As we passed through Northampton, embowered among its elms, we saluted the memory of President Edwards, and rising young "Smith College." The landscape as we entered Greenfield is one of the most charming in Massachusetts. At half-past five our train halted at South Vernon, exactly on the line between the "Bay State" and Vermont. Mr. Moody met us with his carriage, and drove us over the river to Northfield. What a Jehu he is! Last evening, in his zeal to give us as many outlooks as possible, he dashed across clover-fields, making a road for himself—just as he always has done, into the hearts of the people everywhere. From the high ground above the Ladies' Seminary, the view at sunset was an inspiration for the pencil of a Church or a Kensett; the river gleamed like a mirror of gold, reflecting the maples on its banks, and the Green Mountains beyond them. Such scenery is an education. At eight o'clock the two hundred young ladies of the "Northfield Seminary," mustered in the Chapel-hall of the fine new stone edifice used for recitations, and we had an hour of sacred song and off-hand speeches. The Seminary is crowded with pupils, and three hundred applications for next year have already been reluctantly refused for want of room. No invalids are received; none but robust, vigorous girls, who are willing to engage in wholesome household-work while here, and who intend to make themselves useful in after life in labours for the Master. "Every idle man is a monster," is a prime article in Brother Moody's creed. Our last evening call was at the old farm-house in which Mr. Moody was born, and where we found his venerable mother sitting serenely under the "palm-tree" of fourscore and two years.

This morning an Irish jaunting-car—one of the many gifts of foreign friends—was at the door to take us to the beautiful "Frederick Marquand Memorial Hall," now used as the principal dormitory and dining-hall of the young ladies. What a wide and wise distribution is being made of the estate of that noble philanthropist, who stamped "holiness to the Lord" on his princely possessions! Why will not all rich Christians learn that Christ's treasury never "passes a dividend"? Among the latest contributions to the Seminary, is a superb and costly model of Solomon's Temple; its only duplicate is in the University of Edinburgh.

This morning, at nine o'clock, the procession of wagons was on its way to "Mount Hermon," which lies two miles off, on the opposite side of the river. Among them were two handsome "church-wagons," built by Mr. Moody to bring poor people to church every Sunday. We were all ferried over the river, and then drove up into the spacious "campus" of Mount Hermon School. This institution for boys is conducted on the same principles as the Northfield Seminary for girls. No lad is admitted under sixteen; the average age is eighteen; the total cost of education is not above one hundred dollars a year; and the Word of God is made the chief text-book for daily study. The main object of the school is to train industrious youths for Christian usefulness.

There were already six buildings occupied by the two hundred or more pupils. To-day the two new structures—both of which would be worthy of Yale or Princeton—were thrown open. One of them contains the finest dining-hall in the State; the other is devoted to the students' lodging-rooms, and cost $80,000. The public exercises to-day were held in the chapel of the large "Recitation Hall." The venerable Mr. Hiram Camp—President of the Board of Trustees—was escorted to the building by a military corps of the students, with drums beating and colours flying. Field-marshal Moody then directed the seating of the crowd, and conducted the exercises in his characteristic style. I have no space to speak of the spirited singing, led by Mr. Sankey and Mr. Towner, or of the addresses which were delivered by Ex-Governor Washburn, Prof. Hubbard, Major Whittle, Rev. Mr. Goss, of Chicago, and your correspondent. After two hours of talk, came a bountiful lunch to a thousand hungry folk, in the new dining-hall.

Is it proposed to make this institution a substitute for the College and the Theological Seminary in preparing candidates for the ministry? Not at all. But our vast country is outgrowing the present supply of thoroughly-educated ministers, and there is a demand for trained Gospel-workers, as city-missionaries, as evangelists, as managers of Young Men's Christian Associations, and other lines of lay-labour. Many earnest, godly young men—instead of devoting seven or eight years to a College and Seminary preparation for full pulpit work—prefer to train themselves especially, in a couple of years, for just such work as that of the one-armed soldier, Mr. Morton (in the "Railroad Mission," of Chicago), and of Major Whittle, the Evangelist, and of Missionary Bass in Brooklyn. Our Theological Seminaries do not keep up with the demands for new men equipped for the pulpits; our towns and big cities must have live men and women, and live Gospel, or else drift away to the Devil; to help meet this urgent necessity is the single aim of our beloved brother Moody. Let the Church of Christ second his noble aims with their money, their men, and their prayers. — New York Evangelist.

AT THE PRISON GATE.

Dear Sir,—The annual meeting of our Prison-gate Mission a few days ago suggested the following lines. Your sketch of Mr Wheatley's life and work suggests my sending them to you.

Belfast. Yours faithfully, W. Maxwell.

God speed your noble enterprise,
Ye knights of Christian love who wait
To tilt with crime, and snatch the prize
From Satan at the prison gate.

Emerging from the stony cell,
Come hearts forlorn and obdurate:
With kindly words 'tis wise and well
To greet them at the prison gate.

Alas! the tempter, too, is there,
With blandishment and gilded bait;
Oh, guard them from the fatal snare
That waits them at the prison gate!

The prodigal to peace and home,
And hearts long crushed and desolate,
In weeping penitence may come
If welcomed at the prison gate.

Some parent's heart as good as dead,
Love's touch may yet resuscitate;
And coming days with hope o'erspread
May brighten at the prison gate.

The world is quick with shame's foul brand
To seal the poor delinquent's fate:
Oh, with a timely Christian hand
Prevent it at the prison gate.

The message of a Saviour's love
Declare, e'en though it seem too late:
The story of the Cross may prove
Salvation at the prison gate.

And when before the great white throne
Assembled worlds their sentence wait;
What joy to meet the trophies won
For Jesus at the prison gate!

MISSION WORK IN BERLIN.

Dear Sir,—I have recently returned from a fortnight's Gospel work in Berlin, mainly in connection with Herr Julius Rohrbach's mission in Moabit, a suburb of that great city. In connection with this important and undenominational centre of usefulness, a church of about eighty members has been formed, numbering some intelligent and laborious workers. Much tract distribution and visitation among the poor have been carried on; this has been the more valuable because such efforts are by no means common. In Berlin, Christianity is deplorably weakened by its perversions, ritualistic on the one hand, rationalistic on the other. These things have diminished the power of the pulpit and the zeal of the Churches. Vital religion is very rare, attendance at God's house is but small, Sunday is but little respected. Out of a population of 1,350,000 only about 20,000 or 30,000 attend a place of worship.

Under these circumstances, which so forcibly testify to the need of such an enterprise, the success of Herr Rohrbach has been considerable; so much so that the present mission premises in Moabit are proving too small. He is building in the same street, a commodious hall, which will cost a sum that in England would be regarded as very moderate, but that in Germany, where the people have not been trained to give, would be looked upon as one involving a formidable effort to raise. From personal observation, I can testify that the work is in every way worthy of it. May it be to Berlin and Germany what Mr. McAll's Mission has been to Paris and France.

English Christians are cordially welcomed by Herr Rohrbach. If they want to address his meetings they will find (as I did on twenty-four different occasions) that he possesses a remarkable aptitude for the instantaneous presentation of their thoughts to the people in German. I earnestly hope that some who may be visiting Berlin this summer will call on him. His address is 8, Bremer Strasse, Moabit. Mr. Donald Matheson, 120, Queen's-gate, London, S W., kindly acts as his treasurer.—Yours faithfully,

Barnsley. J. F. T. Hallowes.

SHELTERING HOMES, LIVERPOOL.—The safe arrival is announced of Mrs. Birt and the band of children who sailed from Liverpool for Quebec by the Parisian steamship on June 10. This was the third band sent out this year.

FOUNDATION TRUTHS.

II.—GOD AND MAN.

What is the original relation of God to man? At the present day, the importance of this question cannot easily be over-estimated. Upon our answer will depend, to a large extent, the truth or falsity of our views in relation to sin, redemption, and the future life. The anti-evangelical trend of the Broad Church theology is owing to the prominent place which that scheme gives to the dogma of "universal fatherhood" as expressing the fundamental relation subsisting between God and the race. The logical outcome of that position is seen in the weak, false, and unscriptural sentiments pervading not only the religious publications but also the fiction, poetry, and biography of our time, and in the shallow liberalism that seems to have more regard for the lawless than for the law, and more sympathy with the offender than with the offended.

If God be the Father of all men in any strict and true sense—and we protest against the use of language in a slovenly manner in connection with such a subject—if the sonship predicated of the entire race be anything more than a mere metaphor or euphemism, then observe the inevitable positions to take up which we are driven: Sin is not the violation of righteous authority but a mere breach of filial duty; Jesus came not as Jehovah's righteous Servant to fulfil the broken law, and to endure the merited curse, but simply as one commissioned to do away with a misunderstanding or estrangement in man's heart, such as may take place any day between a father and a son; the atonement is robbed of its true character as a judicial transaction, as a strict propitiation for human guilt, and is made to consist in a revelation of self-sacrificing love fitted to subdue the hearts of man—a sort of vis medicatrix naturæ, by which the spiritual wounds of humanity may be healed, and refractory sons be brought into unison with the will of an offended parent; regeneration is not a new creation wrought by the mighty working of the Holy Ghost, but a mere resuscitation of man's consciousness to a supposed primal filial relation; and future punishment is deprived of its nature as retributive vengeance inflicted on rebel subjects, who have treated with contempt the beneficent obligations of God's law, spurned all the overtures of God's mercy, and outraged all the resources of God's grace, but is reduced to chastisement, or the energy of "corrective love burning on" with a view to the final restoration of all men.

In the face of such startling conclusions as these—conclusions which cannot be fairly avoided or denied if the premises be granted—ought not men to reconsider their position, look again into the terms that they employ, and inquire once more, What saith the Scripture? And in this reconsideration we humbly venture to think, the opening chapters of Genesis ought to have a prominent place. Is there a single trace of the relationship contended for in God's dealings with Adam in the Garden of Eden? Is it the function of a father to place his son under law, in a state of probation, according to strict terms of judicial procedure, and safeguarding the law by the terrible sanction of eternal death? He who answers in the affirmative confounds two offices essentially different—fatherhood and judgeship. The duty attached to the former relation is chastisement, while in connection with the latter is the responsibility of executing the just penalty of the law. To the father belongs love's rod; to the magistrate, the sword of justice. Any confusion of these two would result in the degradation of both.

Moreover, if the relation pleaded for did actually exist, why is there no mention of motives to obedience which might be supposed to spring justly out of the relation? "Of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die." Is this like the language of a father, laying an injunction upon his son, and enforcing obedience by means of considerations drawn from the intimate and endearing relationship between them? Or rather, is it not the expression of a righteous ruler's will, laying down a law, and threatening punishment against transgression?

But it is objected, If you thus narrow the Divine fatherhood to the exclusion of the unregenerate, do you not present the nature of God in a stern and repulsive aspect? And here it is that we come upon the crux of the whole controversy. For it must be asserted, over and over again, that the question in dispute is not one in reference to nature, but relationship. We do not deny or overshadow the bright message of the Gospel—"God is love." But we do deny that that message could constitute the basis for the relationship involved in "universal fatherhood." As an eminent authority on this subject has said: "It is not a question about the existence of a certain attribute in God, such as goodness, kindness, pity, sympathy. Nor is it a question about the sentiments and feelings which God may be supposed to entertain towards the beings whom He has made, and which He may express or embody in his actual dealings with them. The question is much more precise and definite. It is about the existence of a certain positively real and actual relation of fatherhood and sonship between the Creator and his intelligent creatures; such a relation as, like all real and actual relations, implies this, at least, that in virtue of it certain specific reciprocal obligations of a peculiar nature are incumbent on the parties embraced in it, having certain specific reciprocal rights, privileges and endearments associated with them. It is not a Divine feeling that may be called fatherly—as it might be equally well named from some other kindly human analogy—that we are in search of, but a real and actual Divine fatherhood." We deem it unnecessary to indicate the evidence which may be gleaned from the New Testament Scriptures, as such evidence has already been presented in the pages of The Christian. The revelation of sonship in the person of the Incarnate Word; our entrance into sonship through the gracious act of the Spirit of adoption; the inexpressible dignity and glory of our position as sons in the Firstborn; the manifestation of our high destiny that is yet to be given to the universe—from such entrancing themes we turn reluctantly away. In these papers we are dealing with foundation truths only.

In closing, it may be allowable to point out that the true antidote to the teaching referred to is a fair Scriptural presentation of the Divine character. Let us ever keep in mind the two sayings, "God is love," and "Our God is a consuming fire," and let us at the same time ever keep our eyes fixed on Him who is the outshining of the Father's glory and the impress of the Father's person, and we shall evermore feel the deep truth of Pascal's thought: "In Christ all contradictions are reconcilable."

THE MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

Last week, for the thirty-first time, the Barnet-Mildmay Conference was convened for praise and prayer and mutual edification, without regard to sectarian distinction. In 1856, as most of our readers are aware, Rev. W. Pennefather, desiring to gather together in one the children of God who were scattered abroad, invited as many Christians of all denominations as could be accommodated at Christ Church Vicarage, Barnet, to confer together on the things of God; and to find out for themselves and to prove to others that the love of Christ is a uniting bond; and how much soever his people may differ in their points of view, yet that they love one another, and rejoice in the manifestation of that love.

Those who were present from year to year in those early days look back in memory upon familiar forms and faces of men and women esteemed very highly in love for their works' sake, who, one by one, have died in the Lord, and their works have followed with them. And the whitening hair and declining powers of many who still occupy their familiar seats remind us to expect from year to year some vacant place. But as the parents go the children come; and soon, in the great Conference Hall above, the assembly which the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ is convening through the ages will be completed, and all will sit down together at the marriage supper of the Lamb.

Not one of these Conferences, whether at Barnet or at Mildmay, has lacked the uniting and sanctifying presence of the King. On some occasions the power has been more manifest than on others, but we believe there has not been one but has resulted in the passing of some souls from death to life, and of others from life to life more abundantly. Many zealous Christian workers have received their first impetus here, and hundreds annually come up from towns and villages and lonely places, seeking and finding comfort, instruction, and encouragement, at these feasts of the Lord.

None of these Conferences have been more solemn, more practical, more profitable than the last. To Mr. Blackwood, as was learned from Mr. Mathieson's closing prayer, have we been indebted for the subject, and for the admirably arranged series of Scripture studies by which it was developed. We reprint them here at length, because they were the seed-corn of all the subsequent addresses, and because, more strictly than has frequently been the case, the speakers adhered to the subjects. We earnestly advise all our readers to procure for themselves and for distribution the beautifully printed penny book, entitled, "Separation unto God," printed at the Jewish Printing House, and sold at the Conference Hall, Mildmay, N.

THE BELIEVER'S SEPARATION UNTO GOD.

I. By the will of God.—The people shall dwell alone. I the Lord . . . have severed you from other people that ye should be mine. Ye shall make no league with the inhabitants of this land. For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto Himself. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord. Be not conformed to this world. (Num. xxiii. 9; Lev. xx. 26; Judges ii. 2; Deut. vii. 6; 2 Cor. vi. 17; Rom. xii. 2.)

II. By the death of Christ—He gave Himself for our sins that He might deliver us from this present evil world. That He might purify unto Himself a peculiar people. That they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto Him. Unto Him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests. Ye are not your own. For ye are bought with a price. Ye are Christ's. (Gal i. 4; Tit. ii. 14; 2 Cor. v. 15; Rev. i. 5, 6; 1 Cor. vi. 19, 20; 1 Cor. iii. 23).

III. By the power of the Holy Ghost.—Ye are the temple of God. The temple of the Holy Ghost. And the Spirit of God dwelleth in you. The anointing oil of the Lord is upon you. An unction from the Holy One. Upon the . . . right ear, and upon the . . . right hand, and upon the . . . right foot. Ye are sanctified . . . by the Spirit of our God. Not by might, nor by power, but by My Spirit, saith the Lord. The separation (marg.) of his God is upon his head. All the days of his separation, he is holy unto the Lord. (1 Cor. iii. 16; 1 Cor. vi. 19; Lev. x 7; 1 John ii. 20; Lev. xiv. 17; 1 Cor. vi. 11; Zech. iv. 6; Num. vi. 7, 8.)

IV. By Personal Decision.—Thou shalt abide for Me; thou shalt not be for another. Forget also thine own people, and thy father's house. Wilt thou go with this man? I will go. My beloved is mine, and I am his. I am the Lord's. Get thee out of thy country. Abraham obeyed, and he went out. Let us go forth therefore unto Him. As for me, and my house, we will serve the Lord. (Hos. iii. 3; Psa xlv. 10; Gen. xxiv. 58; Can. ii. 16; Isa. xliv. 5; Gen. xii. 1; Heb. xi. 8; Heb. xiii. 13; Josh. xxiv. 15.)

FAILURE IN SEPARATION.

I. The Character of Failure.—The sons of God came in unto the daughters of men. They were mingled among the heathen, and learned their works. They walk to go down into Egypt. To see the daughters of the land. They became vain, and went after the heathen that were round about them. Jehoshaphat . . . joined affinity with Ahab. Ephraim is joined to idols. They feared the Lord, and served their graven images. They sacrificed their sons and their daughters unto devils. (Gen. vi. 4; Psa cvi. 35; Isa. xxx. 2; Gen. xxxiv. 1; 2 Kings xvii. 15; 2 Chron. xviii. 1; Hos. iv. 17; 2 Kings xvii. 41; Psa. cvi. 37.)

II. The Guilt of Failure.—The holy seed have mingled themselves with the people of those lands. Judah hath profaned the holiness of the Lord . . . and hath married the daughter of a strange god. The friendship of the world is enmity with God. Shouldst thou love them that hate the Lord? What agreement hath the temple of God with idols? The name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you. And whither they went, they profaned my holy name, when they said, These are the people of the Lord. (Ezra ix. 2; Mal. ii. 11; Jas. iv. 4; 2 Chron. xix. 2; 2 Cor. vi. 16; Rom. ii. 24; Ezek. xxxvi. 20.)

III. The Consequences of Failure (to the Church).—The days shall be lost, because his separation was defiled. Therefore were they, as polluted, put from the priesthood. Her Nazarites . . . are not known in the streets. Their children spake . . . according to the language of each people. Strangers have devoured his strength, and he knoweth it not. He wist not that the Lord was departed from him. Thou shalt be no priest to Me. (Num. vi. 12; Neh. vii. 64; Lam. iv. 7, 8; Neh. xiii. 24.; Hos. vii. 9; Jud. xvi. 20; Hos. iv. 6).

IV. The Consequences of Failure (to the World).—She hath lived deliciously: The kings of the the earth . . . have lived deliciously with her. She did corrupt the earth with her fornication. By thy sorceries were all nations deceived. Is this of thy whoredoms a small matter? Thy lovers will despise thee. This one came in to sojourn, and he will needs be a judge. He seemed as one that mocked unto his sons-in-law. They could not deliver . . . but themselves are gone into captivity. (Rev. xviii. 7, 9; Rev. xix. 2; Rev. xviii. 23; Eze. xvi. 20; Jer. iv. 30; Gen. xix. 9, 14; Isa. xlvi. 2.)

THE REMEDY FOR FAILURE.

I. Confession of Failure.—We are before Thee in our trespasses. We have given the hand to the Egyptians, to be satisfied. We are all as an unclean thing. We have sinned; do Thou unto us whatsoever seemeth good unto Thee. Turn us again, O Lord God of hosts; cause thy face to shine, and we shall be saved. Save us, O Lord, our God, and gather us from among the heathen. Do not abhor us for thy name's sake. With the Lord there is mercy, and with Him is plenteous redemption. (Ezra ix. 15; Lam. v. 6; Isa lxiv. 6; Jud. x. 15; Psa. lxxx. 19; Psa. cvi. 47; Jer. xiv. 21; Psa. cxxx. 7.)

II. Return to Separation.—Turn, O backsliding children . . . for I am married unto you. Separate yourselves from the people of the land. Shake thyself from the dust. I will heal your backslidings. I will restore to you the years that the cankerworm hath eaten. I remember . . . the kindness of thy youth . . . when thou wentest after Me. Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with idols? He shall return to the days of his youth. The hair of his head began to grow again. He restoreth my soul. (Jer. iii. 14; Ezra x. 11; Isa. lii 2; Jer. iii. 22: Joel ii. 25; Jer. ii. 2; Hosea xiv. 8; Job xxxiii. 25; Jud. xvi. 22; Psa. xxiii. 3)

CONSEQUENCES OF TRUE SEPARATION.

I. The Power of a Separate Life.—He shall be a Nazarite; . . . he shall begin to deliver Israel. He walked with Me . . . and did turn many away from iniquity. Moses forsook Egypt . . . with him will I speak mouth to mouth. The skin of his face shone. Daniel would not defile himself. Light, and knowledge, and understanding were found in him. Thou goest with us; so shall we be separated. By the Holy Ghost: by the power of God. Who is she that looketh forth as the morning fair as the moon, clear as the sun, terrible as an army with banners? (Jud. xiii. 5; Mal. ii. 6; Heb. xi. 27; Num. xii. 8; Ex. xxxiv. 29; Dan. i. 8, v. 11, 12; Ex. xxxiii. 16; 2 Cor. vi. 6, 7; Can. vi. 10)

II. The Reward of a Separate Life.—Blessings shall be . . . on the crown of the head of him that was separate from his brethren. If a man, therefore, purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honour. The priests that kept the charge of my sanctuary, when . . . Israel went astray . . . shall come near to Me to minister unto Me . . . and they shall come near to my table. The Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes . . . walk through the land . . . for I will give it unto thee. Thou hast a few . . . which have not defiled their garments; they shall walk with Me in white. I will receive you and will be a Father unto you. (Gen. xlix. 26; 2 Titus ii. 21; Ezek. xliv. 15, 17; Gen. xiii. 14, 17; Rev. iii. 4; 2 Cor. vi. 17, 18)

The suggestion and well-considered arrangement of the subject was not the only contribution of Mr. Blackwood. His own addresses from the chair were helpful in a high degree; that on Friday morning, from Gen. xxxiii. to xxxv. was a model of terse, condensed, and able exposition, and of practical, experimental and much-needed exhortation.

Wednesday night was a memorable time. It was the first systematic endeavour at this Conference to draw the net at an after-meeting. Any who wished were invited to remain to hear a few more words from Rev. Evan Hopkins, and at the close, when opportunity was given, some two hundred arose to express their desire to be fully consecrated to the Lord, and to be prayed for to that end.

The attractive simplicity of Pastor Theodore Monod, whose address sparkled and burned, and the powerful grasp of the conscience and heart which marked the appeals of Rev. J. H. Wilson, of Edinburgh, will never be forgotten by those who heard them on Friday morning. And the golden nuggets of spiritual thought brought to view in the effective, though somewhat protracted address of Rev. C. A. Fox, and the fervent utterances by Rev. G. C. Grubb, which brought the Conference to a close, will doubtless go on bearing fruit in many to the end of life. We speak of the addresses to which we listened ourselves; we heard others spoken of with high appreciation.

At the evening meeting there were not only pauses for silent worship, but opportunity was given for spontaneous and consecutive prayer by several brethren, and this was by no means the least important feature of the Conference. Some will remember the utterances of the aged and saintly Mr. Turner, of Malvern: a like deep and solemn interest attached to the brief words of exhortation and prayer with which one of the morning meetings was closed by the Venerable Archdeacon Philpot, who is nearly a hundred years old.

The Record notes that Mr. Mathieson asked "that prayer might be offered on behalf of their venerable friend, the Vicar of Islington, who for so many years had found a holy pleasure in attending these annual gatherings, and in offering the prayer with which the Conference is opened. He was sure all would remember Rev. Daniel Wilson in prayer, and not only him, but his afflicted daughter, that God would sustain and comfort them—him in his old age, and her in her present sickness. Prayer was asked that God in his mercy and love would send salvation to Ireland, by the spread of his Holy Word, and the influence of his Holy Spirit, blessing the labours of all the evangelical societies at work in that land. India, too, was remembered, and prayer was presented that the opium iniquity might be abolished. Russia and its Emperor formed the subject of another petition—that the Emperor might be led to see the power of a loving Saviour. Prayer, too, was again made for the Universities of Cambridge and Oxford, that the many young men who have taken their places on the side of Christ may be kept by his power, and enabled to bear witness for Him. The 500 students in Edinburgh who have recently joined in a united communion were not forgotten, and prayer was made that they might become polished instruments in the hand of Christ to carry the Gospel far and wide. Prayer also was offered in reference to what was characterised as 'the plague of Ritualism,' that it might please God to stay it, and to prevent its carrying back so many to the darkness of Popery. Very audible whispers of 'Amen' followed the reading of this request."

Prayer was made at the close of the last meeting for all those who had taken any part in the arrangements, from the Chairman and Committee of Management to the waiters and policemen. Singularly, the reporters, sitting close under the platform and out of sight, were out of mind in these closing supplications—an oversight scarcely possible in America. English Christians are not yet quite awake to the present value and further possibilities of the periodical Press. The readers of the reports will be many times more numerous than the audiences who heard them. But while stewards and others can listen undistracted to the good words spoken, the reporters can only, for the most part, listen and write mechanically, without being able to inwardly digest, the words which pass from their ears to the points of their pens. They should, therefore, be constantly borne in mind. We ask the special remembrance of all readers on behalf of those whose profit and enjoyment are largely sacrificed in providing these reports. All editors and writers for the Press, and all engaged in printing, should be subjects of continual prayer, lest, dealing with sacred things professionally and mechanically, the "sweet influences" of the truths they touch should not touch them.

The Chairman said he had not wished to make prominent the question of funds for the support of the work at Mildmay—all true mission work—but the management was greatly straitened for want of funds. Mr. Mathieson had a delicacy in making an appeal of this description, but he had not. Mr. Mathieson was the superintendent of the work, but he was the Chairman of the Conference, and he wished to lay it upon the hearts of God's people that the subscriptions had been much smaller this year than heretofore, although the needs of the work were increasing. The gifts at this Conference had also been less than at former gatherings. He trusted that this reminder would be sufficient to bring to the Lord's help here the money needed, so that the work might be carried on with undiminished vigour.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next portrait and sketch will be those of Rev. Thomas Champness.

In a portion of our last week's issue it was stated that a report of the Prophetic Conference at the Clapham Conference Hall was about to be published. We are informed that this is not the case. We understand, however, that the addresses delivered at the Conference by Mr. G. H. Pember will be published in the autumn in a small volume by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.

Our friend, and the friend of the working boys and girls of London, Mr. John Shrimpton, asks us, in his letter on "At Home! to the Poor," to call attention to the subject. It seems to us it will be sufficient if we call attention to his letter, which speaks for itself, and for the subject too, and does it excellently well. In these days our Christianity is being put to the test; it will be well for us if we can establish our claim to be followers of Him who went about continually doing good.

A business firm, the members of which do not wish their names to be specified, send to us the following interesting and encouraging letter:—

> Dear Sir,—We are very desirous that your excellent publication, The Christian, should have as wide a circulation as possible, and have thought that by publishing through your columns how we as a firm have done, and are still doing, others may be induced to follow our example.
> For a period of about nineteen years we have distributed "Spurgeon's Sermons" amongst our employés, and for upwards of ten years The Christian, leaving the choice of either optional. By this means more than sixty Christians are distributed weekly. These, in many cases, after being read, are circulated elsewhere. The beneficial results are a healthy moral tone pervading our workrooms, besides an almost entire absence of questionable literature.
> Perhaps these facts may induce some Christian firm to go and do likewise, and so counteract the baneful influence of trashy and immoral literature.

In our correspondence columns there will be found an earnest call to prayer in view of the special dangers to spiritual life arising out of the political differences and excitements of the coming election. We believe with the writer that the best safeguard against the evils to which he refers will be found in the cultivation of personal humility and of charity towards those with whose political opinions we are not able to agree. These graces can only be fostered by living continually in an atmosphere of prayerful dependence on God and an unwavering trust in his overruling wisdom and providential care.

There is need, however, of prayer for the nation, as well as for the Church and for the spiritual life of the individual. By the nation we mean the nation, and not a part of it. There have been meetings in London where the prayers of those assembled were asked specially with reference to the Protestants of Ireland, who are apprehensive as to their position, in view of the possibility of what is known as "Home Rule" for Ireland. No one who studies the history of Romanism can be unconvinced of the inherent intolerance of that system. There is, therefore, abundant reason to beseech God that He would graciously avert from our Protestant brethren in Ireland the evils which many of them dread, if political power should pass into the hands of the Roman Catholic majority.

So far, we are in the heartiest agreement with those who met on the occasions we have named. But we were deeply grieved to find that in praying for the nation these good friends altogether excluded the Roman Catholic fellow-subjects of our Queen. We believe them to be in gross darkness and error, both as to doctrine and ethics, but is that any reason why they should not have a place in our petitions before God? Is it not a reason why we should entreat Him all the more for their enlightenment and salvation from false teaching and from intolerant acting? Has God forsaken them utterly? Or are they beyond the reach of his omnipotent arm? It seems to us that Protestants are erecting a barrier against any answer to their prayers for themselves and their kinsmen in the faith of Christ, when they thus selfishly forget to pray for those who certainly have a place in the heart and purpose of God, however wrong and misguided they may be.

The following paragraph from the opening speech of the President of the Dutch Free State in South Africa may well form an example to other Governments in times of national crisis:—

> Last year we were visited by a severe drought, which caused heavy losses to our farmers. In our distress we humbled ourselves in a day of general prayer, and besought the Almighty for succour and deliverance. Our prayers were heard, and we were blessed with an early and copious rain, so that we have ample material for gratitude, and can rejoice in an abundant harvest and green pasture.

Special services are now being held at Union Chapel, Islington. The pastor, Dr. H. Allon, uttered some timely words at the first service. "It is necessary," he declared, "that men should be reminded that the teachings of Christ were not merely counsels of perfection, but were intended to be realised: the practical influence of Christianity is what is now needed: unspiritualities and unholinesses make people regard religion as an unreality. Professing Christians, whose worldliness is as keen, and whose temper as selfish and uncontrollable as those of others, and whose interest in Christ's kingdom is limited to attendance at public worship, may well be required to answer the question, 'What do ye more than others?'" When all eminent ministers begin to speak after this manner, hope will be brought to the age.

The Bishop of Exeter (Dr. Bickersteth), in his first Visitation Charge, has uttered words of equal timeliness about "Careless Shepherds." While he had words of commendation respecting faithful pastors and lay helpers in the great majority of the parishes of his diocese, he commented not too severely on the fact that from twenty-eight parishes, and many of them considerable, such was the state of ministerial neglect that no confirmation candidates had been sent up since 1882.

To rejoice in the possession of great and precious privileges, and to act under the responsibility of being summoned thereby to exceptional efforts for others, is an admirable proof of real godliness. The Revised Version (Gen. xii. 2) tells us of the words the Lord spake to Abram. He had chosen him by an act of free and sovereign grace, and tells him He will bless him. According to the Apostle Paul's commentary the blessing included a free justification; but then the command comes to him, "And be thou a blessing." The world around him was lying in wickedness, and while he was exceptionally blessed he was to be exceptionally useful. How deplorable, yet how common, the sight of Christian men who glory in their own blessedness, but excuse themselves from becoming a blessing to those living around them.

We called attention a few weeks ago to the rapid growth of the love of novel-reading, and its pernicious effects. We would now ask Sabbath-school superintendents and teachers whether they do not, consciously or unconsciously, foster this growth. Too often the Sabbath-school library is simply a shelf of novelettes. Children learn to have a keen scent for anything in the shape of a story, and refuse to read a book unless it is flavoured with some kind of narrative. Men and women are but children of a larger size. The tastes formed in youth cling to the after life. Let those who have to do with the training of boys and girls remember this, and seek to instil healthy principles which will bear fruit in wise and helpful reading.

The Christian World has a paragraph headed "The Orthodox Dogma of the Atonement," and quotes Dr. Heber Newton, of New York, to the effect that, in the parable of the Prodigal Son, there is no hint of vicarious atonement: it is a setting-forth of fatherly love, which only requires that the erring child shall come back to God. Dr. Candlish, in his "Fatherhood of God" (p. 198), concedes that the prodigal represents sinners generally, but maintains that the matchless parable is our Lord's defence against his accusers that He was familiar with such. He contrasts his own wonted acts with the spirit of the elder brother in the parable. In doing this He opens up to men his Father's heart and his own heart. If Dr. Candlish's interpretation be accepted, it would suggest to men that a true "elder brother," instead of murmuring, would be ready to sacrifice himself, that a Father's yearning might be gratified, and an estranged child brought back, and the parable would thus be a foreshadowing of our Lord's atonement.

It has been stated in Truth that the slabs of concentrated pea-soup, which are manufactured in Germany, afford an excellent means of giving food to the poor and distressed. During the Franco-Prussian war pea-soup made up in this way was very largely used in the German army, and was found to be economical and very nutritious. Each slab costs about threepence, and four quarts of good soup can be made from it; no addition of meat is necessary, sufficient having been mixed with the peas. This food might be very useful to those who visit the poor, and who frequently experience the need of an article of diet capable of being quickly and readily prepared, and not liable to waste. In many cases it is most undesirable for a visitor to give money to the destitute of whom little is known, and it might be that the use of these slabs, easily carried and used, would be an advantage to the charitable who do not like to pass by any case of seeming distress, and beneficial to those who, if pecuniary help were given, might be unable to resist the temptations of the public-house. It is said that the slabs are imported by Mr. Goodchild, George-lane, Folkestone.

In a recently published, and already somewhat celebrated, novel, which purports to be, and has for its second title, "A Story of English Socialism," the singular theory is insisted upon that a Christian "has nothing to do with economic doctrines," simply because the discussion of such doctrines from a Christian standpoint would be followed by awkward results. This is about equivalent to asserting that, because the teaching of Jesus, and the opinions of Mill, Fawcett, and others clash, Christianity must go to the wall. It hardly need be said that we entirely dissent from the proposition. The life of a real Christian must necessarily be based upon the utterances of Christ, and how can a consistent follower of Jesus, who remembers the Divine commands with regard to duty to our neighbours, selfishly close his ears and his heart to the claims of others, and base his daily life upon obedience to the miserable rules of the cold-blooded professors of the dismal science. "Do unto others as ye would that men should do unto you" is but a little sentence, but it outweighs all the ponderous volumes which political economists have inflicted upon us, and which we are by no means prepared to substitute for the simple teachings of Him who went about doing good.

It is to be regretted that the wholesome rule, "never take away from a man even a shadow of a spiritual truth, unless you can give him substance in return," is not more generally observed by doubters, and by those who profess to be doubters. Much harm is done in these days by writers who discourse glibly and flippantly upon momentous subjects upon which they have bestowed very little thought. Superficial science, it has been remarked, is "the devil's spade with which he loosens the roots of the trees prepared for the burning," but the spade only too frequently is handled by men who, with their shadowed hints, confuse other lives tending heavenward. All such writers incur a terrible responsibility, for their words once scattered broadcast can never be recalled, even though they themselves ultimately find the truth which they thoughtlessly or wilfully may have led others to give up. Silence frequently stifles a doubt, and if any utterance at all is made regarding it, surely it ought to be that of Thomas, "Help Thou mine unbelief." Readers of present-day literature should carefully guard against mistaking and accepting opinions for truths.

We should like to have Cardinal Newman's commentary to-day upon the views respecting the Romish apostasy which he expressed in such plain and unmistakable terms before he left the Church of England. In his sermon on the "Prophetical office of the Church" he thus warns those who make advances to Rome:—

> We shall find too late that we are in the arms of a pitiless and unnatural relative, who will but triumph in the arts which have inveigled us within her reach, for in truth, she is a church beside herself—crafty, obstinate, wilful, malicious, cruel; unnatural as madmen are, or rather she may be said to resemble a demoniac, possessed with principles, thoughts and tendencies not her own.

In none of these respects has Rome changed since those remarkable words were spoken: as accurate then with regard to her as they would have been had Latimer uttered them. She has become a little more elastic in her crafty compliance with things which she is unable to control, a little more blasphemous in her claims, and that is all. But Newman himself has changed, and, if he finds any rest in the arms of the "pitiless and unnatural relative," it is only because he has taken with him "principles, thoughts and tendencies not her own," which he persistently adheres to, knowing well that he is exercising a liberty which is not permitted to any consistent Romanist.

There is a tiny flower common to English roadsides and ploughed fields, which closes its brilliant little petals when a cloud obscures the sun. It reminds us of those Christians who, to a great extent base their faith in the divinity of Christ upon their belief in his miracles, and who, therefore, should a shadow of doubt cross their minds, cut off their own receptive power, forgetting that the Sun of Righteousness still is shining "with healing in his wings." Such a basis for faith can at best be but an insecure one, and Christ himself placed it in a lower grade than that of belief in Himself and his words. The miracle, wonderful as it may be, is only a sign of the Creator who is behind it, and who is equally present in the thunder and in the still small voice. Our daily life is built up of miracles, but we see them not, because we close our eyes to them. It is not the Jesus of history we need, but the living Christ:—

Warm, sweet, tender, even yet
  A present help is He,
And faith has still its Olivet,
  And love its Galilee.

The healing of his seamless dress
  Is by our beds of pain,
We touch Him in life's throng and press,
  And we are whole again.

In a Roman Catholic chapel at Montmartre there is a little announcement which informs visitors where candles for offering to the altars may be obtained on the premises, and also that the "true medal of Calvary is sold there." If this were all, the notice would only resemble hundreds of others in similar places, but it goes on to state, not only that "religious" bijouterie, but also "bijouterie de Fantaisie" can be purchased, and in this respect we venture to trust that it is singular.

Some years ago the writer of a paper in The Westminster Review on "The Function of Physical Pain" said very wisely:—

> Self-sacrifice, it is true, must ever remain the unalterable law of human virtue, but that applies to the voluntary renunciation of immediate pleasure, not the undergoing of superfluous suffering, and, by a miraculous rule of conversions, the suspense of that renunciation quickly transforms into a fuller gratification.

In these days of luxurious self-gratification, however, there is a growing tendency to class with "superfluous suffering" the discomfort and reaction which very justly follow in the train of physical excess, and to bring into use anæsthetics and drugs to ameliorate conditions which have no place in the scheme of nature except so far as they are self-imposed. This action necessarily implies a lowering of the ideal of human character, which the proper application of anæsthetics certainly does not. Instead of bringing about an increased freedom, it results in a base slavery.

Sensibility to pain may be cultivated, just as to a certain extent insensibility may be; but when such sensibility is due to habits and not to constitution, nothing but moral degradation can come from deadening it by the use of any of the drugs which are now so largely resorted to. So destructive to both body and mind many of these things ultimately are, that although mere endurance, without resignation, may be one of the lowest of human virtues, the "leisure of patience" is infinitely preferable to them, and we would warn any of our readers who may be tempted by glowing advertisements, or by the advice of injudicious friends, to try them, by all means, as they value their physical and mental and spiritual health, to refrain from doing so, except only under the exceptional circumstances when skilled physicians may consider the experiment absolutely necessary.

A constant reader encloses a cutting from a newspaper received from Portugal proving that Auto da Fé is not extinct in that country. The translation is as follows:—

> Braga, May 1.—Yesterday at mid-day the inhabitants of Sonto St. publicly burnt a copy of the false Bibles, which are being given away to anyone who wishes to have them, by some individuals who have lately established themselves in Jano St.

A cutting from the same paper mentions the names of five churches or chapels that have been burglariously broken into, and the paper of the following day adds other names to the list. Braga, about thirty miles north of Oporto, is, next to that city, the most important town in the north of Portugal, and the seat of an Archbishop.

Dean Burgon has replied to an essay by the Rev. Professor Pritchard, D.D., which appeared in The Guardian of Feb. 10, entitled, "The Creation Proem of Genesis," which accounts for the inspired history of the creation as a wonderful dream. To Dean Burgon's reply is added a postscript on Professor Huxley's recent papers in The Nineteenth Century. A friend has had them republished under the title of "The First Chapter of Genesis: A Reply and a Postscript." The pamphlet may be obtained a this office, price 6d.

MR. GEORGE SOLTAU, who is on the eve of his departure for Tasmania, will be specially commended to God at the Daily Noon Prayer-meeting, 186, Aldersgate-street, on Tuesday, July 6. Mr. Soltau will briefly address the meeting.

DEATH OF REV. A. M'AUSLANE, D.D.—We deeply regret to record the death of Rev. Dr. M'Auslane, formerly of Approach-road Congregational Church, Victoria-park, which took place on the 25th inst., at his residence, Florence Villa, Victoria Park-road, E. Dr. M'Auslane conducted the services at St. Thomas's Hall, South Hackney, so recently as Sunday, the 13th ult., when his deacons noticed that he seemed poorly, but no one imagined the end was so near. On the following Wednesday he grew worse, and his medical adviser being alarmed at the symptoms at once held a consultation with eminent physicians, who pronounced his case hopeless. He was ordained in 1852, in Dunfermline, Fifeshire. For a period of some six years he laboured in this his first charge, but on September 5, 1858, he commenced a new pastorate at Newport, in the county of Monmouth. In the year 1862 he came to London, and began his ministry at Finsbury Chapel, where he laboured for eighteen years with great success. In March, 1880, he accepted a call to one of the largest and handsomest churches in the east of London, Approach-road, Victoria-park. In 1885 he, at the request of many friends, severed his connection with that church, and opened St. Thomas's Hall, South Hackney, where a new church has since been formed.—Christian Age.

WHOLESALE DESTRUCTION OF WINE.—Saturday week, in the presence of, and assisted by, the members of the Highgate Gospel Temperance Help One Another Society, Mr. William Green, of Bishopwood House, Highgate, the president of the Society, destroyed his cellar of wine, about 2500 bottles, valued at about £600. In a speech explaining his reasons, he said that after mature reflection and earnest prayer he had come to the conclusion that it was God's will that he should part with the contents of his wine cellar. Three methods were pressed upon him from time to time. One was to sell the wine to the trade, knowing that they would sell wine, whether his or not; the second was to sell it and give the money to some charity; and the third was to give it, as it was, to the hospitals. In pursuing the first course he would be participating in the sale of an article which had been proved to militate against the physical, social, and spiritual advancement of society. The same reasons were equally applicable to the second course, and beyond them there was in addition the inconsistency of causing injury to others in order to benefit some one else. The third course was met by the success of the London Temperance Hospital, where it had been proved that alcohol was not necessary in the treatment of any disease. After this address the contents of the bottles were poured into the sewer.

STANDING THE TEST.

The following extracts from the letter of an English lady in India, with respect to the noble and steadfast testimony of a young convert, will interest our readers:—

Mrs. L—— told me about a most interesting case which has just come off in her husband's court (he is judge here). A native boy, of good family and large prospective means, was converted in the Church Missionary Society's schools here, and declared his wish to be baptized as soon as he should be of age, which is eighteen in this country. His family opposed this and did all they could to dissuade him. He was heir to a lakh of rupees, but was to be disinherited if he became a Christian. However, as soon as he was eighteen he came to the principal missionary here, Mr. B——, and asked to be baptized. Mr. B—— took legal advice, and, finding it was all right, baptized him. Then the family instituted proceedings against him on the grounds that he was not of age.

Major L—— had to try the case, and it was one that excited the deepest interest. Two brothers, pleaders, asked to be allowed to conduct it free of charge, the one, a Christian, on the boy's side; the other, a virulent heathen, on the opposite. One question that was put to the lad was, "What do you believe in?" On which he got up and repeated the Lord's Prayer. Then they asked him why he believed in the Lord Jesus? He made answer that in no other religion could he find that the gods so loved their people that they were willing to suffer and die for them, and in no other religion could he find so much love and such rewards. After he was baptized, his people got hold of him, and smuggled him away by train to some distant place; but at one of the stations where they stopped he looked out and saw a well-known native Christian, and, before they could stop him, with one bound he was on the platform, clinging to this man, and begging him to save him. He took him home with him, and then these proceedings were instituted.

The boy's side came on first, and it was so far proved that he was at least eighteen, probably older (he has a child of four years old), that when the question was raised at the end of the first day's proceedings, as to whom he could live with until the case could be resumed, which was not for a fortnight, Major L—— adjudged that the boy should choose for himself. On this he rose and threw himself into the arms of Mr. B——, the missionary. So Major L—— said he might go with him, but his friends might have access to him. As they walked home Mr. B—— said to him, "Be sure you don't eat anything they give you." They used to visit him frequently, and were always offering him sweets, which he declined. Once he accepted one, but when they found he meant to take it home, and not eat it on the spot, they made him give it back! Then they tried another plan. They pretended to want to learn about Christianity, and to be converted! Before this, some rich relations had offered him, one 35,000 rupees, and the other 50,000 rupees, if he would give up his Christianity, but he would not.

When they pretended to be converted, they said to him, "Now, you will not be afraid to take what we give you." So he took a sweet, and nearly died on the spot. See how God's hand was in it all, watching and over-ruling everything. It so happened that that very day a doctor was passing through, and staying at Mr. B——'s house. For the first time for months the stomach-pump was in the dispensary, so they could apply immediate remedies, and the boy's life was saved, but he was very ill from the effects. Of course the people were immediately arrested, and when the case came on there were no witnesses, because they were all in prison on the charge of attempted poisoning! The father of the boy came into court, and begged for forgiveness, saying he withdrew the charge, and so the case ended, and the boy is handed over to his Christian friends; but he is penniless, and his wife has been taken from him—I don't know about his child. I do hope the poor fellow will stand firm; he can hardly have a more severe test. He seems to have had everything, down to the very bitterness of death.

NOTES FROM NORWAY.

By Rev. E. PAYSON HAMMOND.

Many persons who visit Norway do so for the purpose of gazing on grand scenery. They look upon the many roaring waterfalls, the fields of perpetual snow, and glaciers, sometimes pressing their way down to the water's edge; they like to see the midnight sun at the North Cape, and the Laplanders, with their reindeer and snow-sledges, or to sail among the thousands of beautiful islands and charming lakes, and up some of its many fjords, or friths, or, perhaps, to learn something of the customs of the people. I have been more interested, however, in the religious history of Norway. For centuries Norway was united to Denmark. In 1336 the Protestant religion was introduced by Christian III. of Denmark. We have seen in some of the museums old Catholic altars and images, for which there is now no use in Norway. When the King of Denmark accepted Christianity the people were obliged to do the same. The Augsburg Confession was the accredited standard. Much of the ritual form of worship, before the Reformation, is still observed. There was no toleration for dissent from the State Church.

This was the condition of things in 1796, when He who called Luther from the miner's cabin and Zwingle from the shepherd's hut to preach the great doctrine of justification by faith, was pleased to call Hans Nielson Hange to blow the Gospel trumpet up and down these valleys in his native land. He was a brave-hearted man, with a clear knowledge of the Bible, which his godly parents had taught him With a tongue of fire he spoke God's truth with heaven-sent power. When he began to write, the Spirit seemed to guide his pen. He boldly assailed error. He was a man of property, and so able to circulate religious reading, which he had printed at his own expense. For six months he kept three printing presses at work.

When by his fearless proclamations an awakening followed, and men were saying, "What shall we do to be saved?" many in high places took the alarm. At that time there was no toleration for preaching by laymen. If any man left the Lutheran Church, the prison was his home. Many of the clergy at that time were Rationalists, and from them what could this John the Baptist expect but the fiercest opposition? It came down upon him like one of those storms from the cold snow-capped mountains, sweeping everything before it. The Bishop at Bergen uttered words against this earnest preacher, and the Danish Government arrested him and threw him into prison. He was thus cruelly taken away from his work of saving souls.

From 1804 to 1814 he was kept in prison, except for a short time when he was taken out to make salt for the Government. The Norwegian coast was blockaded by the English, and the country was in need of salt. He was a practical man, and knew how to set salt works in motion around the coast; but as soon as this task was accomplished, he was taken back to prison.

The Government refused to let this evangelist give spiritual salt to the people, but compelled him to give them salt from the briny ocean. At last, tired of keeping him in prison, they gave him liberty. His strong constitution was by this long incarceration shattered, yet his great influence for good continued to be felt far and wide.

Yesterday, Rev. J. Storjohann, of the Lutheran Church, kindly took us to the prison, and to the room where Hange spent his ten or eleven years of imprisonment. I thought, as I stood in that low room, how few of us in these days know what it is to suffer for Christ. But unto some, like Hange, it is given in behalf of Christ, not only to believe on Him, but also to suffer for, his name." Last Saturday we visited his grave. It is by the side of the Akers Church, which is seven hundred years old. The influence of the work begun by Hans Nielson Hange is felt to the present day. Others have been stimulated, with the help of God, to take it up and carry it on.

A few years ago Mr. F. Franson laboured in about fifty of the towns and cities of Sweden and of Norway. I have found many earnest Christians who were converted at that time. These have been of much assistance to me in the meetings I have been conducting in Christiania, assisted by George Hubert as interpreter. The meetings have been conducted day after day, and the power of God's Spirit has in a remarkable manner rested upon them. All have remained to the inquiry meeting. What has especially delighted me has been to see the numbers of Christians who were ready to "weep with those who weep, and rejoice with those that rejoice." I was glad to find that with only a few sentences of Norwegian at my command I could move about among wounded souls and speak of Jesus. Usually, however, I have had an interpreter by my side.

We have had three meetings, which have lasted nearly all day, commencing at eight in the morning and continuing most of the time till eleven at night. Each evening I have had to make two addresses. The last one has usually commenced at a quarter to ten. The days are so long that even at that time it has not been necessary to light the gas. In my room at a quarter to twelve I have sat by my window and could see distinctly to read. Thank God that the Sun of Righteousness has shone in the hearts of many young and old in Christiania.

During the present week the services have been held in the Free Lutheran Church, which corresponds to the Free Church of Scotland. There we have seen the same power of the Holy Spirit convincing of sin and revealing Christ to the anxious. The last evening the meeting was held in the Methodist Church, where Bishop Foss from America preached last Sunday.

I wish that some of the earnest workers in the "Children's Special Service Mission," or some person of independent means, would come over here at least for the summer, and with Pastor G. Hubert carry on this work, in which there has been felt so much of the power of God's Holy Spirit.

Christiania.

PADDINGTON-GREEN CHILDRENS' HOSPITAL.—The third annual meeting of this Institution was held on June 10, Mr. George Hanbury in the chair. The hon. sec., Mr W. Mitchell-Carruthers, read the report, which stated that the success of the Institution in alleviating the sufferings of the children of the poor had been attested by the increased number of applicants, by the increased subscriptions, and by the pecuniary aid given by workmen. The total number of cases treated during 1885 was 12,674. The committee contemplate an extension of premises, and appeal for £4000 to pay for the land and erect new waiting-rooms.

THE ITALIAN AID SOCIETY. — This institution seeks to provide a refuge for the orphans of Protestant Italians, and to enable colporteurs and missionaries to secure a good education for their daughters on moderate terms. Since the date of its first establishment in Florence, it has given shelter and education to a large number of children from all parts of Italy, most of whom would otherwise have remained uneducated, or have been subjected to Roman Catholic training. Many of these are the children of pastors, or of colporteurs, who have given freely all they had to give—time, strength and talents—to the service of God; surely the children of such parents are, in a peculiar manner, entitled to the help and sympathy of Protestant Christians.

HAZELWOOD, ISLE OF WIGHT.—The thirteenth annual report of this pleasant Home of Rest and Recreation for Commercial Young Men says that the past year has been rich in blessing, and that the work has far outgrown the building. The Committee were reluctantly compelled to refuse a host of applicants during the summer. The only hope for increased service is by enlarging the building, and for this purpose an extension fund has been started. It is confidently hoped that next year the Institution will be enlarged and furniture purchased. The contributions of the young men amounted to nearly 83 per cent. of the entire income. The whole of the benevolent contributions are devoted to the aid of invalids, orphans, and junior assistants, whose only hope of a rest and change is by securing the advantages that Hazelwood affords them.

JESUIT AGGRESSION.

AT this moment when attention has been directed to the aggressive action of the Jesuits in England, it may not be uninteresting to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to learn that, after a long period of silent work at Cannes, and in the other frequented winter-season resorts along the Mediterranean Coast, the Jesuits have made a sudden and most unprovoked attack upon Protestants and Protestantism, accusing the Reformers of the most hideous crimes.

An answer to this attack was long expected; but, as none appeared, it was supposed that the Abbé's pamphlet would remain unanswered, and the appearance of a little book entitled, "Le Papisme,"* only a month ago, at Cannes, caused a great sensation amongst French readers.

The author, who signs himself "Nemo," brings forward many novel and unanswerable arguments against the doctrines and practices of the Romish Church, with which he seems to be intimately acquainted, and the chapter on Monaco shows, in a most striking manner, how the Jesuits are mixed up with the terrible system of legalised robbery which has made that tiny principality worthy of being called "the plague spot of the Mediterranean."

We translate a few extracts from the preface:—

I fully expected that an answer to this most insolent pamphlet, "Le Protestantisme dans les cités hivernales de la Mediterranée, Cannes, Nice, Hyères, &c.," would have come from the Protestants themselves; but, seeing that twelve months have elapsed without one line having been printed on the subject, I am constrained to take up my pen to give our Abbé a lesson. . . .

It was on November 20, 1884, that a postal train from Marseille deposited at the Cannes station a most precious burden. . . . This treasure was nothing less than a blessing sent by the Bishop of Fréjus to the Abbé François for the book written by the latter against the Protestants. . . .

The Semaine Religieuse of Fréjus waited for the day of St. Paul the Hermit, to publish a review of this book, the object of which is to grind all Protestants and heretics in the mill of Papal infallibility!

Our Abbé calls the Protestants "sons without a father, followers without a guide, disciples without a master, pastors without flocks." And, not satisfied with this long string of insults, he apostrophises our winter visitors in the words of Tertullian: "What business have you here, seeing you are none of ours?"

I think we might with more reason address this question to you, priests of Rome: "What business have you in a society which has been profoundly disgusted with your duplicity, your Jesuitical intrigues? . . . Were you to give a true answer, it would be: "We are here like the fox who is watching the moment for seizing his prey . . . We are here to ruin society, to overthrow government, to change laws—in a word, to trample upon all that is good and holy in social life."

See what an American paper (quoted by the Journal de Genève) has had the courage to publish: "Truly Christian princes extirpate every root of heresy in their dominions when they are powerful enough to do so. If we do not attempt to persecute at present it is, we declare explicitly, merely because we are still too weak, so that we believe that, under present circumstances, we should do more harm than good to the church we serve by any attempt of the kind."

Is it one of these truly Christian princes you would enthrone in France to-morrow, had you the power? The rest would follow as the necessary sequel of your work of redemption. . . . Awaiting the coming of these blessed times, our Abbé tells us the history of Cyril Lucar, who was "twice deposed, sent into exile, and finally strangled on account of his friendship for heretics!" You only forgot one thing, Abbé F——. Why did you not tell us the names of his assassins? Priests, of course! . . . When Papists reign, all who are not Papists are reckoned as a public nuisance. . . . Let us never forget that Popery cannot change its nature. A tiger in the past, it will be the same to the end; yes, even when disguised in sheep's clothing! . . . To form a just idea of Popery we must see it in some place where its action is unimpeded by the presence of Protestantism For this we need not take a long journey—only to Monaco.

THE KIRGHESE OF CENTRAL ASIA.*

BY DR. H. LANSDELL.

I TOOK occasion in the tent to inquire respecting their religion, concerning which Levshine says that it is difficult to decide whether it be Muhammadan, Pagan, or Manichean. All recognise a supreme Creator, but some worship Him according to the Koran; others mix their Islamism with remains of ancient idolatry, whilst others believe that besides a beneficent God, whom they call Khoda, there exists an evildoing spirit called Shaitan, which name I remember our Kirghese drivers used when seemingly they were swearing.

In the Russian registers, the Kirghese are entered as Muhammadans, and regarded as Sunnis; for though many of them have only a very confused notion as to the two sections of Muhammadanism called Sunni and Shia, yet they so far espouse the cause of the Sunnis that they consider every one else an infidel, be he Shia, Buddhist, or Christian. Also their religious indifference seems to be preserved only so long as they do not come in contact with people more civilised than themselves on which occasions they are sometimes fanatical. M. Troitzky, who took me to the tent, told me that some time before, the Kirghese had been on the eve of an outbreak, because the Government, wishing to take a census, had distributed amongst the auls tablets or cards, to be marked so as to show the number of the people. On these tablets, however, the Kirghese discovered a device, whether the Imperial two-headed eagle or what else similar I know not; but, thinking it to be intended to make them Christians, they were almost ready to mutiny. It was the knowledge of this, I suppose, that led the Russians to warn me against the distribution of the Scriptures in the Steppe. I had not forgotten the exhortation; but finding that my host could read, I asked if he would accept a copy of the New Testament, telling him it was the best book we had in England. He took it joyfully, and was evidently pleased to get it. I then asked what they thought became of us after death? Upon which they replied that God had made good angels, called Mankir, and bad angels, called Nankir, though when He made them their books did not say, and that two of these angels sit invisibly on the shoulders of every man from his birth, Mankir being always on the right. Further, that they see all the man does, and write the good and bad in their respective books, which at death are both taken to God, who decides whether the good or ill preponderates, and gives sentence accordingly; the bad being sent into the fire, and the others to the enjoyment of another life in the world of spirits, where the good find all that they can desire.

It was then my turn to tell them the Christian creed; how, for the putting away of man's sin, Jesus Christ came into the world and made atonement on our behalf, offering us freely the benefit of what He has done; and then, by way of showing them how thoroughly I believed in this, I went on to say that I had travelled some thousands of versts to spread this news, in doing which I had distributed more than 100,000 publications I hoped, therefore, that they would read the book I was leaving, and that we might hereafter meet again. How much they apprehended of what I said I am not at all sure, for I spoke in French to M. Troitzky, who turned my speech into Russian, and then communicated it through his Kirghese interpreter, and the reply travelled back to me, by the same channel, to the effect that we all come from one parent, that God is merciful, and that for a little good in us He pardons the evil. I tried to trace this pardoning love to Jesus Christ, whereupon one of them brought forward a Muhammadan book, in which the Christian Prophet was spoken of. This was all done with perfect good temper, and apparently without offence, but I was told afterwards that Nogai Bi, who had accompanied us, was a fanatic, and often harboured in his dwelling hodjas, or religious pilgrims, who have been to Mecca, and who, when discovered by the Russians, are sent about their business, because of their evil political influence, and because they fleece the people.

What little religious knowledge the Kirghese have is kept alive by mullahs, who go from aul to aul assisting at marriages and at the burial of the dead; but very often their services are dispensed with, because the civil ceremony is the principal part of Kirghese wedlock, whilst the poor for funerals cannot afford the expense. Amongst these mullahs are some who have received a certain religious education at Samarkand or Bokhara. These enjoy the respect of the people, but the majority are pitifully ignorant and lazy to a degree. They take advantage of a credulous race, and resort to sorcery and kindred devices.

Having finished our visit to the aul, we returned to the stately tent of M. Troitzky to find it surrounded with a crowd of Kirghese, who had come to the place for a popular election. The Russians have, to a very large extent, left the Kirghese to maintain order among themselves, by the exercise of their own patriarchal laws. The judge is chosen by the people, and trials are oral and public, conducted according to conscience, relations being defended by relations. Thus every important case becomes a public matter, and popularly judged, its brightest features being the frequent appeals made to the consciences of the contending parties, and the spirit of reconciliation that generally accompanies the verdict. A marked feature in the transaction is the importance attached by the Kirghese to an oath. They call it jan-beru, or "giving one's soul."

ALPINE RETREATS.

LA BADIA, CONNOBIO, LAGO MAGGIORE.

PEOPLE who have not as yet determined upon their customary summer or autumn trip, may be glad to hear of this really charming spot, in the midst of mountain and lake scenery, at present but little known to the ordinary tourist, and specially suited to those who seek quiet and refreshment free from the drawbacks of ordinary hotel life.

La Badia was formerly a monastery, of which the picturesque old tower, a few rooms, and some of the cloisters, still remain, while new buildings complete three sides of a quadrangle. It lies about 250 ft. above Lago Maggiore and about a mile from Connobio, well known as the coolest place on the Italian lakes, and within five miles of the Swiss frontier. On the hottest day there is shade in the chestnut woods and a breeze at some of the many points of view at La Badia.

The Pension is in the hands of Mons. and Mdme. Beranach The former is a member of the Alpine Club, and a most efficient and kind guide to his guests in the numerous shorter or longer excursions which abound in the district. It would require a long sojourn to become acquainted with this most beautiful country. The lake, with its varying colours and many villages; the passes towards the Simplon and St. Gothard, the numerous small gorges with their waterfalls, the hill-tops with the nearer scenery, and the higher mountain heights with their extended views to Turin, Milan, and the plains and rivers of Lombardy, to Monte Rosa and its adjacent snowy ranges, and even as far as the mountains of the Engadine, are all full of that "mountain-top" feeling so dear to real lovers of nature. A small boat on the lake is free to visitors. The flora and fauna are also unusually interesting and beautiful, and sketching subjects and studies are innumerable.

La Badia is within a day and a half's journey from London viâ Bâle, the St. Gothard and Locarno, and the pension is from five to seven francs a day for each person. At present there is no English church, but Mons. Beranach holds a little service on Sundays in his salon which the few Protestants in the country attend. H. L. H.

DEAR SIR,—I wish to make this place known to the many tired Christian workers. Here are sulphur baths of great efficacy in the cure of throat affections, rheumatism, &c. There are two classes—moderate prices. The Director, Mr. Amsler, speaks English. The journey hither from London takes about twenty-four hours. Return ticket for a month about £5 10s. CHEYNE BRADY.

THE LEPERS OF INDIA.

Few people are aware of the extent to which leprosy exists in the present day. It is, probably, to be found all over the world to a much greater extent in proportion than it was when Moses led the children of Israel through the wilderness, or when our Lord healed the ten. In India there are said to be 135,000 lepers—men, women and children—the victims of the most awful disease known to humanity! Here is a description of what was seen in a leper settlement, taken from Archdeacon Wright's book, "Leprosy, and its Story;" and this description may be taken as typical of all such settlements, wherever found:—

"Three miles inland from Kalaupapa is the leper village of Kalawao, which may safely be pronounced one of the most horrible spots on all the earth; a home of hideous disease and slow-coming death, with which science in despair has ceased to grapple. A community of doomed beings socially dead, 'whose only business is to perish'; wifeless husbands, husbandless wives, children without parents, and parents without children; men and women who have 'no more a portion for ever in anything that is done under the sun,' condemned to watch the repulsive steps by which each of their doomed fellows passes down to a loathsome death, knowing that by the same they, too, must pass."

It is gratifying to know that in India special efforts are being made to relieve the sufferings of the lepers, and to preach to them the Gospel of the blessed Jesus. About eleven and a half years ago, Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, a missionary, having returned for a short period to this country, was led to tell some of his personal friends of his experiences amongst the lepers; much interest was awakened, and an effort was made to raise a small sum annually, to enable him, on his return to India, to relieve some individual cases. The modest amount of £30 was proposed, but to the great astonishment of the few friends who took an interest in the matter, they received over £500 in the first six months. This was taken as a sign that the Lord would bless the work, and so our good friends went on, trusting in Him, and looking to Him for his guidance. Now, at the end of eleven years the work is being carried on in eight different centres in India, while a committee has been formed, and a society has been established called the "Mission to Lepers in India."

The object of this Society is to carry the glad tidings of salvation to the poor, suffering lepers; to relieve their dreadful sufferings in any way that it may be possible; to provide food, clothing, and shelter for the destitute amongst them; and to encourage Christians both at home and in India to take a greater interest in them. The Society has no missionaries of its own, but wherever it finds missionaries willing to take the spiritual oversight of the lepers in their respective districts, it provides them with the funds necessary to carry on the work. In some places there are already leper asylums, but there is no spiritual work being done in them, and one of the objects of this Mission is to promote such work. The Society sometimes erects buildings suitable for the lepers to dwell in, or a prayer room, or little chapel for them to worship in; at others it will pay the salary of a native Christian and his wife who will look after the lepers; while in many instances it provides for the entire support of the destitute lepers.

The work has from the first been greatly owned by God in the conversion of souls, and many poor lepers who were once, in the most literal sense, without hope, are now looking forward to that blessed time when they shall be "raised incorruptible," and when the body of their humiliation shall be "made like unto the the body of his glory."

In one asylum, which has been established for many years, long before the "Mission to Lepers" came into existence, there have been since its foundation 328 baptisms. With such encouragement it is not to be wondered at that the Committee is now anxious to extend the work; few, very few, of the vast population of lepers have as yet been reached with the Gospel, and yet we can scarcely imagine a more Christlike work than this is.

Hitherto the work has been carried on very quietly; there have been few public meetings held on its behalf, the chief information being gathered from the modest little annual report, and from a little pamphlet entitled, "Lepers in India;" but now the committee feel bound to bring the work more prominently forward, in order that the public may know what is being done, and may have an opportunity to extend the work very much more than anything that has been done as yet. Mr. Wellesley C. Bailey, 17, Glengyle-terrace, Edinburgh, secretary of the Society, will be happy to give all information that may be required, and will gladly address meetings when they can be arranged for.

MR. MULLER'S ORPHAN HOMES.

In the narrative of facts concerning the Lord's dealings with this servant of God during another year (Nisbet & Co.) there is a charm which makes it peculiarly refreshing. It is not too much to say that the work in its main features, and in the spirit in which from the first it has been carried on, is unique. There is a sentence in the report before us which, however, carries us much further than this. After speaking of concern for poor orphans, and desire for the salvation of their souls as prompting him to undertake the work, Mr. Müller says, "Yet the primary object, the great desire, I had in carrying on this work, simply through the instrumentality of prayer and faith, without applying to any human being for help, was that it might be seen that now, in the nineteenth century, God is still the living God, and that now, as well as thousands of years ago, He listens to the prayers of his children, and helps those who trust in Him."

Thus was the work begun on March 5, 1834. And now, as we read in the closing paragraph of the report, "without anyone having been personally applied to for anything by me, £692,071 5s. 1½d. has been given to me for the orphans as the result of prayer to God, since the commencement of the work," in addition to £309,740 11s. 10¾d., making, with the sale of Bibles and tracts and the payments for children in the day schools, a grand total of £1,054,328 1s. No fewer than 7108 orphans have been trained in these Homes, which now accommodate 2050 children. These, being taken at the earliest age, remain, in the case of the girls, till they are seventeen years of age.

Not the least interesting part of the report is that which tells how wonderfully the Lord has sustained his servant: how, day by day, the wants of the institution have been supplied by remittances from all parts of the world. From the spirit in which these donors write, it is plain that Mr. Müller's great object has been attained in a remarkable way—that he has been the honoured instrument of leading many people to such a complete trust in God that they give systematically as the Lord prospers them, and find untold joy and blessing in so doing. One writer says: "I began with giving a tenth, but gradually increased until for some years I have given half of all the profits from my business, and this year, as a thank-offering to the Lord for restored health, I am giving Him all the profits." Many contributions are forwarded by those who, as orphans, formerly enjoyed the benefits of the Homes; the numbers of these, as well as the loving spirit which manifestly animates the donors towards the Home and the teachers and friends of their youth, tell their own story of the character of the training bestowed. The list of gifts, while deeply interesting, is of a kind to cause many Christians to consider their ways and to stimulate them to a more real charity. One, in sending ten shillings, says that five years since the Lord inclined her to put away a penny a day for the orphans, and thus she is enabled to send ten shillings three times a year. Mr. Müller, speaking of his experience of God's wonderful goodness, says: "There is a length, and breadth, and depth, and height of blessedness contained in that word of the Lord, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive,' of which the great majority of believers, I fear, know but very little. My full conviction is that if believers were to enter into what is contained in that word, at least twenty times more would be done by the Church of God for missions, for the circulation of the holy Scriptures and tracts, for the spread of the truth throughout the world, and for the poor, than is now accomplished." These words should be pondered by all who earnestly desire the extension of Christ's kingdom.

There are other branches of the work, such as the Scriptural Knowledge Institution, which might well claim attention. For the support of missionary operations in various parts of the world, large amounts are contributed year by year. Very encouraging reports are given from many of the 136 preachers of the Word in various parts of the world, who from time to time receive assistance from this fund. Eighty-five schools are entirely supported by the funds of the Institution, whilst many others are assisted. Then there is the circulation of Bibles (199,997, with nearly a million of Testaments and portions), and of tracts and books (of which as many as three and a half millions have been sent out in one year).

Such a work is indeed a light in the world, still, alas! a dark place, requiring even a thousandfold more such illumination. That this light and many another, kindled by Him who is the Light of the world, may shine forth brightly to his honour must be the prayer of all who, like Mr. Müller, are looking ardently for his coming again. Our readers have, in bygone times, borne their part in sustaining this noble enterprise, conducted in a spirit of such simple dependence on God; we doubt not they will do so again. Mr. Müller's address is 3, Ashley-down, Bristol.

THE BLACKGANG MISSION.

Sir,—At the approaching season, when so many Christians will be visiting the Isle of Wight, may I be allowed to draw their attention to this Mission, which has been so marvellously owned of the Lord. It is entirely the work of ladies, and has been carried on for several years past at their own expense, with the exception of a few small, but much appreciated, contributions they have now and again received. The work and position of the Mission is most exceptional and peculiar, being almost exclusively among farm-labourers and their families, and I know of none that has been so blessed of the Lord, both among men and women. I have heard it stated, and believe it to be the fact, that there are more than a thousand souls in the Isle of Wight who have been found of the Lord through Mrs. Reade, Miss Hamilton, and Miss Edith Reade's instrumentality. I have myself heard many hundreds testify to the blessing they have received through those ladies.

To those who take especial interest in women's work I would commend the Blackgang Mission. A steady, unceasing work is carried on in the hall, the cottages, and the villages for miles around. No work could be more sound or more spiritual, and the Lord has set his seal to it. The work just now is in want of funds. Since Mr. Reade's death, two years ago, the family are no longer able to do as they formerly did. They want immediate and they want sustained help. Neither Mrs. Reade nor any of the ladies know that I am writing this. I feel sure, however, that they would agree with me, that it is right for us to let our wants be known to the Lord's people, though we ask personally of the Lord alone..—Yours faithfully,

George D. Michell.

THE CHRISTIAN INSTRUCTION SOCIETY has issued its sixtieth annual report. It aims, irrespective of denomination, to advance evangelical religion and Christian charity primarily amongst the inhabitants of the Metropolis and its vicinity, by promoting the observance of the Lord's Day, the preaching of the Gospel, the circulation of Holy Scriptures, with every other work of mercy. The design is a noble one, and results have been very satisfactory so far.

JESUS IN THE MIDST.

A SUNDAY MORNING ADDRESS TO CHILDREN.

By Dr. OSWALD DYKES.

[Portion of Scripture read : Luke xxiii. 32—43.]

In reading this passage for the attention of the children, I would have them notice that when our Lord was crucified, He was not alone, but in the company of two others, who were apparently of set purpose associated with Him by those who had the management of the matter. They were arranged on each side of Him, so as to give Him, as it were, a place of pre-eminence as chief of the malefactors, setting Him in the centre as though He not only was a fit companion for the worst of criminals, but was even chief among them. I do not know whether that was intended as a studied insult to the Lord Jesus or not. It looks very like it ; but in any case, whatever the purpose of those who did it, it has been most graciously used and overruled by our heavenly Father in his providence to bring out, in a very striking way, some most precious things about our Lord Jesus, and the reason of his death.

For one thing, this arrangement, which put an evil-doer on either hand of Him, fulfilled to the very letter the words of one remarkable prophecy, which had been in the mind of Jesus Himself a few hours before His crucifixion, and which He had referred to. This prophecy you will find if you care to look for it ; it is in the end of the fifty-third chapter of Isaiah, that well-known and wonderful chapter in which the sufferings of Christ are so clearly foreshadowed. At the very end of that chapter the words occur: "He was numbered with the transgressors;" and if you look back to the chapter which comes before the chapter we have read (Luke xxii. 37), you will find our Lord, the night before He was crucified, talking about it with his disciples. He remembered this text in Isaiah, and brought it to their recollection. He said: "I say unto you, that this that is written must yet be accomplished in Me;" and then He quotes the words from Isaiah: "And He was reckoned among the transgressors," adding: "The things concerning Me have an end."

Now it is not at all wonderful that, after such a singular reference to that passage, made on the night before He was betrayed, those who had sat with Him and heard Him should have remembered his words when they noticed on each side of Him a "transgressor," an open and notorious criminal, who, for breaking the laws of his country, had been condemned to die. And it was noticed ; because, if you will look up the Gospel of Mark, where he tells this incident about the two thieves who were crucified with Jesus, you will find that he was reminded of the same text, and that he quotes it once more. He says this was the fulfilment of it, and so it was—very literally the minutest fulfilment of it. It was fulfilled in a very real sense that day, when Jesus took his place between two thieves, as a central malefactor in the judgment of the law, in order to remind and teach us that He was Himself putting Himself into the place of all the malefactors and transgressors of mankind, and bearing the gathered iniquity of us all in his single, pure, and perfect body.

Another thing that happened in consequence of that arrangement was that it gave Jesus an opportunity of showing Himself in the very moment of his suffering and death as both able and willing to save the malefactors among whom He was crucified. It was the chief of sinners for whom He died. We all are among the malefactors—not the transgressors of human law, but the transgressors of God's law, in whose place, among whom, Jesus put Himself that He might die for us. It is a comfort to us to see that when He took his place among us as sinners before the law of God, He did it with such mighty grace in his heart and such supreme power in his arm that he is able and willing to save from death eternal even the worst of those among whom He condescended to be numbered.

This led, as you see, to the repentance of one of these two robbers. But observe this—that while the repentance of one of the robbers shows us the grace and power of Jesus, able to save to the uttermost, the impenitence of the other robber teaches us also a very weighty lesson of the position which Jesus holds still in the world of sinful men. He is in the midst of us sinners still, drawing to Himself the love and confidence of some sinners as bad as either robber on the cross, but hardening the heart of other sinners, and rejected by them because their hearts were hardened. In the position He occupies on the cross we see a picture of the place He holds still among men, drawing some on, rejected by others. We see two men in the same condemnation—partners in the same crimes, sharers of the same punishment, brought into contact with the same Saviour, offered the same spectacle of Divine love and mercy; we see one drawn by it and the other hardened.

I think if the boys and girls who are listening now to me will try to put themselves on the spot, and in view of that great suffering which was taking place upon Calvary, they will begin to see that the sight of Jesus, in his meekness and patience and gentleness, silently bearing insult and wrong, but whose life had been so good and so pure, was the sight which touched the heart of that robber, and made him penitent. The robber that morning was not a penitent robber. When he was fastened up on the cruel stake, he was still not a penitent robber, so far as we know. It even seems probable that, when the mocking and insult began around the Cross, he was not then a penitent robber. I think if you will read very carefully all the accounts of the Crucifixion you will see that there was a kind of epidemic of mocking and insult round the Cross for an hour or two that morning. It began with the chief priests and rulers who had been foremost in getting Jesus condemned. Then it spread to the people. From the people it spread to the heathen soldiers, the Roman guards, who were round the cross, and thence from them it spread to the poor robbers who were hanging on the tree, and they too began to mock. So awful is that infection of mocking! So dreadful is the force of evil example, and such the frighful sin which can be committed when once that demon of mockery and insult against the holy and the good possesses the soul of man.

But at the last, seeing the object of this wanton cruelty and suffering bearing it with such Divine patience, one heart at least in the mocking crowd grew ashamed of itself, and that one about the last which we would have expected to grow ashamed of itself. The man whom you would have said was about the worst man there began to contrast the gentle and the marvellous patience of Him who was suffering beside him with himself. He contrasted their previous life. He began to think then of his own evil life, and how he had deserved to die. He began to think how badly he was bearing his suffering compared with this Man who had not deserved to suffer, whose life had been so good, so gentle, and so kind; and it touched his conscience. It broke him down, and made him ashamed of himself, most of all ashamed that men should revile one so good. He began to rebuke his fellow-robber for his infamous language, and to tell him it became them better to be silent and to bear patiently what their sins deserved. The sense of sin awoke in the man's heart, and made him truly penitent; and to be truly penitent is the way to Jesus. When we are penitent, then Jesus seems to us very beautiful and very needful, and our love goes out to Him as this man's did. He ventured then and there—the only one who ventured it in all that crowd—to call Him, not in mockery, but in earnest: "My King! My King! remember me when Thou comest into thy kingdom." And the only confession of Jesus' real position as the Messiah, as the Saviour, as the King of men, that He received that day upon the Cross was got from the robber who was dying with Him.

I do not wonder that this has always been a very favourite incident, one that people have cared very much to think of, especially when they found their own sins very grievous, and their own cross very hard. When men have gone very far in wrong doing, and are ready to die, and feel there is nothing but a dark black prospect before them of the judgment of God, it is very comforting to know that at the very last hour the very worst man may repent; and that from the stake even, and the gallows on which wicked men suffer for their public crimes, there is a path to the paradise of God. That is very encouraging; but I would beg you this morning to turn away in your early days from the spirit of lawlessness and of contempt of what is sacred and good, and yield to that love which came down to the Cross and suffered there for you. Remember it is far better to serve Jesus with the strength of one's mind and cling to Him in the days of one's youth and vigour than at the last by a bare chance, in the moment when death is clouding your eyes, to turn with desperate cry to Him who even then does not refuse to hear. One robber went from the Cross to Paradise; but how many more, how infinitely many more, have ended as they began, and, having chosen the wrong path when they were boys and girls like you, struck at the parting of the ways into the lefthand road, have thought that there was no escape for them, but were carried on by the force of evil company and evil example, and everything that keeps men going on as they have begun, until it ended—not in Paradise! May God give us grace to learn these lessons.

RUM'S VICTIM.

Mr. A. J. Talbott, who died at South Bend, Ind., from the effects of a relapse into intemperance, was formerly a minister, and once a Member of Congress from Kentucky. In a temperance meeting he thus gave his experience:—

But now that the struggle is over I can survey the field and measure up the losses. I had a position high and holy. This demon tore from me the robes of my sacred office, and sent me forth churchless and Godless, a very hissing and by-word among men. Afterward I had a large and lucrative business, and my voice in all courts was heard pleading for justice, mercy, and right. Anon the dust gathered on my unopened books, and no footfall crossed the drunkard's office. I had moneys ample for all necessities; but they took wings, and went to feed the coffers of the devil which possessed me. I had a home adorned with all that wealth and most exquisite taste could suggest. This devil crossed the threshold, and the lights faded from the chambers; the fire went out on the holiest of altars, and leading me through its portals, despair walked forth with her, and sorrow and anguish lingered within. I had children, beautiful, to me at least, as a dream of the morning, and they had so entwined themselves around their father's heart that, no matter where it might wander, it ever came back to them on the bright wings of a father's undying love. This destroyer took their hands in his and led them away.

I had a wife whose charms of mind and person were such that to see her was to remember, and to know her was to love. For thirteen years we walked the rugged path of life together, rejoicing in the sunshine, sorrowing in the shade. The infernal monster could not spare me even this. I had a mother who for long, long years had not left her chair, a victim of suffering and disease; and her choicest delight was in the reflection that the lessons she taught had taken root in the heart of her youngest born, and that he was useful to his fellows and an honour to her that bore him. But the thunderbolt reached even there, and there it did its cruel work. Ah me! never a word of reproach from her lips—only a tender caress; only a shadow of great and unspoken grief gathered over her dear old face; only a trembling hand laid more lovingly on my head; only a closer clinging to the cross; only a more piteous appeal to Heaven if her cup were not full. And while her boy raved in his wild delirium two thousand miles away, the pitying angels pushed the golden gates ajar, and the mother of the drunkard entered into rest.

And thus I stand: a clergyman without cure; a barrister without brief; a father without a child; a husband without a wife; a son without a parent; a man with scarcely a friend; a soul without a hope—all swallowed up in the maelstrom of drink.

MANCHESTER MEDICAL MISSION.—The annual report of this Mission and Dispensary for the year ending 1886 is very encouraging. The Medical Superintendent, Dr. Edward Meacham, states that the number of patients under treatment during the past year was 2344. He thinks it high time for the Christian Churches of all denominations to set about the business of the Master in tending the sick, in feeding the hungry, and clothing the naked. The work of the Mission has been going on for over twenty-five years, and it has met with no little success in turning men from Satan's darkness into the marvellous light of the kingdom of God.

A NEW PREVENTIVE HOME.

Saturday week witnessed the inauguration, at Parson's-green, Fulham, of another Home in connection with the work with which Mr. E W. Thomas has so long been identified. As it was known a few weeks ago that preparations for a stone-laying ceremony would be sufficiently advanced by June, the annual meeting of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution was deferred until Saturday, when a goodly number of friends attended to express their sympathy with the work. The chair was occupied by Mr. F. A. Bevan, who, after the meeting had been opened with prayer, called on Mr. Thomas for the annual report. He presented extracts which showed that the committee had, during the past year, been acting on their original plan of welcoming all suitable cases, whatever might be the state of the funds. In addition to the ordinary wants for the ensuing year about £1,550 will be required for the completion of the Preventive Homes at Parson's-green.

Mr. Bevan said: We must all thank God for what He has enabled his servants to do in past years, and that we are able to-day to see them extending their labours in the direction of preventive work. We cannot help feeling that each one saved means that there is one more requiring to be dealt with, one more requiring the Christ-like agency of this Institution, because she had fallen into sin and trouble. We will rejoice over the victories, but we will not forget the number who still require to be saved. I am afraid that, notwithstanding all the years you have been at work, instead of there being less need for efforts such as yours, there is even greater need for them than ever. I do not think that in our century, full of signs of missionary progress as it is, there is a work which should command more labourers than yours.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe had been impressed by one fact in the report, that the expense meant simply £7 a head for those who had been received by this Institution during the past year. It certainly was not a large expenditure for the deliverance of a poor soul from the condition in which it was found by the friends of this Society. It would be well that everyone should bear the fact in mind, whenever the question suggested itself, "What could be done with £7?" It was necessary to speak very solemnly of the need of this work, especially when they remembered that one judge alone, Mr. Justice Hawkins, had said that during only six months there had been no less than 120 cases of 120 men seeking to compass the ruin of girls. If one judge could say this of cases which would come before him, what would be the united testimony of all the judges in the land.

Rev. J. L Foster characterised the work as Christ-like, and he gave it as his conviction that in the city of London there was not one which required greater urgency. At Chelsea, he said, a year ago, I had to preside over a committee formed for the purpose of finding out, as far as possible, in the interests of the ratepayers, what was really the origin of the evil? In the course of their inquiries thirty-four poor girls from the infirmary were brought before us. What struck me most, I may say, was that these poor unfortunates were all so intensely human. We are too apt to think of them, and to treat them as if they were all far beyond the precincts of what is good; whereas, I believe, there is not a single outcast in this vast city that cannot be reached by the hand of Christian charity. The report was unanimously adopted, and Rev. J. Shaw and Rev. W. Crellin spoke to another resolution pleading for enlarged support.

On the conclusion of the meeting the foundation stone of the new Preventive Home, making another at Parson's-green, was laid by Mrs. F. A. Bevan, to whom an address was presented with a silver trowel by the Committee. A beautiful bouquet was also handed her by one of the little girls from the Home, several of whom were presented, which added greatly to the interest of the service by the manner in which they led the singing. Upon the conclusion of this part of the programme,

Mr. Burton read an address of hearty congratulation to Mr. E. W. Thomas, and Mr. F. A. Bevan, to the surprise of all, except a few who were in the secret, handed Mr. Thomas a purse containing 150 guineas, which had been subscribed by those who wished to give their friend a substantial token of their respect. Mr. E W. Thomas made a cordial response to this expression of his friends' regard for him, although, as he said, he found it difficult to exercise sufficient self-command to enable him to reply as he desired to so unexpected an incident in the day's proceedings. He was followed by a friend who had been associated with him at the very commencement of the work—Mr. Perry—who expressed the pleasure it afforded him to see his old friend on such a happy occasion.

CHILDREN'S SPECIAL SERVICE MISSION

THE WORK IN FOREIGN LANDS.

Dear Sir,—I was very glad to see in your issue of June 10 that a correspondent called the attention of tourists to our Children's Tracts in different languages, and suggested that it would greatly add to the enjoyment of a holiday if they distributed some of these "Leaflets." On behalf of our Committee, allow me to say that we shall be most happy to send a parcel to any of your readers going abroad this summer. A great many have already applied, principally those who have had the joy of distributing them in the last few years, and have witnessed for themselves the intense delight of both children and adults at receiving them.

Since Christmas so very little money had come in towards this much-needed branch of our work, that it seemed quite a trial of faith. Many kind friends have written, in these last six months, of their continued and increased interest in this effort to send portions to those for whom little or nothing was prepared, but from various causes they were unable to help as formerly; and I must confess to sometimes feeling a little perplexed, though not in despair, because we were convinced that this was distinctly and entirely the Lord's work. So our hearts were not a little cheered and comforted the other day, to notice that the Lord had sent £200, by some unknown friend, through The Christian. We are deeply thankful to our heavenly Father, and also to the kind and generous donor through whose hands the gift came. We take it as a token that God will send the remainder of the £4000 we have asked Him for, so that before very long we may have the joy of scattering another six millions of these sweet messengers of salvation, in fifty languages.

We shall now print off at least 200,000 tracts, between German, French, and Italian, in which languages our stock was getting very low. We hope to issue 80,000 Hindustani in the course of the next ten days. The modern Greek tracts are now ready, and I will send specimens, or a parcel of them, to any of your readers who can make use of them. We have also received specimens in Chinese, Singhalese, Punjabi, Malayalim, and Karen for Upper Burmah. Two friends have kindly supplied the funds for a series of 60,000 in Burmese.

We shall be thankful to receive help towards this important work, however small, from those who may feel the burden of these children's souls laid upon them. For the guidance of any who are able to spare larger sums, I may mention that £40 will cover the expense of bringing out a small edition of 60,000, or £100 a large edition of 150,000. Perhaps some friends may have one special country laid upon their hearts, and would be willing to provide the funds for a series of tracts in the language of that country. I should be most grateful if someone would send us £40 to pay for 60,000 Breton tracts, as there is a deep need for the dissemination of Gospel truth in Brittany, many of the people being in deplorable, almost heathen, darkness. Pasteur Lecoat, of Tremel, has found the 16,000 we gave him of much service, and earnestly appeals for larger supplies.

May I ask for many prayers on behalf of the seaside work this summer. I purpose, God willing, spending the month of August at Redcar.

Yours very faithfully, Josiah Spiers.

BRIGHTON OPEN-AIR AND CHRISTIAN MISSION.—From the seventh annual report of this Mission we glean that the open-air meetings last season were attended by a large number of persons, who listened eagerly to the word of life. The work is sustained by qualified ministers and evangelists from London, and Mr. Thwaites devotes part of his time to it.

GOSPORT Y.W.C.A.—On the occasion of the opening of the new rooms acquired for this branch of the Association at "Gosport House," North Cross-street, there were large gatherings of members and friends. A devotional meeting was held on Wednesday, June 16, and there was earnest prayer for blessing on every branch of the work. On Thursday, June 17, the subscribers and friends were invited to a social gathering, followed by a public meeting. Prayer is asked that God's blessing may rest on all that is attempted in these new rooms. R. M. J.

LONDON CITY MISSION.

On the afternoon of Tuesday week Mr. and Mrs. J. Gurney Barclay held a garden meeting at their residence at Knott's-green, Leyton. The object of the meeting was to bring together some of those connected with the East-end of London, in order to acquaint them with the work of the London City Mission in that part of the metropolis, so as to secure for it an increased measure of local interest. A considerable number of the missionaries of the district were present. Everything fitted to minister to the comfort of the guests was thoughtfully arranged and carried out. A map of East London, showing what localities were yet unrepresented by the Mission, was prominently displayed. The beautiful grounds, replete with flowers and fruits, were promenaded by the delighted company to their heart's content. After refreshments a meeting was held in a spacious booth. Mr. Dunn, district secretary, read a brief statement, showing that seventy of the city missionaries are located in that quarter of London; to continue the work of these funds are urgently needed. Four most necessitous districts in East London had to be given up last year through the failure of guaranteed support, and it is feared that others will have to be relinquished unless timely aid be forthcoming.

Rev. James Knaggs, of Stratford, pleaded earnestly for increased support in reference to an agency which is doing such a grand work. The men, of whom he could speak in the highest terms, are engaged in a personal ministry that could not fail to reach the hearts of the people. Two of the missionaries were selected to give a specimen of the Society's work. Mr. Price told of his visits to public-houses; how cordially they were received, and what manifest blessing attended the visits. During last month alone he had spoken to nearly 1000 men and about 500 women in gin-shops. Mr. Carley followed with a testimony to the good he had been enabled to do among drovers at the Cattle Market. Drink and gambling are at the root of most of the misery into which these men have sunk; some of them earn £4 per week, and yet are poor and wretched.

The excellent programme also included an address by Lady Hope, which was declared by Mr. Bevan to be one of the ablest he had ever heard in the interests of the Society. Red-hot missionaries, her ladyship said, were the ones that were needed; as for singing, nothing suited the working-class like a good Sankey's hymn, in which they all could join. Mr. F. A. Bevan, as treasurer, continued the appeal. A lady who recently began to help the Mission, told him that her life had been brighter and happier ever since doing so. Most fervently did he entreat friends to come forward with substantial aid, for the immediate localities where the agents were so much needed could not possibly do it. Mr. David Howard confirmed this, saying it was quite hopeless to think of obtaining local help.

MISS VON FINKELSTEIN.

From a letter recently received from this lady, we regret to learn that during her travels northward in Palestine she was taken sick with fever, brought on by the heat and fatigue of the journey. She reached Damascus, however, on June 4, and was much better in health. She says the little band of Christian missionaries in Damascus are doing a noble work, labouring hard among the native population, and living a self-denying life. Miss von Finkelstein hopes soon now to return to England.

WATER-STREET MISSION, NEW YORK.—Mr. Stephen H. Hadley, who was one of the first converts of the Water-street Mission (formerly Jerry McAuley's), is now in charge of this enterprise. He succeeds Mr. J. F. Soorey, who has done a good work there for several years past.

ORPHAN WORKING SCHOOL.—The annual report of this Institution is not of a very satisfactory nature in its financial aspects. The number of children received into the schools has been up to the average of previous years, but there is a falling off in the receipts from every source, and if this is not reversed there will be a decrease in the number of children to be admitted at future elections. There are now in the school 288 boys and 146 girls. The Alexandra Orphanage was amalgamated with the Orphan Working School in January, 1877, with accommodation for 200 children. There are now 163 boys and girls in the junior school. The number of children supported by the charity is 163. This noble and Christian work deserves to be heartily encouraged.

HOLINESS CONVENTION IN DUBLIN.

A Convention for the promotion of holiness, or deepening of the spiritual life, was held in connection with the assembling of the annual Methodist Conference in Dublin, on Wednesday, June 23, in Stephen's Green Church, in that city. For several years back Sunday-school and Temperance Conventions have been held during the Conference, but this was the first time that a Holiness Convention had a recognised place on its programme. It has been felt, however, for a good while by many that more attention should be given to this subject; and, further, that it was desirable a larger number of purely spiritual and devotional meetings should be arranged for on such occasions. Accordingly it was decided to devote at least a day to the subject.

The day was divided into three sessions—morning, afternoon, and evening. Rev. Dr. McKee, Vice-President of the Conference, presided over the morning session, which lasted from eleven to one o'clock. After an interval spent in singing and prayer, Dr. Wood, of Southport, addressed the meeting. They were all agreed, he said, as to the importance of holiness. They were come to a crisis in the world's history, he believed, nearly to the end of the dispensation, when whole-heartedness and thoroughness were demanded from everyone who wished to advance the interests of his Lord. They must remember there was no perfection in themselves. They must be emptied of self and filled with Christ's fulness. Full salvation was more than deliverance from guilt; it was deliverance from the power of indwelling sin; it was to be God-like—that they might have the mind in them that was in Christ, and walk as He walked.

After another interval spent in devotional exercises, Rev. R. C. Johnson, Enniskillen, delivered an address. He said there were four steps to the attainment of holiness—conviction, desire, consecration, and faith. Conviction in the sinner produced a sense of guilt, but conviction in the believer a sense of pain. That conviction was brought about in various ways, but especially by seeing God, like Job, Isaiah, Daniel, &c. Desire did not necessarily follow conviction. Paul had three desires—to be in Christ, to be like Christ, and to be with Christ. That desire should not be accompanied by dread or fear of the responsibility; surely there should be no dread when He who claimed them fully was their Father, and when they were called to be the bride of Christ. Consecration took place at conversion, but it often did not keep pace with their age and experience. It should be a continuous act. The sexton should be as holy as the class-leader, and the choir as holy as the pastor. Many who clearly saw and maintained that justification was by faith, failed to perceive that sanctification also was through faith.

Rev. William Middleton, Birmingham, gave the next address. Holiness was not apart from, but the very essence of religion. They must lay their hand firmly on that word Scriptural. May the day never come when, through fear of the criticism of the age, they would be willing to tone down the words of Jesus and his apostles! He briefly defined the terms consecration, sanctification, purity, Christian perfection, and explained the distinction between purity and maturity. Every true Christian was either in the enjoyment of or seeking that blessing. They did not get it by gigantic effort, but by washing in the blood of the Lamb. By full submission and full trust they could secure it, and He who was mighty to save was mighty to keep.

Revs. Charles Inwood, W. H. Quarry, James Robertson, and others also took part in the proceedings.

At the afternoon session of the Convention Rev. William Gorman presided. Rev. William Middlton again addressed the Convention, basing his remarks upon the words, "Arise, shine, for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee" (Isa. lx. 1). Rev. Thos. Cook told about an encouraging and successful evangelistic tour he recently had had in Norway, and gave his own experience in reference to the subject of holiness.

EVENING SESSION.

The evening session was occupied as the open session of the Conference, Rev. Richard Roberts in the chair. Rev. Albert S. Hunt, D.D., delegate from the Methodist Episcopal Church of America, made the following interesting statement: The Methodist Church of America had missions in Sweden, Denmark, Germany, Italy, Bulgaria, Switzerland, Bavaria, India, China, Japan, Corea, Mexico, Uruguay, Paraguay, &c. They had 200 American missionaries, 700 native missionaries, and 700 teachers in these fields of labour. They had 2,000 English-speaking missionaries in the United States, and 500 German, Italian, &c. They had six theological seminaries, fifty-four colleges and universities, eight of which were for women only, and sixty classical seminaries.

The endowment of these institutions amounted to fifteen millions of dollars. They had an Education Board to assist worthy persons to acquire an education, and their children's day—the second Sunday in June—was most popular amongst them and was observed even in all their missions. The negro population was growing and improving, and they had forty schools established for giving them an education. Their Tract Society had issued 2000 tracts in seven different languages, and their Sunday-school Union had ten periodicals in English and five in German, with a circulation of 20,000,000 of copies last year, giving 250,000,000 pages. Their publishing house was never so prosperous; it was completely out of debt, and its assets were valued at nearly 2,000,000 dollars. They had 19,700 churches, worth 75,000,000 dollars, and 8000 parsonages, worth 15,000,000 dollars. They had 250,000 Sunday-school teachers, nearly 2,000,000 scholars, and in the Methodist Church North alone about 2,000,000 Church members.

They did not, however, depend upon their machinery and numbers for success, but upon the power and blessing of the Holy Ghost. He then referred to the holy lives and glorious deaths of Bishops Simpson and Wiley, and said that while he bore to them the greetings of 4,000,000 persons behind him, he could not express to them the affection he had towards them, and he considered that the most honoured moment of his life. He earnestly prayed God might bless them.

Revs. Dr. Greeves, Ex-President, Dr. Young, Dr. McKee, J. Baker, M.A., and others spoke.

A CONVALESCENT HOME AT MARGATE.

Last summer I felt the great need of a Convalescent Home, having to place out many of my children in various places in the country and at the seaside; also for several of my fellow-workers who needed rest.

During the past winter I received the gift of some furniture, but not quite sufficient for the purpose I require. I have taken a house with eight rooms at Sweyn-road, Margate, well situated, and suitable in every way; but I am now quite stopped for the want of funds to complete it. I am very desirous of opening the Home soon, that we may not lose the fine weather. We are longing to send off a party of "little ones" to enjoy the fresh air. I think £35 would cover the expense.

TRACTS FOR INDIA.—I am engaged in mission work here, and at the same time am acting-chaplain to some one hundred and fifty soldiers of the Scottish Rifles. I am trying to reach the men with the Gospel. We have meetings for Bible study, total abstinence singing, visits to the sick in hospital, &c., &c. I want tracts for these men, and for a number of people also engaged in railway service here. Can your readers send me out some tracts suited to this class of people? Something short, sharp, and to the point—the "point" being that Christ is able and willing to save unto the uttermost everyone that cometh unto Him. I feel the need every time I go to the hospital, or among the men anywhere, of tracts for Christians, tracts for unconverted men, for drinking men, for weak men, who still want to do the right thing. (Rev.) C. L. Bare.

MR. SPURGEON'S ORPHANAGE.

On Wednesday last week the grounds of the Stockwell Orphanage, Clapham-road, were en fête on the occasion of the annual festival of this Institution, and also in celebration of Mr. Spurgeon's fifty-second birthday. There was, as in former years, a large gathering of friends. The band played on the lawn, and this was followed by a procession of the children, with the band and banners. During the afternoon there was an exhibition of African curiosities, &c., in the girls' play hall, and Mr. T. L Johnson delivered a short address concerning these. The singing and hand-bell ringing was one of the most pleasing features in the day's proceedings. Mr. Spurgeon presided, and addressed a few kindly words to the children. This was followed by an exhibition of musical drill.

At six o'clock Mr. Spurgeon presided over the annual meeting in the grounds. After engaging in prayer, he said, in the course of a brief address, they did not come to the public with any piteous appeal for money. If they liked to give, it was to their advantage to have a share in so good a concern. If they did not like, it did not signify at all. They were not dependent upon men, God's providence was their inheritance, and He would send them money by some means or other, They were never hard-up; they never would be their Great Banker supplied their needs. He begged to thank everybody who had given a contribution, and especially those friends who sent him nearly £1000 before he left home that morning. He thought that was a very handsome birthday present. He had shaken hands with a good many of them, but the larger proportion of the friends were far away—in Scotland, Ireland, in all parts of the world. Referring to efforts made on behalf of the hospitals, Mr. Spurgeon said it was a great shame upon London that a hospital should ever be in any kind of need. There ought to be more spontaneous giving, not by Christian people only, but by all sorts of people. He spoke for orphanages as well as for hospitals, and wished Christian people especially would really dedicate to God some portion of their substance with a view to giving it to such work; and that they would take thought also as to what institutions they helped, and what they did not help. Their charities needed an intelligent constituency, who were on the look-out to see where the money went. He had an old friend years ago who was a very queer man. He used to give his money to various missionary societies, and he sent word to them to know how many souls had been converted in the year. Then he calculated how much each soul cost, and gave his money where it was done cheapest. It looked a rather mercantile way of doing it. If there was not a very good outcome it was not much use giving your money. They wanted people who would use their judgment and understanding, and then he thought the almsgiving of London would be turned into a much more useful channel than it now was.

Addresses followed by Revs. J. A. Spurgeon, Allen T. Edwards, W. Justin Evans, R. Taylor, G. Hawken, S. B. Rees, F. H. White, and others.

THE GIRLS' AID SOCIETY.—The preventive work among girls in Torquay, which was begun about four years since, has made steady growth. It has assumed large proportions, so that more commodious premises are being sought for by the committee. Various classes are held, and much is being done to raise the religious and moral tone of the girls.

Y.M.C.A., BAYSWATER, W.—Meetings in support of this branch of the Y.M.C.A. were held on Tuesday, June 22, at the Rooms in Queen's-road. Hon. Henry Noel presided in the afternoon, and Rev. H W Webb-Peploe, Rev. Filmer Sulivan, Pastor Frank White, Sir Roper Lethbridge, M P., and Mr. W. H. Mills spoke. In the evening there was another gathering for the members and friends. Dr. R. Anderson presided, and the other speakers were Rev. John Tuckwell, Dr. Popham, Mr. C. M. Baker, and Mr. L. Evans. Both meetings were well attended. We rejoice to say that the Lord is prospering the work here. There are now about 160 members and associates. On Thursday evening there was a large gathering of the Bible-class Union, in connection with the various houses of business in this neighbourhood.

THE FEMALE SERVANTS' HOME.

On Monday week, in Lower Exeter Hall, Mr. George Williams presided over a very interesting meeting of this Society. Fifty years have gone by since it was established, growing, as it did, out of a yet older institution founded in 1813 for the improvement and encouragement of female servants.

Mr. C. Stuart Thorpe presented the annual report, which took a review of the Society's work during the last fifty years; it paid a high tribute of respect to the memory of the late Mr. Daniel Cooper and other workers in connection with it. Of its earlier friends only one remains now—Mr. W. S. Gard, the chairman of the committee, and still one of its most active members. During the past year 1233 servants were admitted to the Homes, exclusive of those who had been readmitted more than once during the same year. The income had amounted to £1321 11s. 1d., and there was a balance in hand of £9 16s. 1d.

The Chairman distributed the rewards for terms of service from one to fifteen years. To those of on year a Bible was given, the number claiming it being 66; ten came forward for the framed certificate and book for five years' service; two had the silver medal for nine years, while one, Elizabeth Craig, who had kept the same situation for fifteen years, received the gold medal, Mr. Williams expressing the hope, as he handed it to her, that it represented something better—the gold medal of a good conscience. She was loudly cheered by her fellow-domestics.

Mr. G. Kirkham begged all to remember that the only way in which they could have true liberty was to be the servants of Christ. If you do not know, he said, what his service is you have never yet known what true freedom means, and you never can know it until you are truly his. In the course of his address he invited them all to attend the meeting for servants which is held at Mildmay on the second Sunday in October.

After some words from Mr. George Williams, Miss Mason followed with an address, in the course of which she said that she had had servants from their Homes. She had always impressed upon them what she would impress upon those hearing her—the importance of making service a business—a business which is to be learnt like any other. Colonel Puget spoke a few kindly words, reminding those before him that he had been a servant of his Queen for twenty-six years. He spoke upon the story of Naaman as illustrating the blessing of a good servant. Rev. B. Cassin expressed the hope that all mistresses would make a point of allowing their servants time to attend regularly a place of worship on the Lord's day. Mr. W. R. Lane, the last speaker, earnestly invited all to came to the Saviour, and the meeting was closed by Mr. George Williams offering prayer.

A SORT OF PREMIUM has been put upon the non-use of tobacco by a rich Philadelphia lady. A devout Christian and sincerely attached to the Presbyterian Church, she has bequeathed an estate and 100,000 dollars to provide a home for twelve aged and disabled Presbyterian ministers. One essential condition is that the ministers shall not use tobacco.

DEAF AND DUMB.—The annual meeting and election of inmates of the British Asylum for Deaf and Dumb Females was held on Tuesday, the 22nd inst., at the Asylum, Clapton, under the presidency of the Bishop of Bedford. Referring to the Royal Commission to inquire into the condition of the blind and the deaf and dumb, the report expressed a hope that, as a beneficent result, it might be made compulsory that guardians of the poor should send deaf mutes to properly certified institutions for their protection, training and education. This very numerous class of the most helpless and afflicted of our fellow-creatures silently appeals for Christian sympathy and aid. The British Asylum is the only institution for adult females who are deaf and dumb.

"A GOSPEL WAGGON" has been undertaken by the Central Union Mission of Washington, D.C. This waggon, containing a cabinet organ, six or eight good singers, several persons to make addresses, &c., visits three centres of non-church-going people every Sabbath afternoon. Singing, prayer, and brief addresses occupy an hour at each point, when all present are invited to visit the Mission. The last stop is made near the Mission, and just before its evening service. From one hundred to five or six hundred persons of all ages and classes, give quiet and respectful attention to the services. The attendance, especially at the Sabbath services of the Mission, has largely increased. This Mission is conducted by a committee representing the evangelical churches of the city.—New York Evangelist.

AN INTERNATIONAL PRAYER-MEETING.

This week there is being held in London the Triennial International Congress of the Federation for the repeal of legislative enactments and government ordinances that favour vice. Delegates are present from various European countries, and from America. A meeting was held in Westminster Town Hall on Sunday afternoon for prayer, praise, and consecration. Much to the regret of the goodly company, chiefly composed of ladies, Mrs. Josephine Butler was not able to be present and preside. Her husband, Canon Butler, is happily recovering, however, from his severe illness, and Mrs. Butler hopes to attend several of the Congress meetings in the course of the week.

In her absence Mrs. Richardson, of York, presided, and gave a warm greeting to the foreign delegates. By God's goodness, she said, a great victory on behalf of national purity had been gained in England. They desired to recognise the hand of the Lord in this, and to take courage for the future. The work must go forward till all the British colonies and dependencies, and also the European nations, have freed themselves from this guilty complicity with sin. She hoped their visitors from the Continent would be cheered by what had taken place in this country, and would return to their own lands strengthened for the good fight by the proceedings of the Congress.

As the meeting was specially designed for devotion and renewed consecration, there was not much speech-making. Mrs. H. W. Smith referred to the deep interest that had been awakened in America through the recent agitation, and said that 200,000 Christian women in that country were now banding themselves together to further the cause of lifting up fallen humanity. Mr. G. Gillett spoke of the spirit of prayerful dependence upon God that had characterised the repeal movement; and to this he attributed its success. He made a strenuous plea that India, Hong Kong, and other British possessions should be specially laid on the hearts of those at the Congress, with a view to their deliverance from the evils of the vicious systems that prevailed. The claims of India were also urged by Mrs. Baxter, who spoke some very encouraging words from Psalm cxviii.—"The Lord is on my side; I will not fear what man can do." There can be no doubt as to which side God is on in this controversy; let there be faith in his promise that whatsoever things we ask believingly we shall receive. Earnest prayer was made by various friends in connection with the special objects of the meeting. One of the French delegates spoke briefly in that language, referring to past achievements, and urging to persevering effort and trust in God.

We would draw the special attention of our London readers to the public meeting of the Congress at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, this (Thursday) evening, announced elsewhere.

REV. HENRY WARD BEECHER, the well-known Brooklyn preacher, reached Liverpool on Saturday, on a visit to this country. After some weeks' rest he purposes to deliver a series of lectures throughout the country.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—The following are the portions for the ensuing week:—July 4, Acts xii. 13—25; July 5, xiii. 1—13; July 6, xiii. 14—25; July 7, xiii. 26—41; July 8, xi. 42—52; July 9, xiv. 1—18; July 10, xiv. 19—28.

THE GOSPEL IN CAMP.—Through the kindness of many Christian friends, a liberal supply of tracts, Gospel booklets and Christian literature was received by the Brecon Y.M.C.A. for distribution to the 900 militiamen assembled for a month's training at Brecon. The camp was visited twice weekly. Every tent was entered, and each man received something suitable to read. Everywhere, even in the guard tent, band tent, canteen, recreation room and hospital, the visitors were eagerly welcomed, especially on the last occasion, when they gave away a large number of portions of the New Testament. Roman Catholics and Protestants vied in their eagerness to secure a copy. The men were grateful for the interest displayed in their spiritual welfare, and the superintendent of police publicly stated that the men had never left the town with less fighting and drunkenness.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.

The annual excursion and half-yearly meeting of this Association was held on Saturday last, when about 200 persons, a good number of whom were ladies, spent the day at the "Homes for Little Boys," Farningham. The weather could scarcely have been better for the occasion, although it was almost too hot during the afternoon. On arrival, after a journey of about an hour through lovely country fields, &c., a short devotional meeting was held in the chapel of the Home, when thanksgiving was made for the beautiful weather.

An opportunity was afforded to the visitors to see the boys at work in the various industrial departments, which include printing, shoemaking, tailoring, baking, painting, carpentering, &c., &c. Luncheon time had now come After the visitors had partaken of this, a collection was made on behalf of the Homes. Mr. Henry Lea, ex-President of the Association, gave a short address on "The Secret of a Commercial Traveller's Success." He said he knew many men whose only object in life was the accumulation of money, but he preferred what the ancient proverb says, "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favour rather than silver and gold."

Some time was pleasantly passed in out-door exercises, after which came tea. Mr. George Williams, President of the Association, subsequently gave a short address. He urged the importance of Christian commercial travellers embracing the opportunities they have of witnessing for Christ to the people they meet "on the road." Rev. A. O. Charles, Secretary of the Boys' Homes, thanked all present for paying them a visit. He facetiously alluded to his journey "on the road," carrying with him his samples, which were thirty little boys from the Homes; these carried their tools with them, soliciting orders for the goods made in the various departments of the Institution. Mr. Hall reminded friends of the C.T.C. Association that the Beneficent Fund, which had done much good, was exhausted, and they would be glad to receive donations in aid of it. After having spent a most enjoyable day, the visitors left a little after seven for their various homes.

MR. WOOKEY AT CLAPTON.

Mr. James B. Wookey conducted a five days' mission for men only at Chatsworth-road Tabernacle, Clapton, last week. In spite of the many political meetings being held in the neighbourhood, the services were well attended. The meetings being exclusively for men, Mr. Wookey was enabled to speak in no uncertain sound on the subject of Purity. He did not, however, content himself in painting the black picture of a licentious life, but fervently, yet with exceeding tenderness, preached Christ crucified as the only way by which the foul could become clean, and enabled to walk in the paths of purity and peace.

It was touching at the close of the services to see men, young and old, walking into the inquiry room with bowed heads seeking to be prayed with. One young fellow exclaimed immediately he had found peace: "I have watched this building go up from the laying of the first stone, but never came in till to-night; now God has saved me." The following night he brought his landlord to the mission; he, too, went away rejoicing in Christ. Will our readers pray for continued blessing on the work at Lower Clapton.

MR. W. J. LEWIS.—In a recent letter, Mr. J. Sharpless, of the mission in Spitalfields, for many years superintended by Mr. W. J. Lewis, writes:—On visiting Ryde, I found our brother and fellow-worker, Mr. Lewis, looking much better in health, since he left the East-end to sojourn here. It was pleasing to trace the old fire kindled in his soul while going over some of the scenes of by-gone days. He is working still for the Master in a quiet way, in visiting the homes of the poorer class, and taking part in Bible-classes, prayer-meetings, open-air meetings, &c.

THE SERVICE OF CHRIST.

"I am to serve Him in my daily calling; as much in my house or at my business as anywhere else."
Extract.

THE JUDGMENT-SEAT OF CHRIST.

"We must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ."—2 Cor. v. 10.

CHRIST OUR PASSOVER.

"Christ, the Lamb of God, hath 'suffered for sins, the Just for the unjust, and that whosoever believeth in Him shall not come into condemnation.' 'Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us.'"

ASSURANCE OF SALVATION.

"These things have I written unto you that believe on the name of the Son of God; that ye may know that ye have eternal life."—John v. 13.

GOD'S COMMAND.

"God commands you to repent lest you perish; lest you sink into the bottomless pit when Jesus comes; lest you be for ever banished from the presence."

FORGIVENESS OF SINS.

"I know that many will tell you that it is presumption to say you know that you are forgiven; but they know not of what they speak. Presumption lies, not in believing, but in doubting what God hath said."

LIVING WATERS.

"If you want satisfaction, it is not to be obtained by drinking at an earthly cup, which is soon emptied, but by receiving the Spirit, by drinking the Living Water.'

CHRIST AND THE MAN IN THE TOMBS.

"Here is a picture of a man under the power of Satan, living among tombs, loving the dead more than the living, and that is where the unconverted man and woman is—living with those who are 'dead in trespasses and sins.'"

ALIVE FROM THE DEAD.

"Jesus cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth. The voice sounded down into the deepest recesses of the grave, 'and he that was dead came forth.'"

ETERNAL LIFE.

"Now, whoever you may be that are reading these pages, let me again ask you most solemnly, as before God, who trieth the hearts, Have you eternal life?"

THE MERITS OF JESUS CHRIST.

"It will be my object in this little book to show briefly, from Scriptural evidence, first, what our own merits are; then, what the merits of our Lord Jesus Christ are; and lastly, what is the result of really trusting in those merits."

REPENT AND BE CONVERTED.

"Perhaps there are those who say, 'What has this to do with me?' I desire to tell you this day from God—that you are guilty of the very crime that Peter charged on the consciences of the Jews."

"AN EXCELLENT TEXT-BOOK FOR BIBLE CLASSES."—Sabbath School Magazine.

The Number "SEVEN" in Scripture.

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, C.B.

Tinted Covers, 1/-; Limp Cloth, 1/6; Cloth, Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges, 2/6.

"THE QUIVER" says:—

"Readers of history, and observers of nature alike, have often remarked on the frequency with which the number SEVEN occurs, and on the peculiar significance which, in all times, has attached to this number. Readers of the Bible, too, cannot well have failed to notice how frequently this particular number occurs in Holy Scripture; but many of them will be astonished to find the extent to which that number enters into the structure of God's Word, when they read a little book by Mr. S. A. Blackwood, C.B., entitled 'The Number SEVEN in Scripture.' This gives a complete and exhaustive record of all the passages in which the number appears, quoting about three hundred instances in the Old Testament, and one hundred in the New Testament. It will be found to run through the whole of the Bible, commencing with the institution of the seventh day, or Sabbath in Eden, and concluding with the various series of 'sevens' in the Apocalypse. The variety may be gathered from the following:—

Seven Utterances of God in Eden.
Seven Sayings of Christ on the Cross.
Seven Weepings of Joseph.
Seven Excuses of Moses when commissioned to deliver Israel.
Seven Prayers of Jesus recorded by Luke.
Seven Miracles recorded by John.
Seven Resurrections mentioned in Scripture.
Seven 'Walks' described in the Epistle to the Ephesians.
Seven Beatitudes in the Revelation.

"As the Author observes, 'We must surely acknowledge that a Divine design has caused this particular number to be so frequently employed, and to enter into the composition of the books of the Bible—books written by so many hands, and at such various periods. Whatever other object the Divine Author of the Bible may have had in view in making such frequent use of the number, it seems to be generally believed, for one thing at least, that it was intended to convey the idea of completeness or perfection. Its first employment on the occasion of the completed work of creation is strongly in favour of this presumption.'"

PRESS TESTIMONIALS.

"We give it a hearty welcome. Anything that will stimulate the instructors of our young people to greater freshness and force in their teaching, as this volume is well fitted to do, is to be hailed with great satisfaction."—Nonconformist.

"We have no hesitation in advising all who are engaged in the good work of teaching children and young people in Gospel principles, and the way of Salvation, to possess themselves of a copy of this work. It will be found to be a very valuable and suggestive book; and helpful to the teacher of the infant—as well as the teacher of the Bible-class."
Baptist Messenger.

"Teachers and preachers who cannot derive assistance of a suggestive and valuable character from this little work, must be exceptionally dull and incompetent."—Christian World.

"We do not hesitate to affirm that the very best Sunday-school worker in this country may learn much from this book. It deals with the nature, essentials, elements, and methods, of the teaching process; and also with the Sunday-school teacher's other work than teaching—the shaping and guidance of his scholars. . . . Many of the hints given, and methods suggested, will be of great value."
Methodist Times.

"There is a freshness and variety on every page most enlivening and instructive. . . . We cordially recommend all who have to train children to give the book a candid perusal; and we promise that they will be the better for it."
Methodist New Connexion Magazine.

"The manner of teaching is delightfully simple; and the book is a valuable one."—Footsteps of Truth.

NOTICE TO THE READERS OF "THE CHRISTIAN," WHO MAY BE PERSONALLY OR RELATIVELY

INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED in this journal BEFORE, EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.
EXTRACT from a LETTER of
Mr. T. FOSTER, of SKELTON, Yorks.

(This is an old patient, who, writing me on behalf of a young man in consumption, refers to his own case, of which I had lost sight—though one of some interest—since the correspondence ceased.)

At the time he visited Coombe Lodge he had been subject to frequent colds for ten years, and, after bronchitis, had several times been expectorating blood, with phlegm. Had lost flesh. The report of his condition was:—"Chronic catarrh; lungs in a very weak state; top of left lung doubtful."

In the next letter he states that the pain had entirely left him, and there were other favourable signs, and that he should endeavour to persevere with the treatment.

In a letter received by me early in January, he says: "I was greatly benefited by your medicine; in fact, I have been a new man ever since I was under your treatment."

NOTE.—Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days. Everyone is expected to have seen the book first.

III.—THE REMEDY FOR FAILURE.
1) Confession of Failure. (2) Return to Separation.

IV.—CONSEQUENCES OF TRUE SEPARATION.
(1) The Power of a Separate Life. (2) The Reward of a Separate Life.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 23.

The Believer's Separation unto God.

THIS Conference was held last week amid all the signs of unabated interest. The three days were bright and warm, making it all the more pleasant after a spell of weather very cold for the end of June. The proceedings of the first morning, under the presidency of Mr. S. A. Blackwood, were commenced, as usual, by a brief interval for silent prayer. The assembly then sang Mr. Pennefather's hymn with which it is customary to begin the praise of the Conference:—

Jesus! stand among us
In thy risen power,
Let this time of worship
Be a hallowed hour.

The venerable Prebendary Wilson, of Islington, being absent through increasing infirmity and age, prayer was offered by Rev. D. B. Hankin, St. Jude's, Mildmay, and another hymn was sung.

Chairman's Address.

Having read Ezra ix., Mr. Blackwood said: The passage of Scripture which I have just read might be regarded as more strictly appropriate to the divisions of our subject which will occupy our consideration on the next two days, viz., failure in separation, confession to God, and restoration. If we were met simply to occupy ourselves with an academical discussion of the subject, or to confine ourselves with logical accuracy to the divisions of the subject as marked out in our programme, I might, no doubt, have opened the Conference by reading some portion of Scripture more strictly appropriate to that division which is set down for our consideration to-day; but it is not as mere students of Scripture that we are met together. It is not to lay down or examine schemes of doctrine. It is, indeed, to search the Scriptures; but it is to discover their application to our own condition. It is, indeed, to examine the doctrines; but in order that we may examine ourselves in the light of them. And, if I may judge by my own feelings, and by the expressions which I hear on all sides, I think one is compelled to arrive at the conclusion that we ought to approach this weighty and solemn subject selected for our meditation on these days with the feelings that animated Ezra, the prophet, in the words that I have now read. We are compelled to take the very lowest place of humiliation, of shame, and of confession, and say, as we find him saying in the next chapter, and in the thirteenth verse, "We are many that have transgressed in this thing." It is not, therefore, for a mere interesting study, or to listen to eloquent, powerful, or captivating addresses that we come together here at this time; it is for close, personal dealing with God. If we approach the subject in any other spirit than that, we shall not only go empty away, but, missing entirely its object and misconceiving its character, we shall separate, the worse rather than the better.

The line of thought which is suggested for us in the passages of Scripture given in the programme is, I believe, not only calculated to be helpful, because it is definite and orderly, but also because it is Scriptural, and according to Christian experience. But, however right and true the line may be, however definite and accurate the divisions of the subject, we shall pursue that line of thought in vain, unless at the very outset we are ready to acknowledge that, as regards separation unto God, we have—the majority of us at least—not only woefully failed, but also been lamentably ignorant. I speak of the Church of Christ as a whole, of the professing mass of Christians. I know that in this, as in every age, there have been a number of faithful students who have lived lives of whole-hearted consecration to God, and very fruitful lives they have been; yet, probably, those are the very ones who, for clearer light, would be most of all ready to acknowledge their failure and their shortcoming in this matter. But I believe that, if we look at the Church of Christ as a whole, we can take no other place than that which was taken by Ezra and the people. It is only as we take that place, and examine and judge ourselves in the light of God, and in the light of his truth, that we shall be individually and collectively profited by the Conference that we are now permitted to hold.

If one were asked to indicate any particular causes which have led to this failure, so far as I understand the matter, I should be inclined to specify three. In the first place, I should say that our failure in separation to God has arisen from lack of love to Christ. "Thou hast left thy first love" is, alas! too often true. If the heart had been right, if the affections had not been chilled, if the soul had been always ravished with the love of Christ, could there have been the departure there has been? Could there possibly have been the following after idols? Could there have been the turning aside to the world, to be satisfied with its vanities, its shadows, and its emptinesses? Most certainly No. It is from the heart that the issues of life come, and the heart, true to Christ, and filled with his love, would have been incapable of the base desertion which collectively and individually we are compelled to acknowledge has been the condition of the Church.

But this lack of love has led to lack of life. When it has been wrong in the centre, it has been wrong in the issues and in the extremities; and when the heart has got chilled and the affections have grown cold, it is no wonder that the pulses of spiritual life have throbbed but feebly in our souls, and that there has been a further departure—a departure outwardly as well as inwardly. The life has become feeble, and the souls of men have sought to remedy and replace that lack of life from God by the vain substitutions which the world could offer them. Naturally, then, we have come down from the society of the Living One, and fellowship with the Living One, to dwell among the tombs.

In the third place, I think we must acknowledge that failure in separation to God has been due to lack of light. It seems to me that we have fallen very low, that we have got down so deep amid the fogs and the mists of worldliness that we have been unable to discern the things which differ; that our estimate of holiness unto God has been so far from Scriptural that we have been unable to distinguish the dividing-line—always a narrow one, and always obscured, if possible, by the world, the flesh, and the devil—that narrow line which divides, and ought to divide, the people of God and the people of the world, that narrow dividing-line between the flesh and the spirit in our own souls which God would ever have us alive to. Therefore it is well that, as in these words I have just read, we should be reminded of the need of the lighting of our eyes. I cannot but feel—I may not express the thoughts of all here—but I think it is not too strong an expression to say that in the mass we are utterly in the dark. There seems to be but very little manifestation of the pristine glory and beauty of the Church of Christ as she should be, "fair as the sun, clear as the moon, terrible as an army with banners." Her feet have got into the miry ways of the world. Her hands have gone back to the making of the pots. Her heart has got chilled by contact with the world itself, and separation to God is a doctrine discussed, but not a fact realised and lived out. Is it so with us? Let us each one ask himself and herself, Is it so with me?

Now there have been at all times true desires after a closer walk with God and clearer separation from the world, and these desires find their expression, no doubt, in different ages, in various movements amongst the people of God. I presume it was something of that which led to the Pharisaism of the days of Christ; for the meaning of "Pharisee" is "a separate one." It was that desire for closer walking with God, apart from the world, that led the hermits of the earliest ages of the Church into the deserts, that led the men and women separating themselves into communities of monks and nuns. That has been at the beginning of many movements of later days, of more devoted life and more holiness to God. And we must not allow any errors which have been developed to deter us for one moment from following the truth. I know it has been suggested—it was to me—that the line of our subject at this Conference might possibly lead to a kind of embryo Pharisaism; that is to say, that there might be such a desire for a mere outward separation as to lead people to say, as we find them saying in older days, "Stand by thyself; I am holier than thou." No doubt there is that danger. Jude tells us of those who separate themselves in a sensual and unspiritual way; but we shall go utterly wrong if we confine our ideas of separation to God to a mere external separation. There must be that no doubt; but it is not to begin there, and it is not to end there. It is in the secret place of the heart that separation to God is wanted, and there it must begin, and thence it must spring by the power of the indwelling Spirit of God.

The Lord grant unto us that we may approach this subject in the spirit in which Ezra and his companions sought to purify themselves before God from the unholy alliances they had contracted with the people of the land; may He give us to sit in self-judgment as we are met together in these happy Conferences. I cannot but think that this will be a subject, and this will be a time, fraught with immense, incalculable blessing, ay, even of revival, to the Church of God at home and abroad, if we approach it in that spirit; if in real solemnity of soul we wait, not upon the brethren who will speak to us from this platform—God forbid it!—but upon God, who shall speak to us through their lips, and in a spirit of readiness to follow the Lamb whithersoever He leadeth. That is what we want—the ready heart, the abandonment of that which we know to be evil, the cutting off the right hand and the right foot which offend us, and a walk in the path where the Spirit of our God shall lead us. Then, with a revived Church, we shall be a blessed nation. God grant us this spirit and these blessings now, and that we may continuously wait upon Him in the secret of our own souls, saying, "Speak, Lord, for thy servant heareth."

Separated by the Will of God.

Rev. J. B. FIGGIS.

God made the world, but the devil made worldliness; and surely it is one of his masterpieces, especially when it becomes Christian worldliness, and allures us into the belief that we are living to Christ, or even loving Christ, when we are still full of the spirit of the world. The Christian world is, as one says, by its very name marked not as a soldier but as a deserter; it uses the name of Christ respectfully, or at least avoids it respectfully — it does not like to be too familiar. It will bow at it in the creeds; it would be on good terms with God and bow Him out of its presence with all courtesy, but it does not the less part with Him. It does not like to be at variance with God, it is so uncomfortable, for it has divers memories of things which Scripture says; but, instead of being converted to God, it would have God converted to it. This is the danger against which we want to arm ourselves to-day. This is the sin, separation from which is now to be sought.

At the outset, let us clear ourselves from mistake. I say emphatically that there is many another sin besides worldliness, and therefore many another duty besides separation. There are some who have no temptation to the theatre, who may have very crooked tempers. There are some who may never care to go to a ballroom, but yet may be covetous, or even guilty of fouler sins than these. Do not let us suppose that, if we are separating ourselves from outward forms of worldliness, we are thereby separated from all sin. Worldliness is much more than outward forms. It is such a subtle, pervading, and changeful thing, that you may find people who never touch a card or a cue who will, by their tone, by their dress, by their whole manner and bearing, show that they are of the world worldly. It will not do to shut out worldliness by the front door, if it comes in by the postern gate, or shut all the doors, if it climbs in by the window. We must have no worldliness, neither in form nor in spirit. We must have no sin, neither of the world, nor the flesh, nor the devil. We must be found cleansing ourselves from all defilement of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of the Lord.

But, while we say this, because we believe it important, that is no reason, if there be some manifest assault made on a great Citadel at some special point, why we should not strengthen our buttresses there, and seek specially to maintain the good fight of faith. Such a point is this, where worldliness cometh in as a flood, and where separation is demanded as a great and precious duty. "This is the will of God, even your sanctification." How are you going to get that without separation, which is an important part of sanctification? That one text (1 Thess. iv. 3) for me settles the whole matter; and, if one wants another, one may take the familiar words in Romans: "Be not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds, that ye may prove what is that good and acceptable and perfect will of God." Let us remember all through that the will of God is the will of love, and He never desires for us anything but that which is in love; never desires for us anything—, dare I say it?—for his own selfish ends; never desires for us anything but what is for our health, what is for our good, what is for our happiness. God has more tender regard for your joy than you can possibly have for your own joy, and a more constant eye to your happiness than you can have to it yourself. This is the great difference between Roman Catholic and Protestant views of separation: Roman Catholics regard separation of value for its own sake; we regard separation as of value only for the sake of the soul and its highest interests towards God. We never think that separation in anything is good because of the pain it brings, or because of the penance it involves. It is only a good thing if it brings blessing in its train. There may, perhaps, be pain in the working; there never can be penance; but there may be something of penalty to be paid in the working out of the gracious purposes of God. But his purposes are always gracious, and all gracious. The will of God is always the will of love.

God has revealed His will about this matter of separation very plainly and very fully. He has revealed it as your programme reminds you, by prediction: "The people shall dwell alone;" by prohibition: "Ye shall make no league with the inhabitants of the land;" by election: "The Lord hath chosen you to be a special people unto Himself;" by injunction: "Wherefore come ye out, and be ye separate, and touch no unclean thing, saith the Lord." But I know of nothing that makes it more clear what the will of God is than what the Lord Himself is, and what the Lord does, and what the Lord purposes. These three things you will find in Lev. xx. 26, one of the precious passages upon the paper, "Ye shall be holy unto Me; for I the Lord am holy, and have separated you from other people, that ye should be mine." There is declared unto us what the Lord is. Again and again we are told "The Lord your God is holy." Thrice over in the Pentateuch we are commanded, for that reason, "Be ye holy;" and the word is quoted by St. Peter, and he repeats it "Be ye holy, for I am holy." We are often asked to define holiness. Can holiness be defined? Might you not almost as well try to define God—a Being who never sinned and never wished to sin—whose whole life is spotless and pure and blessed and glorious? This Being is the fount of holiness to his people.

I remember going into the Deaconess House at Stockholm, and there, in the midst of the exquisite scenery that surrounds it, being led into the simple chapel, where a man of God holds up the simple truth of the Gospel of Christ. There stood in the chapel—what I trust may never stand in any building connected with any of our Deaconess Homes — a crucifix. While it pained me, I could not but be struck with the ivy—the green and beautiful ivy—which clasped the feet of the image, and which gathered and clustered itself round the bleeding form that represented our Emmanuel. How came the ivy to be so fresh and to look so fair—such a sweet and living contrast to the dead and all but repulsive image? That ivy was a living thing; it was a living plant, and drew its power from its roots that were beneath the image and below the wall of the chapel.

If our separation is to be sincere; if it is to be real, if it is to be practical, if it is not to be Pharisaic, but Divine, it must have a hidden life, a Divine life in it. Its spring and source must be God Himself. We can only be holy because He is holy; or separate, if He Himself hath separated us. And He has! Thrice in Leviticus xx., He tells us that He has separated us, severed us, from other people. Severed! It is the word you would use of a bough of a tree that you had cut off from the plant. It is the word you would use of a boat whose rope you had loosed from the shore. It is the word you would use of a province, or a people, like Bulgaria, or Alsace, that you had cut off from the nation to which it was bound. It seems to speak to us of sadness. Never mind, that will be corrected as we go on; but it speaks especially of division. There is a gulf fixed, or there can be no separation. In one way or another it is marked. It is not for me to say how it should be marked, but let me point out to you, plainly, how emphatically, how repeatedly, God has marked this severance as the sign of his people. God said to Abraham, in Genesis xii. 1, "Get thee out from thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house." God said to Isaac, in Genesis xxvi. 2, "Go not down into Egypt; dwell in the land which I shall tell thee of." God said to Jacob, in Genesis xxxi. 13, "I am the God of Bethel, where thou anointedst the pillar, and where thou vowedst a vow unto Me: get thee out from this land, and return unto the land of thy kindred." God said unto Pharaoh, Exodus ix. 1, "Let my people go, that they may serve Me." They could not serve Him till they had left Egypt. God said unto Israel by Joshua, xxiii. 12, 13, "If ye make marriages with these people, and go in unto them and they to you: know for a certainty that your God will no more drive out any of these nations before you; but they shall be snares and traps unto you, and scourges and thorns in your eyes, till ye perish from off this good land which the Lord your God hath given you."

We might follow this line of passage through the Old Testament, but it is more important to remind you, however, that the New Testament goes over every word and reiterates every injunction. James says, "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God?" John says, "Love not the world; if any man love the world the love of the Father is not in him."

Let us look at a passage in James iv. 4. He tells us there that worldliness is enmity, and that worldliness is adultery. You remember when you were boys and girls at school, if you had some chosen and cherished friend who was all in all to you, if this friend had an enemy who defamed him, who denied him, who despoiled him, who in every way did him injury, you remember the sort of feeling you entertained towards the enemy of your friend. That is the sort of feeling, says James, that will grow up in the heart of a man who turns from God unto the world. His love of God will first cool, and then curdle, and then will be in danger of turning to hate. Ah! but worse still, it is adultery. How can this be? Why, how can it be anything else? God and we are husband and wife; you know what you think of a man that comes between a husband and a devoted wife; you know the loathing that you have for one who slips in and seeks to intercept or to loosen that union. What shall we think of the man, what shall we think of the thing, what shall we think of the world, that would seek to creep betwixt our souls and the Lord; for he that is joined to the Lord is closer than he that is joined to his wife: "He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit." Now, the world tries to get in betwixt this unity of the spirit and the bond of peace, tries to make disturbance, to bring about division. Oh, remember, the next moment you are tempted to worldliness, that it is nothing less than enmity, that it is nothing short of adultery.

It is not for me, I take it, to try to set before you the forms of separation; be willing to see them and you will be shown; be willing to live, and you will have God's leading. "Is it wrong to wear this?" said a young Christian to a mother in Israel, pointing to a brooch. "No," was the wise answer, "it is not wrong; but if you feel it to be wrong, then it is wrong for you." "I cannot go there," said a young man to another. "Why not?" "Because I have a Friend with me." "Oh, bring your friend along with you." "I do not think He would like to go." I am quite sure He would not, for that place was a public-house, and that friend was the Lord Jesus. Can you take your friend with you into the ballroom, into the theatre, if that friend be the Lord Jesus? It is a good thing for us to act upon the rule that we will go nowhere that we cannot take Christ with us. But may we not take a rule which is higher and better—that we will go nowhere where Christ does not take us with Him. It is the reversal of everything in this Divine friendship for us to lead God, for us to go our way, and, forsooth, bring God along with us. It is for God to decide, for God to control, for God to open doors and no man can shut them, and shut doors and no man can open them. So henceforth let us be in the hands of God, absolutely, entirely, completely, and be separate from the world. He will lead and He will guide, and then there will be the right separation indeed.

Ere I close, let me point you to the purpose of God in this severance. It puts a new and a bright face on the whole subject. His purpose is that of the 20th of Leviticus: "Ye should be mine." Does it not make all the difference in the world, when we bring in this thought of blessed ownership. Is there on earth a sweeter word than this, that "My beloved is mine, and I am his"? Oh, wonder of wonders, worth all the wealth of worlds, for Jesus to say of me, "Thou art mine." "I have severed thee from all people, that thou shouldst be mine." The branch is not cut off to lie in the wilderness and wither; it is cut off to be grafted into the true vine. The boat is not taken from the shore to drift away and be lost; it is taken to be fastened to the ship, and go out and bring back a rich harvest of treasure. The province is not taken from an empire like Turkey going to pieces, that it may be ruined, but that it may be freed. If the Son make you free, you are free indeed. That is his purpose. Coming up to Mildmay, the word may sound in all our ears, "Ye should be mine;" going down from Mildmay, the word should echo in our hearts, "Ye should be mine;" and, when in the mazes of some giddy, worldly throng, the voice will still echo for the Christian, "Ye should be mine." When sitting down to the card-table, or taking your place in the opera stall, the word will not cease to sound, "Ye should be mine." When taking your stand on the racecourse (were it possible), the voice will still sound, "Ye should be mine." A young nobleman had taken his stand there, and trained and run a horse one year. Next year, instead of his presence, a letter was read on the course, by the Duke who presided over the scene. In this the young nobleman said that he could not fill his engagement, as he had come to the conclusion that the consequences of racing were disastrous to society and dishonouring to God. The letter was received with shouts of derision, but many who derided lived to become friends, respecting the convictions of the writer. "Go, and do thou likewise," worldly Christian, whoever thou art. Remember, that in all scenes and in all circumstances we belong to Christ.

By a thousand tender ties,
By the life that never dies,
By the bleeding sacrifice,
Ye belong to Christ.

I have given my life for thine,
Loved thee with a love Divine,
Does thy heart respond to mine,
I belong to Christ?

Oh, the solemn test apply,
Is there aught more dear than I?
Let not lip but life reply,
"I belong to Christ!"

Hast thou a divided heart?
Dost thou give me but a part?
Wrong Me not, for mine thou art.
Ye belong to Christ.

Separation by the Death of Christ.

Rev. H. E. BROOKE.

The speaker read Gal. i. 4; Titus ii. 14; 2 Cor. v. 15; Rev. i. 5, 6; 1 Cor. vi. 19, 20; and 1 Cor. iii. 23. It is sometimes remarked that the best part of a sermon is the text, and I am not sure that it is not generally true. At all events, I may say that I think one who has to preach or speak can hope for nothing higher or more blessed than to be able to keep to the level of his text. Therefore, I would seek, as far as possible, that the truth contained in these passages just read in your hearing may take possession of our hearts. Our subject is "The Believer's Separation unto God," and that as effected by the death of Christ. You may remember that when Israel was ready to depart from Egypt, when God had already, in purpose, separated them to himself, and had already by the judgments which fell upon Egypt showed what was coming, there was something that yet remained before they were actually delivered, and that was that the blood should be sprinkled upon the houses, and it was in that way that the real separation from Egypt was effected. You may remember that though Israel had been exempt from the previous judgments in Egypt—for example, their cattle were saved, when the cattle of the Egyptians fell beneath the hail and murrain; and when there was darkness throughout the land, the children of Israel had light in their dwellings—yet, when it came to the last and the final point of separation, God arranged that, as to the question of judgment, all should be equally exposed to the judgment of God, all should equally deserve that the angel of death should come into the house and take the first-born away. Then it was He provided a principle of separation between Israel and Egypt. Then it was that He told the people, through Moses, that they were to take the lamb, and first of all feed upon it, and to sprinkle the blood upon their houses. "When I see the blood I will pass over you." The Lord did not Himself sprinkle the blood; He left them to do it, and that by means of a bunch of hyssop. God has provided Christ as the Lamb, and He has also ordained that each soul is itself to apply the blood by faith; for faith is that represented by the bunch of hyssop. God has set forth Christ to be a propitiation for our sins, but it is through faith in his blood. This is the principle of real separation between the world and the Church. The one is under the blood; the other is not under the blood. Not that we do not invite them to accept the blessing, not that we do not beseech them to be reconciled to God, not that we do not set forth that "He hath made Him to be sin for us, who knew no sin, that we might be made the righteousness of God in Him," but they will not come to Him that they may have life. They remain outside. They are content to remain outside, and the real principle of separation between God's saved people and those who are not saved is that the one is under the blood, and the other is not.

Our brother, the Chairman, began by making some very practical remarks about our great shortcoming in this matter, both as to life and light, and I do not think that, viewing it as a matter of light, we sufficiently realise what the Word of God teaches as to the distinction between the Church and the world. There are two aspects of the death of Christ presented to us in the Word of God. One has reference to the world, and the other has reference to the Church. I may put them in two familiar texts—the one is: "God so loved the world, that He gave his only begotten Son (and that to die), that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Thank God, that affords us a ground to go into the whole world and preach the Gospel to every creature. But there is another text which I will take as illustrating the other aspect of the truth: "Christ loved the Church, and gave Himself for it, that he might sanctify it, having cleansed it (I take the Revised Version) by the washing of water with the Word, that He might present it to Himself a glorious Church, not having spot or wrinkle, or any such thing" (Eph. v.). Mark the difference between these two texts. The one is provisional, and it is also conditional. There is no condition to be found in the other. It is absolute in its statement of the love of Christ to his Church, and from the very nature of the case to every member of it. In one case we have "God so loved the world that He gave his Son," but then is added the condition "that whosoever believeth on Him"—a most important truth to set before the world as to their individual responsibility with regard to the death of Christ. But when you come to those who believe and are accepted in the Beloved, we have no longer to treat with them of conditional blessings to be obtained. They are in possession of the blessing. They are in Christ, just as Israel in the house was under the blood, and those outside the house were not under the blood. "In Him we have redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins." Let us keep these two aspects of truth separate in our minds, and yet do not let us set one against the other. There is the great bane of theology, that it will take two different aspects of the truth of God, and set up the one against the other; and controversy long and painful has raged amongst professing Christians about what are really but two aspects of God's truth.

Let me give you an illustration. We all know how that ingenious contrivance, the stereoscope, enables us to look at two pictures side by side, slightly differing from one another, so as by combining them to get that solidity, that life-like appearance which we see in nature. What would you say if some countryman, who had not seen one before, on detecting the slight differences between the two pictures, should say, "These are not the same: they cannot both be right; one must be true, the other false;" and forthwith tear up one and keep the other? We should smile at his folly, but we are all inclined to do the same. We take one aspect of the truth of God, and tie our colours to it, and then are ready to contend for that against other aspects of truth contained in the same Word of God.

We have this morning to contemplate, not the relation of Christ's death to the world, but to the Church. The few verses I have read bring out what the death of Christ has done for those who are themselves, as believers in Him, under the shelter of the blood. "He gave Himself for our sins that He might deliver us from this present evil world." It is not only deliverance from, but deliverance to. Our subject is not separation from—it is separation to. I cannot but think that we miss a great deal of the point of God's Word, in its teaching on this subject, if we stop at death, and forget resurrection. Every soul that is baptized into Christ Jesus is baptized into his death. But are we baptized into his death to stay there? No. "As Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life." That is our position. You cannot separate the death and the resurrection of Christ. If we are partakers of the death, we are partakers of the resurrection—that is, our separation to God. By passing through death and being now in resurrection, we are brought into a sphere in which God can look upon us with perfect acceptance. What a glorious truth that is in Rom. viii. 1: "There is therefore now no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death." When the law dealt with Christ it found nothing but spirit and life in Him. He said, "The words I speak unto you, they are spirit and they are life." That was all that Christ was. The law comes to us and finds sin and death; it did not find that in Him, and, therefore, the law, dealing with Christ, is one of spirit and life. That has set me free from the law of sin and death.

There is a parallel passage in Gal. ii.: "I through the law am dead to the law, that I might live unto God." "Through the law" dealing with Christ, "I am dead to the law," in its dealings with self. "For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh." That is, there is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, for God condemned sin in his flesh. Why? In order that the opposite of condemnation — the justification sentence of the law (as in the Greek) might have its fulfilment in us, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. Mark the difference between a justification sentence fulfilled, and a sentence pronounced. I long misunderstood that passage, not seeing the distinction. When a judge has pronounced a sentence, the sentence is not "fulfilled" until it is carried out. Hence all believers in Jesus are not only justified by sentence being pronounced, but they are justified in the sense that the life so awarded is put into them, so that the Christian life is itself the result of justification. Sanctification begins where justification ends. Not, as is often supposed, as if the two went on together, so that we are left not knowing where the one begins, and where the other ends. If I am a believer, called upon to walk in the path of life, that life has already come through the sentence of justification being not only pronounced but carried out, and that is the life of Rom. viii. You will find that all the exhortations against worldliness hinge upon that, that we are now in the sphere of life, and walking in the ways of life. We may well say, at the resurrection of the soul which takes place at conversion, in the language of the Lord Jesus as presented to us in the Psalms, "Thou wilt show me the path of life."

I close with this thought, and may God write it upon all our hearts, that not only has Christ given Himself for our sins that He might deliver us from this present evil world, but that "He died for us, the just instead of the unjust, to bring us to God," and that now our path of separation is not the path alluded to by previous speakers as the wrong one—not that of mere asceticism, or separation into the desert, the convent, or the nunnery, but that it is a separation to God. We walk before Him, we have to do with Him; we are set free in order that our souls may walk in the sunshine of his countenance, and the more we are brought to that by the power of the Spirit of God, the more shall we realise what our subject this morning is—that believers are, through the death of Christ, separated unto God.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Separation by the Holy Ghost.

REV. EVAN H. HOPKINS.

THE Lord Jesus Christ said, "I sanctify Myself," thus indicating that it was not an isolated act, something done once for all, but that it was the characteristic of his whole ministry. Of that sinless human nature He was ever making a holy offering — ever consecrating Himself to the Father. This had no reference to sin; Christ had no need of cleansing, no need of separation from defilement. Absolutely separate, eternally separate, from all sin, He never needed inward purification. Like the sunbeam which, though it passes through the most loathsome atmosphere, remains untainted, so the Lord Jesus never contracted any moral impurity in His passage through this world of sin. And yet it was true of Him, constantly true of Him, "I sanctify Myself"; that is, "I am setting Myself apart to do my Father's will, and to accomplish his purpose." There is separation unto God.

But, when we come to consider the subject in connection with ourselves, we at once encounter a great and serious obstacle to our consecration. There is a barrier that lies in our way which did not exist in the case of our blessed Lord. That barrier is sin—sin as to its guilt and its power. How shall I know the liberty of a whole and generous consecration to God till I am free from that obstacle? Therefore, before I can understand what consecration or devotion to God means, I must know what deliverance is—freedom from the power as well as from the guilt of sin. Deliverance is more than pardon. There are many who know what it is to be receiving day by day the forgiveness of sin, who are not walking in the path of daily deliverance from the dominion of sin. Therefore, before we consider the subject which is especially allotted to me to-night, let us briefly, in the first place, glance at that which seems to me to be the essential and preliminary condition of all true separation unto God. What is this condition? Deliverance from the power of sin. It is the privilege of all Christians; it is the present privilege of the youngest child of God. One thing is certain—either sin will reign over you, or you must reign over it. To live in a condition of deliverance from the power of sin is to be walking over the power of it, just as Peter walked over the waves; it is to be occupying a position of victory over it. Christ not only secured for us the gift of a whole and complete forgiveness, but He obtained for us the position of a present and continuous deliverance—a position which the believer is privileged to occupy, to abide in day by day, and where he realises the blessedness of the promise, "Sin shall not have dominion over you." That privilege was purchased by Christ's death. It is at the Cross that that freedom was secured to us. It is not simply that pardon is the proof of his death, but freedom from the power of sin is the proof of the Spirit's work in us. Both blessings are the purchase of his death, and both are revealed and brought home to the soul of the believer by the Holy Ghost; but we get both from the Cross.

Now, the practical question is this: How am I to enter into this experience, into this position of practical deliverance from the power of sin—how may I enjoy it day by day? Multitudes of people, it seems to me, are making many mistakes upon this point. How many there are, for instance, who are seeking to be made free from the power of sin by Christian work. They give themselves up zealously to some Christian effort. They fancy that by devoting their whole attention to some Christian work they will be enabled to free themselves from the tyranny and power of sin; and, for a time, it seems as if that were so. They persevere in that course, seeking deliverance by working; but at last they are bitterly disappointed. They have to confess that they are not free, and then they discover the grand mistake, that they have just been reversing God's order; they have been putting service before freedom. They come across a text of Scripture like this: "That we, being delivered from the hand of our enemies, might serve Him without fear, in holiness and righteousness before Him all the days of our life." Freedom first—freedom from the hand of our enemies, deliverance from the power of sin; then acceptable service.

Then others are endeavouring to gain this freedom from the power of sin by conflict. They battle, and they struggle, and they fight with sin, but at last they are brought into captivity; they do not find deliverance. Someone says, Is there no conflict in the Christian life; is there not a fight of faith? Most certainly. But there is all the difference between fighting from a victorious position, and fighting in order to gain it. In the first place we occupy ground that Christ has secured for us, and from which He has dislodged the foe. We take that victorious position by faith, and we fight when we are assaulted by the enemy, being "strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might." We fight in order that we may withstand, and having done all, to stand—not to gain the victorious position, but to hold our ground; and it is a fight of faith. On the other hand, we place ourselves at a disadvantage, if we fancy we begin under the power of the foe, and we struggle and fight, and ask, it may be, for supplies of God's strength, to enable us to conquer him. When will the Church open her eyes to see that it is her privilege, before she begins to fight, by faith to stand where Christ would have her take her place—in the position of victory?

But there is a more subtle mistake than this. There are many that hope to become free by growth. Deliverance from the power of sin, they fancy, is to be the result of spiritual progress. Now there must be growth, and there should be endless progress; but if I am to grow strong before I get the victory, then there is no expectation of victory for the one who has been recently converted. For a season he must expect to be defeated, because he is so weak, and has not had time to grow. But God expects all his children from the very first moment that they know Him, to lead the victorious, the overcoming life. How are we to get it, then? What is God's way? By faith. Just as you took the gift of pardon by faith, so now enter into the position of victory by faith. Let me give you an instance. Not long ago there was a poor woman who remained behind at an after-meeting at a certain mission that was being conducted in the West-end of London. She wanted to see the mission preacher. She was in great anxiety. What was her trouble? She was not seeking justification, she was a true child of God; but she was in great trouble, and her words were, "It is about sanctification I want to speak to you, sir." What was her trouble? She had been a Christian a good many years, a poor woman, but very intelligent; she lived in a certain street where she used to try and witness for Christ; she had a large family, but she had an ungovernable temper, and there were certain seasons when it seemed as if the power of the tempter laid hold of her and dragged her down; and then her remorse was great. She felt that her testimony was almost at an end, and her query was, "Is there any freedom from this?" The mission preacher took a book in his hand and said, "You see that book? Let that represent pardon. When Christ died upon the cross, He died to purchase your pardon. How did you get it? Did you work for it? Did you fight for it? Did you lead a godly life for it?" She said, "Well, I tried all these." "But how did you get it, my friend?" "I received it by faith," she replied. Then the mission preacher took another book and said, "Now, look at this book. Call this book deliverance from the power of sin—from that temper of yours. When Christ died upon the Cross, He died not only to purchase your pardon, but your deliverance from the power of sin. How are you to get it? Will you work for it? Will you fight for it? Will you seek to grow spiritually into it? How are you to get it?" The truth dawned upon her soul—she must take it by faith. "Stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made you free."

It seems to me that we must not only take up our right position in relation to sin, but we must recognise the privilege of separation in relation to God. Shall we now come afresh to the Cross, and by faith take this position of victory which is the privilege of whole-hearted separation unto God? When God would teach his people of old his idea of holiness; when He would convey to them what He meant by sanctity, by sanctification—how did He do it? He made use of outward and visible objects. Take, for instance, the case of Moses. He appears to Moses in the burning bush; that bush was the centre of holiness. "Draw not nigh hither; put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground." Why was it holy? Because of its special relation to God: that made it holy. And so, again, He would teach the same thought to Israel. There was the tabernacle; there was the visible glory filling the tabernacle, the centre of holiness. Things were holy, men were holy, as they took up a special position in relation to that centre. That is the primary meaning of Old Testament holiness, and it underlies the New Testament conception.

But we have something fuller, grander, deeper than this in the New Testament — separation unto God by the power of the Holy Ghost. What does it mean?

It means not simply that we have given ourselves to Him, but it means that God has accepted the gift, that He has come and taken full possession of us. Let us believe it. If, indeed, during these meetings this act of consecration to Him has been real, God has come and taken possession of his temple, and now we are privileged to understand the mystery of those words, "Ye in Me and I in you." We sanctify ourselves by setting ourselves apart unto Him. How does God sanctify us? By appropriating us unto Himself. There is no other way.

Do we understand, then, the meaning of being separated unto God by the power of the Holy Ghost? It means that we have been brought within the sphere of the Divine undertaking. A friend of mine asked an aged and deeply-taught servant of God, "In what relation do you think the Christian stands to the law?" He said, "If you will allow me to alter the question, I will endeavour to answer it. In what relation does the Christian stand to the law in principle? The Christian living under the law in principle sets to work to bring a response to the law. He endeavours himself to keep the 'Thou shalt' and 'Thou shalt not' of the law. With what result? He fails continually. He returns, repents, finds mercy and forgiveness, and then goes all over it again." And my friend said, "That was just my condition. I had come to the Cross, I had trusted Christ as my righteousness, but I was practically, continually living under the old covenant. So far as sanctification was concerned, I was continually living under the law in principle, and it was then for the first time that I saw the contrast between the 'I will' of grace and the 'Thou shalt' of the law."

These two principles—law and grace—are radically and essentially opposite. The law in principle is self struggling to respond to a definite requirement. The experience of one under the law in principle may be thus expressed: I know I ought; I feel I must; I do try to do my best, but how to perform I find not. Grace in principle is not self struggling, but God working—God undertaking to do that which self could not accomplish. "I will put my laws into their hearts, and in their minds will I write them"—God's undertaking. The centre of activity is now changed; the source of all power is now altered. God has come and taken the place that self occupied. This is separation unto God in the power of the Holy Ghost. It means that we have been brought to know the blessed privilege of Divine appropriation; we have ceased to be our own proprietors; we have lost all right of possession over ourselves; God has come into the house of our being, and, in regard to everything that it contains, He has written, "This is mine." It is in this sense that I understand that wonderful passage in 1 Thess. v. 23: "The very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. Faithful is He that calleth you, who also will do it."

Let me say, in passing, that that word "sanctify" is never used as a synonym of "purify." "I sanctify Myself," said the Lord Jesus. He would not say, "I purify Myself." That would imply moral defilement. But here it is "sanctify you wholly;" that is to say, take full possession of you, appropriate you unto Himself, spirit, soul, and body. God always begins with the centre of a man. Man's religion is from the circumference to the centre; he would say "body, soul, and spirit;" but God first of all lays hold of the centre of a man—his spirit. If you are a believer, that spirit has been touched by the living Spirit of God, and you are united to Him. But the last thing that we give to Him is our body. "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies." It is like the outer wall of a city. No wonder that the enemy so often gets through the gate. The wall is in your charge rather than in the Lord's keeping. You may talk about watchfulness, but "except the Lord keeps the city, the watchman waketh but in vain." If only the walls of the city—the body—are really consecrated to Him and are in his keeping, He will keep the city itself. Then what follows? It is just this: to sanctify us wholly—to take possession of us; and when He takes possession of us wholly, He will keep us safely; in other words, He will preserve us blameless. And how does He preserve? By filling the heart, by satisfying the being; and when our hearts are satisfied with God, the world will cease to be attractive; the world's power will then be broken; the power of the world to separate us from God will be at an end, because, being filled by the Spirit of God, our hearts being satisfied with God, we shall not not care for the world.

What a change this makes in one's experience! The life will cease to be a life of anxiety; we shall know what rest means then. The life will cease to be a life of strain, because it won't be self-activity, but it will be the working of the Omnipotent God, working in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure. It will cease to be a life of continual defeat; it will be a life of constant victory. Before I sit down I want to leave this thought with you, that all power that we can possibly need for conflict, for service, for suffering—all power is stored up in Christ. He has the fulness of the Holy Ghost; all power is potentially stored up in Him for us. How am I to get it day by day? By the contact of faith. We were all astonished last year in reading the account of that wonderful explosion that took place in America. There was a certain rock that obstructed the navigation of Long Island Sound, New York, and a certain engineer undertook the removal of it. It was nine acres in extent. He undertook to remove it bodily, so that the depth of water at low tide should be twenty-three feet anywhere in the channel. He went scientifically to work; he knew how much rock had to be removed; he knew how much power would be needed. Two shafts were sunk, levels were driven, galleries were constructed, and then into this enormous mine 14,000 cartridges of dynamite were lodged—in weight about fourteen tons. Wires were laid, the battery was in its place, the day came, and who was it that was the means of lifting up, so to speak, that island and removing it? A little girl about nine years old. She had to put forth her finger and touch a button, and the thing was done. But the power was in the dynamite. All power is in Christ; not in you. You have in Him infinite resources; not one isolated touch. But it is a walk of faith—continually living by faith on the Son of God. We have in Him all the power with which to meet sin. Christ is stronger than sin and Satan. Blessed be his name, greater is He that is in us and for us, than all that are against us!

Separation by Personal Decision.

Mr. FINLAY GIBSON.

It might almost seem to some that that aspect of the subject with which I have to deal is coming down from the higher to the lower, but I think not. We have been invited to-day to inspect the City bulwarks that lieth four square—high up in the heart of God. We were taken this morning to behold the source of separation. From Calvary's mountain we have seen flowing the channel of separation. In the work of the Holy Ghost we have been asked to consider the power of separation, and now I am asked for a little while to deal with the practice of separation. Will any Christian say to-night that it is not an important topic? Will any Christian say to-night that I shall necessarily drag the meeting down, by coming from the consideration of separation by the power of the Holy Ghost to the believer's separation to God by personal decision?

You remember that the disciples were arguing by the way, in the hour of the Saviour's sorrow, as to which of them should be the greatest in the kingdom of heaven. Supposing I were to ask to-night, To what believer all down the ages shall I point you, first of all, as most separated by personal decision to God? Shall I go to Nehemiah? If I were to confine my remarks to mere man, I certainly would. We have been taken to-day to the Book of Ezra, but go at your leisure to the Book of Nehemiah. Read the sixth chapter, and see how, four times, Nehemiah, when attacked, gains the victory, and how he utters the magnificent words that I have often thought it might have pleased the Lord Jesus Christ to use, for He did often use Old Testament words, "I am doing a great work: I cannot come down: why should the work cease, while I leave it and come down to you?" Go on to chapter xiii. where Nehemiah has all the powers against him, and where he has to deal with those in high places. He finds that a magnificent room has been given to Tobiah, but Nehemiah threw out all the furniture. In the same chapter we find Nehemiah saying, "I chased him from me." That is separation to God by personal decision. Or I might cite Caleb: he followed the leading of the Holy Ghost fully and faithfully I believe. "My servant Caleb, because he had another spirit in him and hath followed Me fully, him will I bring into the land" (Numbers xiv. 24). I might take you to Abraham, who, when brought into the land of separation, took up the practice of separation, and said, "I have lifted up my hand to the Most High God, that I will not take from a thread even to a shoelatchet, and that I will not take anything that is thine, lest thou shouldest say, I have made Abram rich." I might take you to other saints and to other passages.

I trust what I am about to say will offend no one present. I yield to none in reverential awe for the Christ of God when I say that the Believer who heads the list is the Lord Jesus Christ Himself. "It pleased the Father that in Him should all fulness dwell," and "that He might in all things have the pre-eminence." I shall not drag the meeting down, if I take it to the Lord Jesus Christ. You will find a little verse embodied in the heart of the Psalmist, applied by the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews to the Lord Jesus Christ, "I will put my trust in Him." I know there are plenty of better Greek scholars here than I am, but I ask them to notice the original. I think it will bear this interpretation—I have been trusting, I am trusting, and I will be trusting. I am right in calling the Lord Jesus a Believer. He passed a life of separation to God here as a Believer by personal decision. "Lo, I come," said He in the 40th Psalm, "to do thy will, O God;" and when he was at the well talking to the woman of Samaria, He said, "My meat is to do the will of Him that sent Me and to finish his work." We see Him prophetically in Isaiah li.: "I have set my face like a flint, and I know that I shall not be ashamed;" and in Luke ix. we find written of Him historically, "He stedfastly set his face to go to Jerusalem"—separation to God by personal decision. It is not my holiness, or the holiness of the most consecrated brother on the platform, that is to be the standard; there is the one standard. We may lower it, and drag it into the mire; we may raise our own standard; but God has but one, high up in the eternal throne is God's measurement of holiness. "He that hath this hope in Him purifieth himself even as He is pure." What business have you and I to lower God's standard? None. I may have—I am sure I have—to deplore failure; but I must not, because I have failed, lower the perfect and complete standard which God Himself has been pleased to set up.

Around this hedge of separation that God has made by electing grace, by redeeming blood, by anointing oil, by personal decision—around this hedge lurks the roaring lion. One of the most marvellous testimonies to the hedging, separating, fencing, keeping power of God, proceeds from the lips of Satan himself. You remember it in the first chapter of Job: "Hast Thou not made a hedge about him and about all that he hath?" Yes, we have seen that God hath made this hedge of electing grace. Do not drop that glorious doctrine of electing grace. In these days we hear very little of the covenant and the sovereign grace of God. I am afraid these things are dropping out: let us hold them; they are in the Word. They are in the heart of God, in the teaching of Christ, in the precepts of the Apostles, in the needs and necessities of everyday life. If I did not know that I was to be kept by the abiding grace of God, I would give up everything in despair. Satan can look over that hedge, and walk round it, but I maintain from the Scriptures that the invitation to come inside comes from us. This is a text in God's Word, "Resist the devil and he will flee from you," and I have never failed before God without being conscious, either at the time, or afterwards, that that failure was entirely my own doing.

A few words about ourselves. How does this touch us? Is there not something in the sound of the word "separation" by itself that is desirable. Do we not feel the distinction between separation and isolation? Did not the Lord Jesus Christ say to his disciples, "Ye shall leave Me alone"—that would have been isolation—"but I am not alone, for the Father is with Me." Did He not say in John, "In the world ye shall have tribulation," and depend upon it, the separated Christian will get that. Separation ought to be extensive, and it will be expensive. It will never cost us what it cost the Master; but there is no separation to God that is not costly. I sat this morning by the side of a brother in the Lord, who has trod the path of separation, and he whispered, "The price of separation costs too much." Let me say to anyone whose heart may be failing him on that account, "Do you remember what a king was told by a prophet when he had hired men for the war, and trusted in them, and the very source of what he supposed to be his strength was his weakness?' "What shall I do for the hundred talents I have paid those men?" The prophet said, "The Lord is able to give thee much more." Separation is expensive, but it is worth far more than it costs; for the separated saint of God is the saint who enjoys most of the smile of God.

Do you think it is a mere coincidence that Numbers vi., which contains that most blessed account of the Nazarites, closes with the fullest form of blessing? There was separation to God—complete, extensive, expensive. The blessing at the end I know belongs not merely to the Nazarites, but to all. That is the point to-night. It is not for some Christians to be consecrated, but all Christians. Look at Numbers vi. 24, &c., "The Lord bless thee, and keep thee: the Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee: the Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace." Yes, the saint in the path of separation will never be in the path of isolation. Is that not a blessed word in 2 Cor. vi. 17, &c., "Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." This personal decision is first of all a single act, and should be so. I heard a man say the other day, "Surrender! I have nothing to surrender. I surrendered all when God converted my soul," or I ought to have done so. It is a single act; still it is not only a single act, but a succession of acts.

I suggest in closing: Let this personal decision be willing, not wistful. I desire never to put into Scripture what I cannot find there. I speak subject to correction here, but in 1 Kings xiii. we have a mysterious account of a prophet. The whole thing to me is a mystery. Why the old prophet did as he did towards the man of God I cannot say. This man was ordered not to go back the same way, and not to eat and drink. When the temptation comes from a man whom he had laid under an obligation, he says, "I will not go with thee." When the temptation comes the second time, he says, "I may not go with thee." I am willing to acknowledge that that may not mean anything, but I think I see a decline in personal decision. I think I see the man, not willing, but wistful, and desiring, naturally enough, to go and refresh himself. Let our decision be willing, not wistful. Let our decision be prompt, not procrastinating. Think of Rebecca; she had not much time to make up her mind. "Wilt thou go with this man?" "I will go." And God grant that you may say that to-night. It did not take Naboth long to decide, when Ahab said "I want that plot of land." "The Lord forbid it me, that I should give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee." Prompt, not procrastinating.

Let our decision be precise, not pharisaic. I am never tired of repeating an answer once given to a worldly Christian by a true Christian, to whom he said, "You are too precise." Said he, "I serve a precise God." Beware of Peter's words, and say not confidently, "I will never deny Thee," but "Grant I never may." Let our decision be initiative, not imitative. Oh, what a blessing it would be to us all to have personal decision of that kind! Did you ever notice the history of Barnabas? If there be one saint in the New Testament that my heart has been drawn out to, it is Barnabas, a son of consolation and exhortation. Having land, he sells it. He sees a work of revival going on, with which he has nothing to do, but he is delighted, and the Holy Ghost says of him that he was a good man and full of the Holy Ghost. Yet this good man in Galatians ii. is carried away by the dissimulation of others, because his personal decision was imitative, and not initiative. "Even Barnabas," says Paul—and he loved him—"was carried away by their dissimulation." God grant that we may be looking, not at one another, but at the perfect One; at Him who could say, "I do always those things that please Him;" and that, kept by the electing grace of God, kept by the blood of Christ, kept by the anointing oil of the Holy Ghost, kept by personal decision, we may bring forth much fruit.

Saved by the Father's wondrous grace,
And called to be for Him;
Oh! may we hail thy blessed face,
With faith that grows not dim.

The precious blood of thy dear Son
Has kept my soul apart,
And linked me to that blessed One
After Jehovah's heart.

The blood and oil are on my ear,
My hand, my foot, my soul;
Accept them, Lord, in terms full, clear,
No portion, but the whole.

THURSDAY MORNING, JUNE 24.

FAILURE IN SEPARATION.

The Character of Failure.

Rev. H. WEBB-PEPLOE.

It is a painful and in one sense an almost invidious task to turn from the glorious aspirations that were brought before those present yesterday (although not present, I know well the line of thought they would naturally take) to bring before God's people the awful guilt that God would trace in their lives, if they are not absolutely consistent with the high and holy calling which they have received in and through the Lord Jesus Christ. It is a painful task, but the surgeon shrinks not who knows that he is to save the life of the patient by even inflicting the deepest wound. That man may never draw back whom God calls forward, at the risk of hurting a brother man for a moment, if he can only bring that soul and that body into a condition of rest and power. Surely we are not gathered to-day to deceive ourselves; we are not gathered to trifle with God, and the things that concern our everlasting peace, and the power that we ought to exhibit upon earth. We are gathered to-day without any idea, I trust, of simply listening to the eloquence of man, or simply hearing expositions of particular texts of God's Word, but rather with the one idea that God may speak to our souls, and may tell us wherein we are personally guilty.

You will remember how, in Jer. v., the prophet is bidden by God to run through the streets of Jerusalem, to discover whether there is one man that will seek the truth, and if he can find one then God will pardon. All through that chapter we see as it were the terrible enforcement by God upon the prophet's mind that it is not possible for him to find one who shall stand in a right condition of perfection before God. Then the Lord again and again enforces that most tremendous of all questions, "Shall I not visit for these things, saith the Lord, and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?" And then comes the end. "The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so: and what will ye do in the end thereof?"

Then, thank God, comes another message; there is hope in their end. And when? When the people of the Lord, convinced of their sins, are prepared by the power of the Holy Ghost to turn from that inherent darkness, that loved darkness of which our Saviour speaks, because their deeds are evil, to walk in the light as He is in the light, and to have fellowship with God the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ. Then that they may know that the blood of Jesus Christ, God's dear Son, is always cleansing them from inherent sin and keeping them in a position of absolute acceptance.

It is to such a life that we are called. It is such a life that God meant, and when we speak about separation to God it ought to be clear what we really imply by the expression. You were not called upon yesterday exactly to have a definition, but I doubt not several were given. May I be pardoned if I for one moment give my own idea of what the Lord God would imply by separation unto Himself: That it is in the life of the man so fully recognised that God is all in all; that there is not in him a single iota of his being, whether it be in the spirit or in the body, which is not absolutely consecrated and given over unto God; that there is not one single iota of his time, his talents, or thoughts, that is not absolutely dedicated to the service of God; but that the man, in the whole reality of his being, his powers, his opportunities, and his prospects, is altogether God's. I reckon that that is separation unto God. I reckon that whatever else we may be allowed to say, that will sum up what God demands of all his creatures—what He created them for, and what He expects of his people now, up to the point of their present possibility. The perfection we wait for, in the coming glory. Perfection we aspire after here. Imperfection we recognise in the best of our attempts and performances, but with gratitude to God we accept the position of those who are set apart for the service of the Lord, if we be indeed wise, and with one long yearning cry of the whole being towards God, we say, "My God! make Thou me what Thou wouldest have me to be."

Now, if this be separation unto God, then we must, I think, without hesitation, or scruple, however painful it may be, looking back upon the life that has hitherto been lived, and looking upon our brethren, and how much more upon our own individuality, recognise the very tremendous fact that is to be brought before us this morning, that there has been failure, and that there is failure, in the performance of God's demands; that the best and holiest that have ever lived, have failed. Have we not observed how always it has been the best and holiest that have ever lived, like Job, who have been most ready to bow their head and acknowledge, "I have heard of Thee by the hearing of the ear: but now mine eye seeth Thee. Wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes." It will come to this some day, and it had better be now. It had better be a time of heart dealing with God now, rather than have it postponed to the day when, looking round about upon the family and having to bid them farewell—if God give us what is called a "death-bed scene"—we have to make our humble confessions to wife and children that we have altogether failed to realise what God would have given us grace to know, because we were not sufficiently earnest and real in having our will yielded over to the Lord. It is a matter of the will this morning. It is with the will our God would deal, and in order for that will to be incited to yield to the will of God is wholly and absolutely at our command. We must recognise fully what are the causes of failure in God's people, to realise the high position and dignity which God has called them to in Christ Jesus, that is, of absolute and complete separation unto Him. Then we may measure somewhat of the character of the failure, and our brethren will deal hereafter with its guilt.

Shall we, then, in thinking of the causes of failure exhibited in the lives of God's people, deal first of all with the people of Israel. The Book of the Prophet Hosea is one in which the failure of God's people is the most strikingly brought before us. God having separated them unto Himself specially shows how entirely they had failed to give to God the glory of their high privilege and place. He declares a possibility of return for them, and announces that, if they will be set apart for Him, He will recognise that He is set apart to be their Lord and husband. The key-words of the prophecy are turn and re-turn.

When they have turned and returned, God will give to them the fulness of blessing He intended them at the outset to enjoy. But the pain and distress that God feels when his people have removed themselves from Him, for the sake of enjoying the world, are strikingly brought out through the whole Book of Hosea. When we come to the ninth chapter (to which I wish specially to call attention) we have a remarkable passage. If we take the tenth verse of this chapter, we find most strikingly brought out what we may call the separation of a person, or a nation, unto God, for his own particular purposes, and in that separation we find the great idea of God concerning those whom He calls out from among their fellow-creatures to be his own peculiar inheritance and treasure. He says, "I found Israel like grapes in the wilderness; I saw your fathers as the firstripe in the fig-tree at her first time." What a magnificent vision of love is brought out in this passage. Think of the living God, the Great High God, who called his creatures into existence simply that they might glorify Him, to whom those creatures refused obedience, and turned away to the vanities of this world—think of the Great High God, picturing Himself as a weary traveller in an Eastern country under a burning sky longing for refreshment, yearning for comfort, looking out to see where He can find something that shall give Him relief from distress to his heart and mind. As He comes towards these grapes and figs, do we not see at once the symbolical connection with our Lord Jesus Christ when He came once again to the fig-tree by Jerusalem, yearning if so be that He might find one fig upon the tree, and then was bitterly disappointed because there was none for Him. He came as at the close of their history to re-perform what God had done at the outset, that he might, if possible, discover something to satisfy the deep, inner longings of his own loving soul. And He has come to us that He might be satisfied in us, take us to Himself with joy and delight, and look upon us as the most delightsome thing that earth could offer when He felt Himself hungering and thirsting for comfort.

What more would a man do? When he discovers grapes in the wilderness, will he not claim them as his own? They are his property. He has found them—he has put his hand upon them, and they are his, and no man has a right to demand of him if he finds them away in the rocky wilderness. And then he does not stop. Though the figure may be pushed apparently too far, unless we rightly understand its meaning—one that discovers the vine, or grapes, or figs, in the wilderness takes them to himself and partakes of them until they become not only satisfaction to his eye, a delight to his thoughts, but they are absolutely identified with his being, for he takes them into himself; and they are his, because he has made them one with him, and they are absolutely his. He can take them when he has drawn them in through his mouth right into his very heart, and they become to him the supply of his own personal life. Think of God doing that for you and me—God deigning to make man, and make him, as it were, the satisfaction and supply of his own inner delight and being. When God has done that, we become identified with Him, and He with us. That is separation to God. That is what God meant us to know.

But now see the awful depravity of his Israel. See what God's chosen, accepted, received people dared to do, after they had been made one with the living God. They went unto Baal-peor, and we all recognise what that one special form of idolatry is. This is no mere common form of idolatry. We all know that Baal stands before us in the Bible conjoined with many other different words, as if to express the different forms in which Baal was worshipped. There is a certain difficulty in the mind of the learned in discovering exactly what is intended by Baal, but there can be no question that it is intended to represent the great power of productiveness, of prosperity, and of personal power, and that in the form of Baal. This form of Baal worship is most remarkable. It was known amongst the Phœnicians, the Babylonians, and the Canaanites, and has passed from land to land, until even in our own common language it is found that we have a remnant of it. Billingsgate is simply Baal or Beel-ingsgate, and is said to take its origin from the fact that Baal was worshipped in this country. At a place in Perthshire you have certain performances on the first of May exactly answering to the idea of the original worship of the sun, or Baal. If that be so, and we look abroad, we shall find that everywhere this great form of worship has prevailed. But what is it meant to identify itself with? Not the mere falling down before a heathen god, but the representation to man's mind of productiveness and power and prosperity, without the Great High God producing. It is man bringing himself into the form of deity, and all that man can bring before us, whether as an exhibition of power, productiveness, or prosperity. If so, it must clearly mean this, that instead of being centred in the living God, as we should be, our hearts have gone out towards the worship of manhood—the pride, the beauty, the pleasures, the prosperity of manhood—man has taken the place of God. God's people had separated unto Baal-peor, instead of being given up to the full service of the Lord. He claimed them that they might be identified with Him and He with them, and they have actually dared to go to Baal-peor. Who shall say in this audience that we have not been guilty of the sin of going into the form of worship that is here employed by Baal-peor, and given ourselves over unto manhood-worship in place of the worship of God? What see we everywhere in what is known as the infidelity or scepticism of to-day, in the intellectual development of to-day, in the worldliness of to-day, in the exhibitions of to-day? What see we even in the Christian Church, when it goes for its religious performances; but this—the worship of the man, instead of the God, the putting forward of the human, instead of the Divine, the exaltation of that which is merely carnal, and of the manhood, instead of the uplifting of the Great High God? We must speak the truth, if we would indeed help our souls to the right knowledge of our position.

Then the immediate consequence of this is declared. They "separate themselves unto that shame." This is a most remarkable expression, for it is not simply a word here that implies the idea of counter separation. God says, "Separate yourselves unto Me." Ye shall be a people wholly separate unto the Lord. Now He says of his beloved Israel, some 800 years after their deliverance from Egypt, that they had "separated themselves unto that shame." The remarkable force of the expression is that the key-word is found in it. The reference is to the Nazarite of Numbers vi., and we have this, that they have separated, or Nazarited themselves unto a shame; whereas they were Nazarited unto Him, the living God. If you look at Numbers vi., and see it as it refers to the Nazarites, and take the Septuagint rendering and compare it with the Hebrew, there is a most remarkable thought in the Septuagint form. In verse 2 we read: "If any man have vowed a vow to purify purity unto the Lord, he shall be purified." See what the Nazarite is. When is a man exalted to the higher doctrine of purifying purity? It is not enough to be set apart once for God. The man who consecrates himself as God wishes his Church to do, is a man who has decided to purify purity, and then he shall be purified from all these things. He shall be taken apart from the wine, which of course implies the indulgence of the flesh. He shall be intent to keep his heart consecrated unto God; that everybody may know that there is no uncleanness in him that requires the polling of his head from filthiness, but that he may be accepted before the world as one altogether consecrated to the service of God; and that, even when the nearest and dearest of earth's affections would call upon him to give himself over to the feelings of nature, he may not do this, because he is pledged to purify purification unto God.

Yet God's people have gone and separated themselves, or Nazarited themselves, unto a thing of shame; this it is that we are guilty of, if we take the place of Israel to-day. "They have separated themselves unto that shame." See what it means. It means, first of all, that when we were called out by God to be his beloved disciples, or princes unto God, we never discerned sin. I think that is where part of the mischief comes. We have never been fully taught some of the deeply vital truths. Thank God, the Church is awakening. The reformation that God commences always begins from within, and not from without. Man would always commence from without. God always begins in the centre and works outward. So if this reformation of the Church of Christ should begin to-day we may look for blessing all over the earth. When the heart is well alive the body will live with vigour. When the Church, when each individual amongst God's people, is separated unto the Lord, wonderful will be the influence all over the earth. But now the Church has failed to recognise in the past, first, from what she was delivered by the Lord Jesus Christ. Our saved people in the present day are often too lightly saved. They have not seen sin. Oh, if we could teach the people of the world what sin is, they would not be converted so flippantly, and then fall back again within a week, as if they had never been touched. Conviction is one thing, and it wants to be deep: comfort is another thing, but it must come upon deep conviction. We need to plough deep. We want spiritual steam ploughs nowadays. Young people are called upon to speak for God before even they have known the elementary truths that concern their everlasting peace. Go deep in your ploughing, that you may reach the heart before you bring it to Christ's peace.

When converts have realised the deepness of sin and the depravity of the human heart, let them constantly be told to recognise the magnificence of the position to which we are uplifted by the Lord. It is a grand thing to sing about the Lord having brought us out of the horrible pit and the miry clay. It is a blessed thing to say, "He has set my feet upon a rock," but have we taught the young people in these days what the grand height of that rock is? Have we lifted them by force of love from the depths of depravity to the heights of God? Do we know it? We cannot show others unless we know ourselves. Do we know what it is to be lifted from the deepest abodes of condemnation up to the everlasting hills? If we have not known it we cannot show it. When we have realised this position then have we understood to what we were separated—to be God's own company and delight; to be a holy nation—a peculiar people—a blessed treasure unto God, that God might be exalted.

Well I remember a dying girl, whom Captain Moreton asked me to visit in the hospital adjoining, some twelve years ago, when I was first at this meeting. She was so glad that she had had her bed removed to a room of her own, so as not to sleep in the same room with the nurse. I asked her why, and she said, "Because now I have Him all to myself all the time, and He is so real to me; is He not to you?" I have never forgotten those words, "I have Him all to myself." God wants to have you all to Himself. He separated you that you might be wholly his; that you might realise the grandeur of the position, the grandeur of the privilege, the grandeur of the service.

Then, alas! because we were not deeply rooted in these spiritual truths, there came up that attraction of Baal-peor before us, we became Nazarited away from God to that shameful thing, and what is the consequence? "Their abominations were according as they loved," or as it is more exactly rendered by the original, "They became abominable like the things they loved." They became an abomination like the things they set their hearts on. That has been the character of our failure. We have too often stunk in the nostrils of the poor sinful world, when we Christians called ourselves Christians. They have scoffed at our religion—have they not? Is it not with everyone of us a common experience to hear the worldlings say of somebody of whom we are speaking, "If that is your Christianity—I want no Christianity"? We think it always means some other than ourselves, but if we stand behind the doorposts and listen, like the prophet in the Book of Ezekiel, we often hear the world saying of us just what we think they have only said of our neighbour, and which we never thought could be true of ourselves. They do not believe in our religion, because they do not see men separated unto God. The character of the failure is the consequence of its cause. Its cause being that we have never realised what we were meant for—what the glorious dignity of being separated to God is. The character of the failure has been this—we have got lower than God, because we have never gone up to God; and down in the world, because we were never delivered from the world. When a man has seen the satisfying Christ, when a man has seen the all-absorbing Saviour, when a man has fully looked in the face of the Lord, then the world is compelled to acknowledge that God's people are his own. But now our failure lies in this, that we have not seen his beauty; we have not recognised Him as claiming us altogether; and, because we have dallied with the world, God casts us away. Can you imagine any man on earth being contented with the divided affections of one whom he has taken apart to be his bride? And can we imagine the Great High God, who has done all this for us that we might be his for ever, being satisfied with a divided heart? May God give us this morning a sight of our sin and a sight of our Saviour—a sight that shall satisfy the inner longings of our being; and from this hour, when we have heard of the guilt, may we be prepared to bow our head and say, My God, my God, I have sinned in the past, but

My God, I am thine—what a comfort Divine,
What a blessing to know that the Saviour is mine.

The Guilt of Failure.

Rev. J. RIDDELL.

After the very solemn and blessed words which we listened to in this place yesterday and today, what more do we need to convince us of our failure to live lives separated unto God? We do not need more words. What we need is to meet the eye that met Peter's eye, and to be melted by the gaze of Christ's injured love as we spread our whole being out before Him at this moment. If the Lord who has so loved us, and called us with such a wonderful calling, is present, He is nearer to each one of us than He was in bodily presence to Peter in the high priest's hall. All the chambers of imagery may be hidden away from us, but they are all under his eye; and what we need is to ask Him to take our hand, to take us with the pierced hand, and lead down to the depths of our own being, that we may see there how we have individually failed in our separation. It will be a very humbling walk to walk with the Crucified, Risen One through those chambers of imagery; but it will be very blessed, for we all know by rich experience that the great fathomless ocean of God's love, power, grace and fulness is close at hand. What keeps it from filling our hearts and lives is not composed, for the most part, of the great boulders of known and permitted sin, but of numberless small inconsistencies—the numberless failures that only a glance of the purged conscience can recognise. We want to lay all these before the Lord, and say to Him, "Search me, O God;" for it is only under the glance of his injured love that we can learn to see what these failures mean, and learn to turn from them with grief and hatred, and flee to Him for fresh pardon, and for fresh deliverance, and for the power that will keep us from falling into those sins again. We had such a visitation in the General Assembly of our Church in Scotland many years ago. After the Moderator had preached the sermon, all hearts were bent down by an impulse for humiliation and confession before God, and for half an hour there was nothing heard but the sobbings of the ministers and others, broken in heart because of their guiltiness before God. That day began a mighty work of grace that swept over the land from end to end.

Turn to Judges ii., and glance at a meeting of the kind I have been speaking of (read verses 1—5). Mark the position into which the children of Israel had been brought before this visit to Bochim. They had been separated unto the Lord in Egypt. They had been delivered from those who held them captive. They had been borne as on eagles' wings; the Lord had led them into the land and broken the power of their enemies and divided the land amongst them. And what remained for them to do? Nothing, but in simple faith to follow up a victory that Joshua had gained for them, and enter into and possess the land which the Lord their God had given them. For the land was their own; the Lord had given it them. No doubt it was usurped by enemies, but these enemies had no title to it, and the Lord had bidden them drive them out. They had no might to drive out these enemies. The Lord did not expect their might; He wanted only their weakness, that He might perfect his strength in it. He had undertaken to guide them with his infinite wisdom, and fill them with his almighty power, and what they had to do was only to yield themselves unto God as a separated people, that they might be his goodly horse in the day of battle, and that He might accomplish all the work. This was the position in which they stood; and as we look at their position, do we not see a portraiture of the position in which we who are God's believing and separated children are standing to-day. We have been separated unto the Lord by his death; we have been delivered; we have been brought into union with Him, and with Him we have been blessed with all spiritual blessings in heavenly places. He has given us the Holy Ghost. He has come to lead us into the full enjoyment of all that He hath purchased.

What kind of history would be expected from a people thus placed? Look at Israel's history; read in the Book of Judges a history of humiliation, of defeat, of helplessness. Let us look at our own history, and think of the love with which He loves us, and of all that He has done. Has there been anything in our history that is analogous with the failure of Israel? How does the Lord deal with the people of Israel? He comes Himself from Gilgal to Bochim, that under his own searching eye He may lay before them the cause of all their misery, in the want of separation unto Him; that He may bring home to them the guilt of the position into which they have fallen, and point out the consequences of that position.

A word as to the guilt. First, He tells us that our want of maintaining a life of separation wounds Him by its ingratitude. "I have brought you out of Egypt unto the land that I swear unto your fathers, and I said I will never leave you." The Lord wants his people to look at their failures in the light of his redeeming love. It is only when we bring our lives and lay them in the light of Christ, that we see what our failure is to Him. We are not our own property; we have been bought with a price. We are Christ's purchased possession—purchased at what a price! It will take a whole eternity to stand and wonder at the price at which He acquired us. He did not grudge the price. Standing with the symbols of that price in his hand, and under the shadow of the Cross, He gave thanks that He was allowed to pay the price for us. Then we can look back to the hour when He came and laid his hand on us individually, and said to us, "I have called thee by my name, thou art mine." Can you remember how He opened up before your astonished soul the purpose for which He had bought and acquired you. What was that purpose? That we might be a habitation of God through the Spirit. He made us temples of the Holy Ghost. We were filled with the joy of complete surrender, and we said we would be ever, only and all for Him. What a time of rejoicing it was—a time when He rejoiced over us with singing, and our ransomed soul answered back in the new song.

Now the Lord comes to this Conference from the place where He rolled our reproach away, and where He led us to lay ourselves on the altar as those not our own; and what is He looking for? He is looking for the same perfect satisfaction in having Him and in being wholly his. Does He find it? He is looking for that gift of my whole being that was laid on the altar. He is looking to see whether what was devoted to Him has been stolen from the altar and put to the base use of self and the world. That temple that his love made that God might dwell in it and walk in it, He is looking to see whether it is still separated unto Him, or whether it is like his Father's house into which He came in the days of his flesh, and He looked round about upon all things and found no place for Himself, so He turned about and went away grieved.

Then He is searching our hearts. Blessed

Lord, what dost Thou discover? Let me discover the same. Then He lets us see that our failure not only grieves Him, because of our ingratitude, but dishonours Him, because of our disobedience. "Ye have not obeyed my voice." The Lord has made his will as plain to us as He did to Israel, and what is it? "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." He has not only shown us his will, but the reason for his will. The reason is to be found in his love—a Father's love, a Saviour's love, the love of the Spirit wanting to have its object altogether to Himself, that He may show what a great wealth his heart gives, and satisfy us and fill us with power, as befits God's sons and daughters. His love cannot gratify itself in doing all that for us unless we come out and yield ourselves to that love. He wants the luxury of filling us with all the fulness of God. If we refuse, He is looking into our hearts, and every failure in separation is a fresh thorn in our Lord's brow.

There is another reason why the Lord wants us to look at the guilt of our failure. He is filled with sorrow because of the loss entailed on his own people, and the stumbling-block that that loss puts between Him and the world. Look at the contrast between the lives of two Old Testament believers, and you may see what that loss may mean. They are brought into God's kingdom together. For a long time they keep close company one with another. They are in much the same outward circumstances. Both their lives are successful lives, as men reckon success in this world, and both are in heaven; but there is one difference: the one, amidst failure and imperfection, yet, in the main, retains his position as God's separated witness, and the other for a large part of his converted life falls away from that position.

Look at the difference in the result. Where is Abraham to-day? Shining as a star in the firmament of the Church of God on earth, and in the Church of God in glory. What about Lot? He is in heaven also, but he failed to walk as one separated unto the Lord. Is his wife in heaven along with him, or his daughters, his married daughters, or those who remained in their father's house?—his sons-in-law, his companions, the magistrates with whom he was wont to sit in the gates of Sodom—where are they? You see him fleeing out of Sodom alone; but he took Sodom with him, to blight and blacken his solitude. He is in heaven now, and do you think that he has forgotten that wife, or those daughters, or those sons-in-law, or friends? Do you think he has forgotten where they are, and that he was a comfort to them—keeping them in countenance as treading the broad road to perdition, because he declined to come out and be separated unto God, and have his whole being filled with the sunshine and gladness wherewith the Lord wants to fill and keep your life and mine from day to day. May the Lord keep our hearts open unto Himself, and fill us unto his own glory.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF-HIGHWAY.—This well-known place of refuge has closed its eighth year of service, during which time it has been as a beacon light on a dangerous shore, and many a morally shipwrecked seaman has found it truly a haven of safety and rest. The "Rest" is open all the year round, and five or six meetings, in four languages, are held every day, the audience being seamen of many nationalities. The "Rest" being close to the Jewish quarter of London, many of "the lost sheep of the House of Israel" hear the Gospel of Christ both in the open air and in the meetings. Visitors to London should not fail to spend an evening at the "Rest."

THURSDAY EVENING.

Remarks by the Chairman.

WE have to-day looked first of all at Israel in her apostasy in the various forms of worldliness depicted in Ezek. viii., and then our brethren who spoke to us forcibly exhibited the character and guilt of the apostasy from God, and our failure in separation unto Him—enough to humble everyone of us—and we cannot but believe that that has been the result of the gracious work of God's Spirit upon our hearts. But, whilst we ought indeed to be humble, God would not have us discouraged. Humiliation is the work of the Spirit; discouragement is the work of the devil. Whilst we take, and ought to take, the very lowest place before God, because of our failure, and of our guilt, God would encourage us by promises of restoration, and by leading us ever to remember the blood that maketh atonement for the soul; and not less the unalterable standing of the Church of the living God ever accepted in the Beloved.

Our brethren will deal to-night with the successive phases, so to speak, of the subject—the consequences of failure as regards the Church, the consequences of failure as regards the world. And there, again, we cannot but feel that the impressions of this morning's teaching must be deepened. God grant that it may be so! We do not want the wound healed slightly, but for God to make real and thorough work with every one of his people here; and so we shall be led to look again upon much that is saddening and humbling. For that purpose I am going to read Revelation iv., where the Apostle was given this vision just before he was shown that series of visions which must indeed have deeply impressed his spirit, as he was shown that prophetic history of the Church's apostasy from God, and the terrible events that were to precede the coming of the Lord. Therefore, I take it, God graciously gave him a preparatory vision of encouragement, taking him up into the heaven and showing him the Church, spotless, pure, accepted—the Church in heavenly places, in the Father's presence. Although terrible things might be happening through the centuries in the world, he might remember that there, in Christ, God's people ever stood, accepted, safe, and blessed. Mr. Blackwood then read Revelation iv.

Consequences to the Church.

REV. E. SCHRENK.

"HOLY, holy, holy, is the Lord our God." So they are singing before the throne, and if the Church here below is in her right attitude, she must join those before the throne in worshipping Him who is sitting on the throne, and in singing praises to Him from the heart. But who can praise the Lord? Who can join that choir before the throne? Only he who is separated unto the Lord; only he who is in union with the Lord by the Holy Spirit. If we read Psalm xxxiv., we hear David singing, "I will praise Thee continually." But could he praise the Lord continually? No, he could not. Why? Read Psalm liii., and there you hear a prayer, "O Lord, open my mouth." Why open his mouth? It had been shut by reason of sin; it had been shut by defilement, and David was unable to praise God. His harp was hanging on the wall. Oh, how much praise—I do not mean merely praise of the lips—how much praise, in spirit and in truth, is lost for our God, because of sin, because of defilement, because of failure in separation unto God! If the Lord were to go through our midst this evening, and were to examine us and ask us, "Have you always been praising Me?" what answer could you give to Him? He well knows it. He knows every heart, and He is searching every heart. But one thing we know, too—there is much cause for us all to meet the Lord this evening in contrition of spirit, with humiliation and repentance, and to confess before Him, "O Lord, we have not been a praising Church, as we should have been; sometimes our lips were shut because of our sin and our uncleanness." Oh that the Spirit of God might move this whole assembly this evening, and go from heart to heart, and remove everything which stands in the way of the Spirit of the Lord, and which prevents our praising Him—our Triune God on the throne, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. That is our calling for eternity—to be a praising Church, and we must learn it here below—a praising Church and a going Church: "Go ye into all the world."

If I have spoken of loss of praise, in consequence of failure in separation, then I must come to another loss—loss in the Church, and especially in a going Church. How can we meet, as we do during this Conference, without having it upon all our hearts to be a serving Church, serving the Master on the throne, who looks down upon us pointing us to his command, "Go ye into all the world." I am sure there are many here who will pray during these days that the outcome of all our meetings might be a going Church, moved by the Holy Spirit, made free by the blood of Christ and by the Spirit of Christ—sent by Him and used by Him. Look wherever you will—at home or abroad—and see how many places there are without labourers, without the Gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Can that remain longer? Thank God, He is in our midst. Thank God, He has commenced, during the last few years especially, to move people more and more, and we are sure He will move again—He will move this evening.

What has been the consequence of not going, of not moving, for the Lord, and not being separated to the Lord to serve Him? How much has been lost for the Church? There is a Church, thank God, that would follow the Lord. Here are men on this platform and down below, and sisters also, who would follow the Lord; but where are those who go along with them; where are those who assist them—assist not only by keeping up their hands in prayer at home, but who go themselves to do the Master's command? May the Lord make us free this evening. He has called us, and He will use us in his service. May we understand that, and may the Holy Ghost speak to many a heart and many a conscience this evening, and say, "Here am I, Lord; send me." Oh that the Church might awaken to her high calling, to be the treasury of Jesus Christ! How many people there are who are no stewards, no treasurers, for the Lord—they are proprietors. I pray that the Lord may this evening dethrone them, and bring them down to the blessed stewardship of Him who alone can save! Their silver and their gold belong to Him. I have known more than one whom the Lord blessed wonderfully in this respect; they, however, acted not as stewards, but as proprietors, and the Lord in consequence took all from them, simply because they were not faithful.
